VANDERBILT CUP RACE.

Twenty High-Powered Automobiles for Contest Next Month.

Twenty powerful motor cars, every one of them capable of covering the distance at better than a mile a minute speed, have been named as starters in the 300-mile race for the Vanderbilt Cup, which will be held on Oct. 8 over a thirty-two-mile course near Hempstead, L. I.

With the closing of entries there were seven American cars on the list, including the speedy 60 horse power Pope-Toledo, to be driven by A. C. Webb, and a Pope-Toledo 24 horse power stock car, to be driven by H. H. Lyttle; the White steamers entered by Webb Jay; a 36 horse power Royal, entered by C. A. Duer, to be driven by Joseph Tracy, and a Packard car that will probably have Charles Schmidt as the pilot. There is also an S. & M. Simplex, owned by Frank Croker.

The other cars nominated are as follows: French cars—six—three of the Panhards of 90 horse power, one to be driven by George D. Heath, an American, and winner of the Circuit Ardennes; a second to be driven by Mr. Tart, and a third by a driver not yet nominated. The fourth car, a Clev Clement of 80 horse power, is to be driven by A. Clement. Then there is W. Gould Brokaw's new 90 horse power Renault coming over, and a Die Dietrich car. German cars, five, all Mercèdes of 60 horse power—one entered by S. B. Stevens, to be driven by himself; a second entered by George Arents, Jr., to be driven by Carl Mensel; the third, entered by Clarence Gray Dinsmore, to be driven by G. Worden; also one by E. R. Thomas and another by J. Wormser. Italian cars, two, both Fiats of 90 horse power—one entered by A. G. Vanderbilt, to be driven by Paul Sartori, and the second entered by William Wallace.

The course is 32.40 miles in length, including a 1.40-mile control at Hempstead and a .40-mile control at Hicksville, and it will be covered ten times. The order of starting will be determined by lot at the Automobile Club on Oct. 1. It was originally intended that the drawing should be by individuals.

Chairman Pardington thought well of the suggestion that the drawing be by nations first, and after that the order of start of the members of each team to be determined by lot. This is the way the contestants are started in the Gordon Bennett race, though the order of starts of the teams is fixed by the order of their entry, the team holding the cup, however, starting first.

The intervals of start have not finally been settled, but will depend on the number of entries and an allotment of starts, which would get the last man away before the first man completed his first round. With twenty starters, two-minute intervals will probably be set. This would give, including the nine minutes taken in controls, forty-five minutes for getting all the cars off, and pretty well insure the first car off not reaching the last to get away before the latter's start.

The control time at Hicksville will be three minutes, and at Hempstead six minutes. The cars will be piloted through the controls by watchholders on bicycles or in vehicles, as may be determined later. The Chronograph Club of Boston will have charge of the timing arrangements.

The start will be at the pump near Westbury. This will give a splendid long stretch from Queens for the finish. A grand stand is to be erected accommodating 400.

No preliminary speeding will be permitted over the course, under penalty of disbarment from the race. All crossroads will be shut off by fences. There will be 125 special policemen on duty. The course will be oiled at dangerous curves and watered on the stretches.

Cycling Notes of Interest.

Carl Limberg, who came East from San Jose, Cal., in the Spring, and who has been doing some good work in the amateur ranks, has joined the professionals.

As a fitting climax to his victory in the last championship race of the season, Frank Kramer won the two-mile event, and a few minutes later established a new world's record for a quarter of a mile by winning the handicap event from scratch in 28 2-5 seconds. Kramer has done excellent work through the season, scoring sixty-nine points out of a possible seventy-five.

Motor cyclists are to have an international contest in France on Sept. 25 over a course of fifty-five kilometres covered five times, a distance of 165 miles. Clubs from different countries may be represented by two or three motor cycles, all parts of which must have been constructed in the country they represent.

According to a letter just received from Bobby Walthour, the American pace follower has won his thirty-third victory in Europe, and in a month or so will return to America for the New York six-day race. Walthour captured first honors in this event every time he has competed, winning on one occasion with Archie McEachren and another time with Bennie Munroe as his mate.

Among the most interesting bicycle contests of to-day and one in which all cyclists, young and old, may participate, is a coasting affair. Throughout the country there have been many such contests during the past few months, and they do a great deal to popularize bicycling. At Hartford recently on the Maple and Fairfield Avenue hill George E. Watson, with a Pope coaster brake bicycle, captured first prize. He coasted a mile and 250 feet. A coaster brake wheel was second, while a fixed gear machine was third.

A. G. Batcheider, President of the National Cycling Association, and his associates in the sport have decided to erect a monument to George Leander, the Chicago cyclist who was killed while racing on the Parc des Princes track in Paris. Leander's body was brought to this country and buried in Chicago, and with money subscribed by the European riders and their followers and by the American riders and those interested in the sport a suitable monument will be erected to the memory of one of the cleanest and most popular of those daring riders who follow this powerful motor tandems for a livelihood. With the fatal accident to Leander has come a positive refusal on the part of racing men to ride behind the monster motors that have been in use for some time, and which have proved so disastrous. The small four-horse power machines are being used, and they give universal satisfaction. To be sure, the miles are not so fast, but there is always a better contest, and the sport is decidedly safer.

THE DANGER OF "SKIDDING."

Suggestions Wanted to Provide Against This Automobile Evil.

"Skidding" is now so common in automobiles and fraught with such danger that a study is being made of the question with a view of lessening the danger by using appliances that will prevent automobiles from side slip.

For the uninitiated it may be said that "skidding" is a certain side slipping of automobiles that oftentimes takes the machine into a dangerous place. Sometimes in turning corners of an asphalted street, where the sprinkler has passed, a car will slide on the wet asphalt and strike the edge of the curb.

Although no anti-skidding trials have been held in this country, a number have been promoted abroad, and have furnished some interesting statistics! In the recent British trials three devices were tried that formed an integral part of the tire; three were disks in contact with the road carried on arms attached to the rear axle, three were steel blades kept in contact with the road by springs and attached to the wheels, three to each wheel. Then there were three detachable leathers fitted with steel studs such as have been seen in this country, and two other styles made with detachable chains or plates.

The trials began with an endurance test of 857 miles, to which all the devices were submitted, except those which coud be put in or out of action from the driver's seat; these latter were only run over a distance of 104 miles. The roads chosen were as far as possible, representative, but included a large proportion of tram lines. Observers were carried on all the cars throughout the whole of the endurance test, who reported every repair and renewal made during the runs.

At the conclusion of the endurance test the cars were submitted to a trial of the absorption of power of the various devices. The cars were run down a hill at a speed of about twenty miles an hour, first with the device fitted, and secondly with the device removed. The distance between the stopping points under the two conditions was then measured, and it was shown that there was an appreciable difference in the power absorbed by the different devices.

The devices were then submitted to the actual side-up slipping test. A space of fifty feet by ten feet of smooth asphalt under cover was coated with a thin layer of Thames mud and fluid soft soap, forming a greasy substance closely resembling a London asphalt street on a damp, foggy day. All the cars were required to cross the greasy patch at speed and to attempt to make a sharp turn while on the grease. None of the cars succeeded in turning in the least degree out of the straight, all making a front wheel side-slip in the direction of the length of the car, with the wheels locked hard over, clearly proving the necessity for having both front and back wheels fitted with a non-slipping device to insure perfect control under extreme conditions; one device was fixed on all four wheels, but this did not enable the car to turn under the severe conditions imposed. The cars were then run over the greasy patch, and the brakes applied suddenly; a considerable variation was apparent in the adhesion of the wheels fitted with the various devices. The cars were then made to start on the greasy path, and the result agreed with those of the brake test.

Inter-City Cricket Match Likely.

Negotiations have been entered into between the Metropolitan District Cricket League and the Associated Cricket Clubs of Philadelphia to arrange a game between representative teams of the two cities next week, either in Philadelphia or New York. New York is now well qualified to place an eleven in the field against the champions, and there is no doubt that the representatives of this city would make anything but a creditable showing. Although nothing has been done regarding the selection of a team, it is understood that the eleven will be selected from the following: C. P. Hurditch, C. H. Clarke, F. F. Kelly, C. H. E. Griffith, and A. G. Larrie of the Livingston Field Club; J. L. Foyer, A. Brown, and H. Foyer of the Brooklyn Cricket Club; B. Kortlang and A. Hoskings of the Columbia Oval Cricket Club; W. Bunce and F. G. Warburton of the Paterson Cricket Club; C. Smith and F. J. Prendergast of the Manhattan Cricket Club, and E. B. Reece and J. F. Stuart of the Kings County Cricket Club.

MT. VERNON "TRACY'S" SUICIDE

Henry Wilkenson Drinks Sulphur Infusion on Eve of Trial.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, Sept. 16.—Henry J. Wilkenson, or "Tracy," a deserter from the United States Marine Corps, and alleged highwayman, died in the White Plains Jail this morning from poison administered by his own hand.

For days he had been saving the heads of the sulphur matches allowed under the rules of the Sheriff, and when the eve of his trial for the shooting of Detective Reilly of Mount Vernon arrived, he dissolved them in a glass of water and swallowed the mixture. He was carried into court and fainted when his case was called.

It was Wilkenson's second attempt at suicide. When arrested, after a long chase, at Tuckahoe on July 29 and taken to Mount Vernon, he tried to starve himself to death. For four days not a morsel of food passed his lips, and the police of the town were at their wit's end when the Mount Vernon Camp of Spanish War Veterans, having heard that he had seen service during that struggle, interested themselves in his behalf, and secured a lawyer for him, through whom he waived a preliminary examination. After this he was sent to White Plains to await the action of the Grand Jury.

While in the Mount Vernon prison he obstinately refused to divulge his identity.

Wilkenson was but twenty-eight years old. Developments after his arrest proved him to be the adopted son of the wife of a Buffalo brewer, who tried in vain to check his career of crime. She finally gave up the task in despair.

BLIND TO MONOPOLY.

It is a pet notion of Mr. ROOSEVELT's that you cannot curb the monopoly which the tariff gives to the trusts without ruining their independent competitors, or would-be competitors, at home. We say that this is a pet notion of his, though we do not know how clearly he has thought it out or how sincerely he entertains it. He first discovered or acquired it a couple of years ago when his party leaders were having chills lest he should follow in the steps of Mr. MCKINLEY in the direction of tariff revision. It afforded him a neat means of "side-stepping" and putting himself in outer harmony with the leaders. Of course, if the trusts could not be curbed without revising the tariff, and the tariff could not be revised without hurting the smaller manufacturers, the tariff and the trusts were both safe, quod est desideratum.

The notion itself is a cheap fallacy. The monopoly which the trusts in certain lines have obtained is due in part to the large capital they are able to command, in part to the unfair advantages they have been able to secure from the transportation lines, to their trick of underselling and crushing their competitors in special districts, to their boycotting their competitors by contracts binding customers to themselves alone, and to like devices, the combined effect of which is for the time irresistible. These devices are purely domestic, and the tariff has nothing to do with them. But what the tariff does is to protect this monopoly from foreign competition and thus strengthen those who practice it in their fight against competition at home. Remove that protection and the trusts would be unable to force prices to the level they now maintain, and they would be much more nearly on equal terms with their competitors at home.

Prof. J. B. CLARK of Columbia has a most suggestive and very candid article in the current number of The Political Science Quarterly on the subject of "Monopoly and Tariff Reduction." He is not a free trader. He believes that a protective tariff may build up industries which a country ought to have, and though the cost is necessarily great the advantage may be greater. But if the tax on foreign competition be kept up after it ceases to be needed then it has no effect, "provided always that competition is free and active." But if competition is not free, then the tax in great part is the bulwark of monopoly. It enables the trusts to raise prices and secure profits with which they can defy rivals at home.

Mr. ROOSEVELT sees no alternative to complete repeal of the tax on foreign competition. But Prof. CLARK shows that "in the case of the great majority of our duties there is one part that protects the industry as such and another part that protects the monopoly within it. Throw off the whole duty and you expose the independent rivals of the trust, as well as the trust itself, to a foreign competition which they will hardly be able to bear; but if you throw off a part of the duty—the part which serves to create the monopoly—you do not destroy and probably do not hurt the independent producer. * * * An essential point is that one means which the trust adopts in order to crush [the independent producer] depends on the existence of great profits in most of its territory; and these would not exist if it were not for the unnecessary and abnormal part of the duty. * * * The trust, of course, wants its duty, and it wants the whole of it. It values the monopoly-making part according to the measure of the profits which that part brings into its coffers. The trust is powerful, as we do not need to be told, and it will find ways of thwarting tariff reduction as it does other anti-trust legislation."

One of the ways of thwarting the tariff reduction so threatening to the unjust profits of the trusts is the election of Mr. ROOSEVELT to the Presidency; to that end they are now devoting much energy and money.

WHY NOT HAVE PEACE?

As the public understands it, the Building Trades Employers' Association and the Building Trades Alliance are now kept apart by a difference of opinion as to the method of arbitration to be employed in settling their occasional disputes. Both parties to the contest are willing to agree that their disputes shall be settled by arbitration—the trouble is over the kind of arbitration.

Is it wise, is it businesslike, is it altogether sane to go to war and to continue a war over a question like that? We assume that all that either side asks is that the method of arbitration finally agreed upon shall be just. Why not, then, leave it to a body of just-minded men to determine what sort of an arbitration agreement shall be embodied in a treaty of peace that shall put an end to the present prolonged and unfortunate conflict?

Could not the representatives of the Alliance and of the Employers' Association come together and from a list containing the names of, say, GROVER CLEVELAND, LEVI P. MORTON, WARREN S. STONE, JOHN MITCHELL, and Archbishop IRELAND, select three arbitrators or two arbitrators authorized to choose a third, lay before the board thus constituted the matters at issue between them, agree that the lock-out shall be ended and work resumed, and, when the findings of the Board of Arbitrators are reported, accept and respect them in good faith?

TO INSURE POLICE EFFICIENCY.

Commissioner MCADOO is, we judge, slowly coming to a realization of the fact that District Attorney JEROME is right in saying that two years, or even four years, is too short a time to learn what is known to the uniformed force as the result of years of contact with the practical facts of police business. He seemed to see this very clearly when he began his official career, and his notification to Inspectors and Captains that he would leave the responsibility for the condition of their districts and precincts largely with them and hold them accountable for results was full of promise of immediate and effective reform. But it is part of the "system" to involve a Commissioner in a mass of details, and so distract his attention from the weightier matters of his official responsibility that he is continually chasing the illusion that he is on the verge of initiating reforms which no combinations in the uniformed force can "beat." This is a stern chase, in which the advantage of speed lies wholly with the chasee.

It is a matter of observation and experience that the condition of New York at the present time is not good, regarded from the point of view of the safety of life and property. It is also far from being as pure and free from mercenary vice as the law prescribes it shall be. Many precincts are dangerous; some, if not "wide open," interpose very transparent curtains between their vice and the public notice. "Gangs" terrorize populous neighborhoods and make some streets almost impassable. The excise laws are systematically violated and the measures for their enforcement are spasmodic and of such a nature as to suggest a doubt of their bona fides. Patrolmen are less in evidence than formerly, and less alert to enforce the law than they have been at times within the past ten years. Many homicides are left unexplained, many bold robberies are successfully consummated, and the streets are infested with people who have no right to use them for purposes of meretricious trade. That the "graft" is still worked with profit by the uniformed force is known to all men, though probably not to many in the way which would qualify them to serve the District Attorney as witnesses.

The only way in which Commissioner MCADOO can change these conditions is to return to his original position and give those who do not enforce the law as well as they may a chance to show cause why they should not answer charges for official nonfeasance. A "shake-up" accomplishes very little; disciplinary dismissals following one after another, on clear evidence of neglect of police duty, would accomplish a great deal. Some of these are already overdue. The question whether at some subsequent time the courts may reinstate the officials thus removed for cause need not influence the Commissioner in the least. They are not likely to do this if removals are made for the toleration of conditions which can exist only because Inspectors and Captains are blind to what every one else can see. Substantial reform in the police force will be reached in no other way than by making it extremely difficult for a man above the rank of Sergeant to hold his place who neglects his duty or fails to perform it. No "system" can resist that kind of reform.

NOT A BREACH OF NEUTRALITY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A leading paper of this city published last week a report that the Russian Government had placed a large order here for submarine boats. Will you kindly express your views if it is not the duty of the President to prohibit the sale of such boats to one or the other of the belligerents, and if it is not his duty to prevent such boats being delivered even indirectly to one or the other of the powers at war?

One of these vessels was openly sent to Russia a few months ago, which evidently was a breach of the neutrality proclamation. These submarine boats cannot be used for any peaceful object, such as transports may be, but are used to destroy the navy of a friendly power. For that reason the President must use his power to prevent the building of such boats which may reach in a direct or indirect way one of the belligerents. O. O. F.

New York, Sept. 15, 1904.

The sale of submarine boats to Russia is not a violation of neutrality. It is not the duty of the President to prohibit it; such a prohibition on his part would be a most unwarrantable interference with the right of our people to trade and do business.

The controlling principle applicable to the sale of munitions of war by neutrals to belligerents was perfectly stated by JEFFERSON in 1793, when he was Secretary of State:

> Our citizens have always been free to make, vend, and export arms. It is the constant occupation and livelihood of some of them. To suppress their callings, the only means, perhaps, of their subsistence, because a war exists in foreign and distant countries in which they have no concern, would scarcely be expected. It would be hard in principle and impossible in practice. The law of nations, therefore, respecting the rights of those at peace, does not require from them such an internal derangement in their occupations. It is satisfied with the external penalty pronounced in the President's proclamation, that of confiscation of such portion of these arms as shall fall into the hands of the belligerent powers on the way to the ports of their enemies.

Neither international law nor our law forbids belligerents to buy of our citizens, by way of merchandise, contraband and munitions of war. Secretary of State EVARTS in 1879 wrote: "A torpedo launch in five sections ready to be set up, though contraband of war, may be exported from the United States without breach of neutrality." The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Bermuda, said: "Neutrals in their own country may sell to belligerents whatever belligerents choose to buy. The principal exceptions to this rule are that neutrals must not sell to one belligerent what they refuse to sell to the other, and must not furnish soldiers or sailors to either; nor prepare, nor suffer to be prepared, in their territory armed ships or naval expeditions against the other." And again: "Neutrals may sell munitions of war to belligerents, subject to the right of seizure in transitu."

The modern practice of nations tolerates a minimum of belligerent interference with the trade and the rights of neutrals. If we granted the demand of one belligerent that we should not sell munitions of war to the other our trade would be seriously interfered with, as JEFFERSON pointed out.

SMOKELESS COAL.

Much has been written in the English press as to the necessity of conserving the coal used by the navy, known in trade circles as "smokeless." No coal is absolutely smokeless, but there are grades which in combustion give out but little smoke, and that of a very light color; not the usual black, dense cloud that is produced in the burning of ordinary bituminous coal. The chief naval requirements in connection with coal are its calorific efficiency, smokelessness, cleanness, free-burning, minimum of ash and clinkers. Smoke has a great deal to do with it, for it is found that a fleet giving off a lot of smoke can be detected at a much greater distance than if the smoke were small in quantity. GORDON WILLIAM MULLER, C. B., in testimony before the royal commission, stated that the requirements of the British Navy now come to 1,200,000 tons a year; the collieries which produce the coal used by the British Navy, coming up to the requirements named above, are in South Wales; the total output of these collieries is 13,000,000 tons a year. It can therefore readily be seen why there is the disposition to hold back on sales of this coal. There was a quantity shipped for use in the Far East early in the year, and it was this business which gave rise to the many articles which have appeared in the British press, one of which was referred to by THE TIMES a few days ago.

Great Britain's coal area is put at about 12,000 square miles, and much of the coal produced therein would be mined from considerable depths. There are in the State of West Virginia alone some 16,000 square miles of coal mines, and the bulk of the coal can be mined by drifts, above water level, as against shafting to depths in Great Britain. It is in this State, whose coal deposits have hardly been touched, that one finds a "smokeless" coal, said by the Navy League of England, in a petition to Parliament requesting the Government to forbid the sale of Welsh coal to rival nations, to be equal to the Welsh. When the foreigner gets short of a supply, we can furnish it in any quantity needed. There is now a tonnage equal to half of that of South Wales supplied to cities and towns in this country, and some of this coal is furnished to the United States Navy. It is the high percentage of fixed carbon which causes these Welsh and other coals to be classed as "smokeless," Welsh coal used by the British Navy giving 91.3 per cent., while an American coal gave 86 to 89 per cent., as compared with ordinary bituminous, showing up to 76 per cent.

A MYSTERY IN FINANCE.

The following financial advertisement yesterday attracted some attention and set the curious to speculating what it meant:

> Wanted—Capitalist, lady preferred, for extraordinary, daring enterprise; interview by appointment.

Is it a matter of experience that in ventures other than matrimonial women are more adventurous than men and more inclined to extraordinary and daring enterprise? That in this instance the desperate venture is not matrimonial is indicated by the fact that any kind of capitalist would serve, but a "lady" is preferred, and that it is not specified that the lady shall be matrimonially eligible. This possible explanation dismissed, it is interesting to speculate why a woman would be preferable to a man as a moneyed partner in an extraordinary and daring enterprise. That women often go into desperate ventures is well known, but it is always with the conviction that they are as safe as the Bank of England and cannot fail to yield avalanches of profit. To tell them in advance that their aid is sought for something extraordinary and daring would seem more likely to frighten than to attract them. Such a snare might in vain be spread in the sight of any female bird. As a problem in casuistry, which whoever will may answer in his or her own way: If you were planning an extraordinary and daring enterprise, would you prefer as your partner and capitalist a woman or a man? If a woman, why?

THE SUNDAY TIMES.

THE TIMES of to-morrow morning will contain a series of special articles likely, we think, to repay the attention of all readers. A unique bit of King EDWARD's realm—Fortune Island—with its solitary white resident, who is also Viceroy, is picturesquely described. The fighting experiences of JOHN ARBUCKLE with trusts will be recounted. The curious outburst of boiling water in the great Simplon tunnel will be pictured. Col. YOUNGHUSBAND's entry into Lhasa, the forbidden city on the Roof of the World, will be described. POULTNEY BIGELOW writes of the queer German duels, and the society of a half century ago will be shown in the reminiscences of Mrs. CLAY, a "Belle of the Fifties."

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Quite the queerest of all Ohio productions, animate or inanimate, that ever came to our attention is a bitter controversy which has arisen in Wellington, a town in that State hitherto entirely unknown to fame. The cause of war, curiously enough, is an epitaph. There has been, of course, in many another town grave doubt as to the accuracy of this or that epitaph carved on monuments erected within its limits, but if not always, at least much oftener than usually, the difference, suspected or believed, between biographic facts and the statements of the epitaph has been allowed to pass with no more than whispered comment, the general theory being, apparently, that this form of literature, if true, is all right, and if false no harm is done. That theory works well in practice, because it is the very nature of epitaphs to be laudatory, and it went all to pieces out in Wellington simply because there a youngish man of highly original mind has seen fit—"unfit" would be the better word, perhaps—to inscribe on a stone placed by him over his aunt's grave (1) the revelation that she was sixty-four years of age and (2) these somewhat rugged verses:

> I don't care what you say,
> She would have her own way.
> Now she's under the sod
> She must submit to GOD.

No hint as to what grievance, if any, the nephew had against the aunt is given by the accounts at hand. We only know that his poem has deeply offended a considerable portion of Wellington's population, and that, preparatory to organized effort to compel the removal of the obnoxious stone, many of the more eminent women of the place have drawn up, signed, and published an earnest protest—so earnest that the inclination to treat the episode humorously can hardly survive its perusal. "In justice," they say, "to the one who cannot speak for herself, we, who have known her for many years, wish to testify to her sterling good qualities and kindness of heart. She submitted herself to her GOD years before she was 'under the sod,' and led a consistent Christian life. The only Perfect One once said, 'Let him that is without sin cast the first stone.' The stone has been cast and the enduring words indicate to us no fault of the dead, but at least a thoughtless spirit on the part of the author of the epitaph." That is certainly a well-worded reproof, and it ought to have its effect upon the hasty nephew. Aunts and uncles, having all the critical frankness of parents without the parental authority to justify it, are perhaps more prone than other relatives to try the patience of their juniors, but their intentions are so rarely questionable that a post-mortem vengeance is in their case particularly ill-timed.

—No one could read without a thrill of indignant sympathy the letter we published yesterday in regard to what amounts, in many rural districts of the South, practically to the almost continuous imprisonment in their houses of all white women. The condition described—with essential truth, beyond any question—by Mr. CALLAWAY is certainly an unendurable one, not only on account of the direct menace to physical health involved in it, but even more because it implies the permanent oppression of a frightful anxiety and the constant fixing of the mind upon the most loathesome of images, which cannot fail in time to have a lamentable effect upon every member of these families. Mr. CALLAWAY did not say that this terrible state of affairs justified the lynching of the negro criminals he had in mind, but he evidently holds it to be an adequate explanation, and to his unexpressed inquiry as to whether the same condition would not lead to the same consequences in other parts of the country, of course only one answer can be made—the answer that in all probability it would. "Would" is not "should," however, and the Northern critic might find two fallacies in his expressed and implied argument: The proportion of such criminals in the negro race is not large enough to warrant all the condemnation of the race as a race which one sometimes hears in the South, a condemnation obviously contradicted by the confidence with which so many members of the race are treated by numberless white Southerners; and lynching, however easily explicable, has failed utterly as a method of prevention. Had one resort to it, or a hundred, inspired such terror in negro minds as thoroughly to stamp out the "peculiar crime," few indeed would have denied that the end sanctified the means, even though the means were the stake and fagot. But apparently the more that are lynched the more are they who invite lynching by their deeds, and so the vicious line turns back on itself. Every resort to mob violence is a confession, or an accusation, that civilization is a failure, and civilization is not yet ready to admit the truth of the charge.

—Difficult, indeed, is the position of the Government, and especially of an Administration as little desirous at just this time to make one powerful enemy as it is to make many weaker ones! It finds itself confronted with the hideous necessity of deciding at once whether it will continue to supply the "Tobacco Trust" with big red stamps with which to advertise imported cigars, or whether it will yield to the demand of the "independents" and force everybody to prove the payment of revenue taxes by the use of little stamps all so nearly alike that the retail purchaser will be unable to tell the difference unless he develops a new and laborious carefulness repugnant to his nature. The trust is more than content with things as they are—always a strong point, and one of which trusts long ago learned to utilize effectively—while the independents growl fiercely for a change that will enable them to do—what? They say to compete on equal, or more nearly equal, terms with their iniquitous competitor, but the man who burns cigars instead of manufacturing them, despite his instinctive hostility to monopolists, catches through the dust of this battle a glimpse of something that looks to him like a desire to render it harder for him to tell good cigars from bad. And that worries him. He knows in his miserable heart, though he will ever indignantly deny it, that as between the cigars just within and just without his means, his preference is in very great part determined by names, by stamps, by the branding of boxes—all irrelevant, of course, to what he calls his taste in tobacco, but extremely useful in preserving his happy delusion that he can do a lot more than distinguish between the finest product of the Vuelta de Abajo and those domestic productions that so suavely combine the flavors of rubber boots and oilcloth. And of his guides to the glories of the connoisseur the stamps have always stood easily first. Without their aid—and it must be a long-distance aid, not the fruit of minute and, therefore, humiliating, inspection—he will wander disconsolate and afraid. The Administration must give heed to this complication of its difficulty. The independents are many, but the smokers are more, and of all fanciful people they are the most fanciful.

—Japan, like many another reformer, has found reason to doubt the wisdom of treating reporters as of small account. At least she is beginning to suspect that such problematical embarrassments as her military commanders might have suffered from the revelations and criticisms of war correspondents allowed to choose their own conditions of work could have been borne more easily than the ill-will, conscious or subconscious, of war correspondents kept in a constant state of irritation by reduction to unproductive, but still extremely expensive, inactivity. We do not ourselves believe that many, if any, of the correspondents have revenged the restriction of their privileges by sending home dispatches about the Japanese that were knowingly untrue, but Japan can profitably study the problem she has so unnecessarily created for herself. It is most unlikely that confidence reposed by her in the foreign press representatives would have been betrayed. For all privileges granted they would have paid with a consideration of military and political exigencies carefully proportioned to the privileges, and they would have obeyed scrupulously any rules which they had promised to obey. As it is—well, the correspondents are human, and nobody enjoys distrust.

NAMED FOR GOVERNOR.

Times Readers' Selections to Head Democratic State Ticket.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Democratic leaders are looking for a man as a candidate for Governor who will command the votes of all the Democrats and some of the Republicans. They will find just such a man in Mr. Chauncey S. Truax, an able lawyer, a fine business man, and a Democrat who votes the Democratic ticket. The occasion demands a man for whom neither apology nor defense will have to be made, and who is able to make a vigorous and effective campaign.

Mr. Truax is a native of Oneida County, a graduate of Hamilton College, of which institution he is now a Trustee.

If the Democratic leaders want a man whose name will assure the success of the ticket, who would not be regarded as a candidate of any faction nor invite the enmity of any person or any section, they will find in Chauncey S. Truax just such a man.

INDEPENDENT DEMOCRAT.

New York, Sept. 15, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letters of Mr. Everett P. Wheeler and Mr. M. E. Moore, in THE TIMES of this morning, advocating the nomination of Edward M. Shepard for Governor, have encouraged me to add a few more words of similar import.

That the intelligent, independent voter will decide who will be elected Governor of New York this Fall probably most close observers of political affairs in this State will, concede. That being the case, the question naturally arises, Who would attract the most votes of the class of people who might be designated as political agnostics? Or, to state the matter a little differently, what are the characteristics and qualifications in a candidate which would secure the support of this "righteous remnant," who are intelligent enough to be judicious and whose impartiality makes them wise enough to be independent? Are they not "strong convictions, unusual tact, high character, and great executive ability," which Mr. Wheeler tells us Mr. Shepard has, and "devotion to the purest principles, high intellectual ability, ripe experience of the law, and integrity which is beyond question," which Mr. Moore says are characteristics of the man whose nomination they have advocated?

We are threatened, in some quarters, with a "whirlwind campaign." The question is soberly submitted whether gyrations of strenuosity will influence the independent voter as much, more, or less than the characteristics would which Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Moore so justly attribute to the candidate who they and the writer hope will be nominated? There has been an ample sufficiency of the vortex style of statesmanship in Washington, with a Republican Executive in the centre and the beneficiaries of unjust privileges in the periphery, without establishing that kind of government nearer home. M. N. FORNEY.

New York, Sept. 15, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read THE TIMES every day in the year and consider it the cleanest and best newspaper in America. As an independent voter I am interested in the present political situation in New York State.

What are the Democrats going to do? Are they going to nominate some old political hack for Governor to register the pleasure of the Murphys and McCarrens, or are they going to take advantage of a splendid opportunity and give us a man for whom we can vote without holding our noses?

We are sick of Odell, the man who appointed Nine-Million-Dollar Aldridge to office. We dread the possibility of starchless Civil Service Black succeeding "Chauncey." We would like to see Lou Payn and all that he represents as far removed from Albany as Ossining.

We want an independent, fearless, honest personality, whose very name would strike terror to the hearts of the boodlers. We want Jerome.

ONE WHO WILL VOTE FOR TEDDY.

TARIFF MUST BE MODIFIED.

If Democrats Do Not Push the Issue Republicans Will Steal It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As supplementary to your editorial remarks concerning the need of courage on the part of Democratic leaders in their advocacy of the tariff issues, may I add a reason which seems to be of considerable force? I am informed from a responsible source that Mr. Roosevelt and the Republican leaders are definitely aware that the tariff must be modified, and that they recognize the impossibility of carrying another election after this one upon the tariff issue; also that they have in mind, if the present Administration shall be elected, a definite and decided reduction of tariff rates in order to the equalization of tax burdens and the decrease of unrighteous privilege which certain classes of manufacturers are now reaping from the present tariff rates. That is to say, unless the Democratic leaders in this campaign push the issue which is properly theirs, and which belongs to them historically and by right of consistent claim, the Republicans will steal it as they stole the gold issue, and make it their own. If that be the case, Mr. Roosevelt becomes the object of his own charge against the Democratic leaders, namely, of insincerity—in intending to do what is not in their expressed programme, and thus subjects himself and his party to the charge of unworthiness and unreliability, falsus in uno, falsus in alteris. Thought His Gas Bill Too Big.

From The Boston Christian Register.

Mr. Peck had an enormous gas bill after he had had a gas stove one month. Protest to the gas company brought no explanation, so he went to the cook Bridget for an explanation and opened the subject with "How do you like the gas stove, Bridget?" "Sure, it's foine. I haven't had to light the stove but once since it came."

SOME VIEWS OF ROOSEVELT.

His Utterance on War Contrasted with That of Gen. Grant.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In Mr. Secretary Taft's Montpelier speech (which, I learn, is being sent out as campaign literature by the Republican Committee) there appear two noteworthy statements.

First—"In all my experience I have never met a man in authority who was so amenable to reason, so anxious to reach a just conclusion, and so willing to sacrifice a previously formed opinion as Theodore Roosevelt. He weighs every argument which is brought before him, and if by reason of the limpid character of his nature, which leads him to speak as he thinks, he gives instant expression to an opinion which subsequent facts show him to be erroneous, he changes, as only a man can change who is an earnest seeker for the truth, with the sincerest desire to do right."

That is to say, he is really anxious to hit the target; and although he usually goes off at half cock, he shoots true after his coaches have reloaded, primed and aimed him, and all that he has to do is to pull the trigger.

I imagine that thinking Americans prefer to trust a leader who, when his comrades have missed the mark with a single timely shot (vide the St. Louis telegram) scores a bull's eye, which wins the lead and presages victory. They don't take much stock in a man who needs a "committee de lunatico" to keep him from breaking loose and smashing things.

Second—"His impulsiveness of manner and his quickness of thought and speech coexist with a real conservatism of action that makes it as certain as it was under Mr. McKinley that no policy will be followed needlessly exposing the interests of the country to the peril of war."

Mr. Roosevelt himself has controverted this statement. Addressing the Naval War College when Assistant Secretary of the Navy—presumably after mature consideration—he said: "Better a thousand times err on the side of over-readiness to fight than to err on the side of tame submission to injury or cold-blooded indifference to the misery of the oppressed. * * * No triumph of peace is quite so great as the supreme triumph of war." And he has emphasized this bloodthirsty doctrine with a sneer: "Scant attention is paid to the coward or weakling who babbles for peace."

Gen. Grant, at the supreme moment of his career, "babbled for peace." Was he coward or weakling? ICONOCLAST.

New York, Sept. 13, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

No one can read from day to day the editorials in THE NEW YORK TIMES without feeling that for directness, insight, and a wonderfully keen analysis of the present political situation they are unsurpassed and almost without a precedent. The braggadocio, the egotism, the self-sufficiency, the brawling platitudes of an accidental Republican autocrat are disgusting the average American voter, and THE TIMES is materially aiding in showing up our eccentric Theodore in the revelations of himself which go to produce that disgust. His attitude to the trusts gave hope at one time that something would be done to break up their insolent and wicked encroachments upon the life and welfare of the people, but now we see that it was all bluster and bunicombe; that it was a blind behind which he could stalk the common electorate and capture his vote. This was all, is all.

President Roosevelt is to-day down on his knees to the trusts, his voice of opposition silenced, his sword sheathed, his frown gone, and his vaunted courage evaporated like an unreliable and manufactured sentiment, and yet he dares claim "a monopoly of righteousness," and most insultingly damns every man as a bad American citizen who dares to vote against him and his party in November. How can the common man, the plodding workingman of the shops and the field, hope for anything from a man who so truckles to the protected interests of the Nation, as to be completely muzzled by them in the first real contest that he is called on to face?

A vote for Roosevelt, many of us independent voters believe, is a vote for the trusts, a vote for monopoly, a vote for sectional strife, a vote for continued conflict between labor and capital, a vote for class legislation, a vote for the man with the sword, instead of a vote for the man with the plane, the plow, and the dinner pail. As Gen. Grant said, "Let us have peace." To get it, and to keep it, let us vote for Judge Parker. MINISTER.

Birds and the Boll Weevil.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of yesterday appears an article giving the views of Col. Isaac W. Brown on the extermination of the cotton boll weevil as reported by him to Miss Helen Gould, who, it appears, had sent him to Texas for the purpose of investigating this scourge and suggesting methods for its extinction.

All that he advises is to stop killing the quail, meadow lark, and dove, attract them to the spots where the weevil is thickest, and the plague will come to a stop by the eating thereof by these birds!

If this is the best he can do I am afraid the suffering Texan is still far from relief. The first two mentioned birds would be of some use, although the quail is by choice a grain and seed eating animal, but the dove would be entirely useless for such a purpose, as it is absolutely a vegetarian and, so far as is known, does not eat insect or other animal food. Farmers' Bulletin No. 54, issued by the Deparment of Agriculture, states that the examination of the contents of 237 doves' stomachs shows that over 99 per cent. of the food consists wholly of vegetable matter, less than 1 per cent. being animal, and even that was believed to be the remains of weevils contained in seeds which the birds had eaten.

However, if Col. Brown may not succeed in doing much damage to the boll weevil, if he is successful in diminishing the slaughter of our birds he will not have lived in vain! G. M. MACKENZIE.

Plea for Better Streets.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Though a stanch Republican and a great admirer of the last city administration, I have been most agreeably impressed with the efficiency and apparent honesty of the present one, and being an independent voter where municipal politics are concerned, would undoubtedly vote for Mr. McClellan were he again nominated. One kick I would make, however. I would like to know why the streets in the Borough of Richmond are kept in so much worse repair than formerly. Is the money going elsewhere, or is it the neglect of certain highways?

Bard Avenue at Livingston, formerly a good macademized road, is now in wretched condition, a disgrace to the city. By judicious handling such a state could have been prevented, and much expense saved the city, unless the present powers that be have decided that the street be allowed to return to its primeval state.

WINNING VOTES FOR PARKER.

Independents Want Assurances He Does Not Stand with Bryan.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My personal efforts and attempts to win votes for Parker have necessarily been limited, and my experience may have been so peculiar as to form no basis for generalization.

It is apparent, however, that others have had a somewhat similar experience. The independents are not declaring for Parker with that enthusiasm which we hoped for after the gold standard telegram was published to the world. Indeed, many who then inclined toward Parker have since turned to Roosevelt, while a vastly greater number are visibly hesitating. They are hoping against faith that the character manifested through the means of the famous telegram will reveal itself in so strong a light that there can be no further cause for hesitation.

Those with whom I talk say in substance: "We knew what Democracy meant when Cleveland was at the helm; we knew what Democracy stood for when Bryan was its prophet; we know where Cleveland stands to-day, and Bryan leaves no room for doubt as to his position, but what of Parker?

"We are not able to reconcile Cleveland's 'less paternalism' with Bryan's 'more paternalism.' And yet both Cleveland and Bryan are apparently supporting Parker.

"We believe that Parker really stands with Cleveland, but what assurance have we that he will pursue a policy similar to Cleveland's when we see daily evidences that the managers of his campaign are compromising with Bryan. Where can Parker stand if elected if his election is procured by the united efforts of radical paternalists and uncompromising opponents of paternalism? Any compromise on such a question is fatal."

For myself, I answer such objections by attempting to show that Parker is undoubtedly a Democrat; that regenerated Democracy is in absolute harmony with the fundamental principle of historic Democracy; that the current of Democratic thought is dead against paternalism; that Parker was nominated because the Cleveland influence was for him, and not by the manipulations of politicians. He could not have been nominated without the support of the Cleveland leaders and journals.

Being in absolute harmony with this really Democratic movement, there can be no question as to Parker's position now or hereafter. The independents with whom I have had the fortune or misfortune to talk demand further assurance. They want something to counteract the published statements that Bryan is to be sent out on the stump.

I must confess my inability to overcome the objection and pass it on to THE TIMES, with the request that it will give the assurance so much desired. THE HICKSITE.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MENACE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have in our midst a class of people calling themselves Christian Scientists who are, in the writer's opinion, a constant menace to the health of the community, particularly so far as school children are concerned.

One of the most difficult tasks confronting health boards in all cities is to enforce quarantine regulations in the poor and thickly settled districts. The inhabitants of these quarters seldom call a physician until a child is dangerously ill, many times suffering from a contagious disease, and in the meantime the other children of the family are sent to school—faithfully distributing the germs of the disease frequently until an epidemic results.

While the health boards and physicians are doing all in their power to overcome these conditions, a class of misguided mortals is at work undoing much that has been accomplished.

They teach the ignorant, and some who ought to know better that the body has no existence and is simply a picture of the imagination and that it follows that no disease can exist where there is no material body.

Acting upon this theory when a case of contagious disease develops, everything connected with it is denied and the child is sent to school, for to keep it at home would be to admit the existence of both body and disease. In a school where there are a thousand or more pupils, the result of this practice may be imagined.

Another form of evil lies in the "practitioners," instructing a new patient, who has formerly been kept going by implicitly obeying his physician's instructions as to diet and physical care, that he is now in God's hands and cannot suffer harm no matter what he does.

As a result the patient under the new "treatment" disregards the regulations which have done so much for him in the past, and soon finds himself in such a condition that he is beyond the reach of material remedies—many die, victim of fanaticism.

We have jails and lunatic asylums a plenty, but they do not appear to accomplish the limits of their usefulness while so large a number of dangerous fanatics are outside their walls.

A SUFFERER.

New York, Sept. 14, 1904.

Adolf Beck Goes Abroad.

Before leaving London for the Continent Adolf Beck, the victim of the remarkable error of justice in which he was twice convicted and once imprisoned for crimes he did not commit, sent the following letter to the British press:

"Before leaving England for a short holiday abroad I desire most heartily to thank all those who have so kindly and warmly congratulated me upon the official recognition of my innocence of the frauds attributed to me and of my honorable character.

"I have been simply overwhelmed with letters and telegrams, which it is quite impossible for me to acknowledge separately, but for which I am sincerely grateful.

"My thanks are also especially due to the British press, which loves fair play at all times, and it is my earnest hope that my sufferings may compel the foundation of a Criminal Court of Appeal, which this country so badly needs."

New Fad in Rings.

From The Philadelphia Record.

"The latest novelty," said the jeweler, "is a ring of unique design much in demand among young swains as a gift to susceptible girls. It is a flat band, the surface being embossed in the form of a bar of music. There are the notes d, e, and a, and then comes a rest. You see this makes the word 'dearest.' Some of them are set with jewels, and are very expensive, while others are simply the gold bands. The latter, of course, have the greatest sale, but there is also quite a demand for the higher priced ones."

THE LESSON OF SCHOOL.

With little bits of mortals
Trotting off to school,
With pen, and pad, and pencil,
And books and maps and rule!
They will learn anon, prase,
What education meant,
When one of them may haply
Become a President!

This should be the lesson
We should learn to-day,
That probably we frittered
All our time away,
When at school, apparently,
We'd not the common sense
To study hard, for none of us
Is a President!

FAITH CURISTS RELATE MANY "EXPERIENCES"

One Prayer Got Three Stoves, Another Twelve Hairs.

WOMAN RECOVERED SANITY

Learned Not to Mix Nursery Rhymes with Biblical Quotations—A Warning for Reporters.

The Faith Curists of the Eastern part of the United States, who are holding their annual convocation at the Church of the First Born, in Jersey City, continued their meetings yesterday. About one hundred and fifty were present. The session was taken up mainly with the relation of "experiences."

One of the most remarkable instances of the efficacy of prayer was related in the afternoon by a man from Newark, who is in charge of a rescue home there. Last Winter the home needed stoves to heat it. He prayed the Lord to provide, and the same evening a wagon drove up with three stoves.

An old man who was very sincere told how, when he had been bald, he had prayed with full faith, and his prayer had been answered. He admitted that the answer was not extensive, but he said he hoped and continued to pray for an increased number of hairs. An inquisitive attendant at the meeting later counted the hairs and said that twelve would be a liberal estimate for the returns.

At the evening session Pastor Zennert in a prayer denounced card games, bowling, pool playing, and billiards. He did not mention baseball and horse racing.

In the evening numerous stories were told of cures of incurable diseases by the faith of the sufferer and in one or two cases by "absent treatment." Pastor Zennert in an address sharply defined the difference between a Christian Scientist and a Faith Curist. A Christian Scientist believes that sickness and disease are errors and the result of imagination. All that was needed for a cure was the removal of the belief of the error; but the Faith Curist believed in the reality of the disease and prayed to God to remove it.

One speaker was an old woman, who said that twelve years ago she apparently lost her mind. She had always been a churchwoman, but found she could not understand the sermons. The Biblical stories were unintelligible, and she discovered herself repeating nursery rhymes when she thought she was quoting Scripture. She was not even able to set the table. A sister took her to the Church of the Firstborn. Before long she could set the table, she forgot the nursery rhymes and quoted from the Bible by the chapter.

At the close of the evening session Sister Antoinette Jackson cautioned her followers not to speak of trifles, but to bear testimony as to real cures. She said this caution was due to the fact that reporters were present, and that most reporters were devils. She urged her followers to pray that all reporters be brought within the light.

HAD A REPUBLICAN PARROT.

Mr. Nangin's Effort at Political Conversion Failed.

Policeman Taylor of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station was near Eighth Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street late last night, when he heard a man in the dark corner seemingly trying to convert a man to his way of thinking that Parker would be the next President. He turned to look, but was astonished to see only one man. He heard this man hammering away with his arguments to a dark object on the walk, and the policeman approached.

"I'll make a Dimmycrat av ye, yet," said the man to the object.

Taylor then observed that the man was talking to a parrot in a cage in front of him, and he was astounded to hear the parrot object in the following declaration:

"Not on your life. Not on your life."

The man was John Mangin of 464 West One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street. He explained to Taylor that he had bought the poll parrot from a Republican friend who had taken pains to instill his obnoxious politics into the bird.

"But I'm goin' to knock them politics out av him," said Mangin.

"Not on your life," said the parrot.

Such a crowd had collected that Taylor ordered the man to take his parrot away with him, but the man was too busy talking politics to his new charge, and Taylor took them both to the station house. When Sergt. Wolf asked what the matter was the parrot screamed joyously:

"Shut up or I'll lock you up," said the Sergeant to the parrot.

"Not on your life," replied the parrot, and the Sergeant put both Mangin and the parrot in a cell.

FIFTH AVENUE HOUSE SOLD.

William Guggenheim Buys Mrs. Mary Bell's Residence.

Mrs. Mary Bell of Newport has sold the new American basement dwelling 833 Fifth Avenue, between Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth Streets, to William Guggenheim of the American Smelting and Refining Company.

The house is practically a new one, having been completed only about a year ago by Builders John T. and James A. Farley. The similar adjoining dwelling, 834, was bought by Frank J. Gould. Both houses were built to sell for $500,000 each, and brought a price very close to that figure. For what price Mrs. Bell sells has not been announced, but it is said that, making some allowance for the cost of carrying the property for a year, the transaction will not show any great loss. Mrs. Bell's former residence at the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-second Street has been removed to make way for a new business building. Mr. Guggenheim now lives at 36 West Seventy-seventh Street, facing Manhattan Square. His purchase of 833 Fifth Avenue was negotiated through Brokers Whitehouse & Porter.

REHEARSING FOR CONEY FETE.

Free Show Every Day Now in the Preparations.

Coney Island is now actively preparing for the Mardi Gras festival to celebrate the semi-centennial of the island as a pleasure resort on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday next. There is a free spectacle of the various attractions every day, as they are prepared for their parts in the parades.

The Citizens' Committee has planned preliminary exercises for Tuesday evening, Sept. 20, when the King and Queen of the Carnival are to receive the keys to the resort and their advent, heralded by five minutes of total darkness, is to be followed by an illumination of the whole island. On Monday the first rehearsal of the rescue, a half mile off shore, of a crew on a supposedly burning ship is to be held.

Among the elaborate plans of the Mardi Gras is the reproduction of the burning of Coney Island. Pain is in charge of this. Coney Island itself is to be used for the scenery, the resort being the stage.

FEAR FOR CITY'S TREES.

Thirty Organizations Complain of Damage by Cutting Branches for Wires.

Thirty organizations interested in the beautification of the city have sent to the Mayor and heads of departments a complaint that serious damage is threatened to trees through the indiscriminate cutting of branches for the purpose of stringing wires.

In response, Commissioner of Police William McAdoo has issued an order to the police calling attention to the laws, and especially to the rules of the Park Department prohibiting the mutilation of trees in the Parks. The complaint states that much of the cutting is done on Sunday to prevent the issuance of injunctions, and the police are warned to allow no work of this kind without the proper notification.

TEXANS WANTED "'NESCORT."

Took Police Station for a Guide-Furnishing Agency.

Into the Elizabeth Street Police Station came three tall men late last night.

"We wan' 'nescort," said the tallest.

"What?" said the Sergeant.

"We—want—an—escort!" said all three in chorus.

"What for?"

"Wan' do Chinatown."

"Can't you take care of yourselves?"

The three tall men looked at one another and grinned. Then one said very gravely: "We're f'm Texas—Ole Man Dade's outfit."

"Then I guess you fellows don't need much protection."

"That's so, an' that's why we want it. If we get in a howl somebody else 'd better do the talkin'."

"I see," said the Sergeant, respectfully. "But best advice I can offer is to go without an escort and keep out of a howl."

A long silence, then:

"Guess we'd better take the escort."

"Sorry; it's against the rules to provide guides."

"Well, can't you tell us where we can smite the joypipe?"

"There are no opium dens in this precinct," said the Sergeant, severely.

"Reck'n this is the Holy City," said the tallest Texan, dryly.

Another silence. Then the one Texan turned to the other two.

"Say, Bill, I guess that was dust you was breathin' when you told us about this hot town. Didn't you say the police was on wise to good sports like us? Didn't you say the p'lice give you a brass band that stopped playing when you butted into a saloon and started playin' the 'Conk'rin' Hero' when you come out? That's wuss 'n a snake story."

A painful silence. The Sergeant scribbled nervously on the blotter. They were "f'm Ole Man Dade's outfit."

The tallest Texan said:

"I feel as if I was bein' driv' to drink."

The other Texans appreciated his dry humor and presently all were corralled in the corner saloon. The Sergeant wiped away beads of perspiration.

STRIKING MUSICIANS BACK.

In Three Washington Theatres They Will Get Increased Pay.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—A compromise was reached to-day by the terms of which the striking members of the orchestras of three of the Washington theatres will return to work next week. The men went out because of the refusal of the managers to accede to the demands of the local union for an increase of pay to $18 and $20 per week, according to the number of performances given.

President Joseph N. Weber of the American Federation of Musicians reached an agreement with the managers of the three theatres referred to whereby the men will receive an advance in pay based on a percentage of their present salaries. Negotiations are on foot with the managers of two of the other houses in the city, and it is expected an agreement along the same general lines will be reached.

"PIFF, PAFF, POUF" STAR WEDS.

Press Agent's Description of "Life-Long Romance."

Miss Grace Cameron, the prima donna of the "Piff, Paff, Pouf" company at the Casino Theatre, was married to H. Winslow Kenworthy yesterday at the Church of the Transfiguration. The press agent told the story as follows:

"The wedding was the culmination of a lifelong romance between Miss Cameron and Mr. Kenworthy. Both went to school together in Storm Lake, Iowa. Mr. Kenworthy was anxious to make Miss Cameron his bride before she went on the stage, but she wanted to have a 'career' first. Mr. Kenworthy came to New York and induced her to take the step into matrimony.

"He is the son of the Hon. Mr. Kenworthy of Iowa. Miss Cameron asked Manager Whitney for a vacation for two weeks, in order that she might enjoy a wedding tour, but the manager couldn't spare her."

ORPHEUM MUSIC HALL OPENS.

Successful Performance of "Japsky" in New Harlem Playhouse.

The Orpheum Music Hall, at 175 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, conducted by a corporation, of which Coroner O'Gorman is the Vice President and Treasurer, was opened last night with a production entitled "Japsky." The house was packed, and the work of the performers was loudly applauded. It was announced that during the season Broadway productions at popular prices would be offered.

The new amusement house cost about $40,000, and is one of the handsomest places of the kind in Harlem. A feature is a rathskeller known as the "Catacombs."

MME. TERNINA ILL AT MUNICH.

"Parsifal" Star Has Facial Affection and Must Take Long Rest.

A late arrival from Munich reports that Mme. Milka Ternina, who was the Kundry in "Parsifal" at the Metropolitan Opera House last year, is ill with some facial trouble and will not be able to appear in three or four years. She has suffered a great deal with her eyes, and in some way the affection began to make itself felt in her vocal organs.

She is now living in a cottage outside of Munich. Before she sings again she will have to undergo a thorough course of treatment from throat specialists.

NOTES OF THE THEATRES.

Miss Alice Roosevelt sat in a stage box at Daly's Theatre last night and saw Edna May in "The School Girl." She was one of a large theatre party.

Helena Frederick, who made her début at Hurtig & Seamon's Monday, has been re-engaged for next week. Her repertoire will be entirely changed.

Madge Lessing is to star under the management of Alfred Aarons. Julian Edwards will compose the music for her comic opera.

It is reported in theatrical circles that Henry Miller is going to be an actor-manager this Winter and will start a stock company at the Madison Square Theatre. The playhouse has not been open for several months, as the city ordered extensive alterations to be made. Nearly the last time the public heard from Mr. Miller he was making drastic comments on the methods of the dramatic critics in New York.

"Taps" at the Lyric To-night.

"Taps," a translation from the German of Franz Adam Beyerlein, will be presented at the Lyric Theatre to-night. It was played in the original German at the Irving Place Theatre last Winter. The caste distinctions and severe military discipline in Germany furnish the theme. Clara, the daughter of Corp. Helbig, falls in love with Lieut. von Lauffen. Her fiancée, Sergt. Major Volkhardt, surprises the couple together, and the result is a sabre duel. Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon have the rôles of Volkhardt and Clara. Others in the cast are Robert Lorraine, Aubrey Moyes, W. B. Woodhall, Archie Harris, Albert Sackett, Paul Overton, Harry M. Blake, A. R. Voight, Ruddy J. Struck, Ernest J. Mack, W. R. Walters, and Charles Swickard.

To Produce Hall Caine's New Play.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—The Hamburg-American liner Deutschland, which sailed from Dover for New York to-day, has among her passengers George C. Tyler, who has secured the American rights of Hall Caine's new play, "The Prodigal Son." He has also contracted with Mme. Réjane and a French company for an American tour in the Autumn, and with Signor Novelli and an Italian company for a tour of the United States, to begin in January.

NEW TROLLEY PARALLEL FOR NEW HAVEN ROAD

Philadelphia Combine After New York and Stamford Line.

INTERBOROUGH CONNECTION

Building from Larchmont to Bronx, Proposed Route Will Offer Through Suburban Service.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Sept. 16.—The United Gas Improvement Company of Philadelphia, through Francis A. Stratton, Vice President of the Westchester Lighting Company, is understood again to be negotiating for the New York and Stamford trolley system, a $1,600,000 corporation which operates a line from Stamford to Larchmont, with branches to all the shore resorts in Westchester County. Mr. Stratton had an option on the line some time since, which was allowed to lapse, and the resumption of the negotiations at this time promises interesting developments in the suburban trolley field.

It is understood that the plan behind the proposed purchase of the New York and Stamford Road contemplates the construction of a line from Larchmont into Bronx Park, New York, to connect with the Interborough Rapid Transit Company's line there and afford virtually a through passage from New York City to all points along the Sound within the limits of trolley travel. Mr. Stratton is a close personal friend of Chief Contractor John B. McDonald of the New York subway.

In conjunction with the proposed connection with the Interborough, however, it is recalled that the New York, New Haven and Hartford Road in announcing its $7,000,000 improvement not long ago, stated that its trains would be the ones to have official connection with the lines of the Interborough at Bronx Park. The construction of a through paralleling line by the New York and Stamford people would produce virtually the same situation that the United Gas Improvement Company concocted in Connecticut.

There it built up on the basis of the Bridgeport trolley lines, a system that threatened seriously the monopoly which the Consolidated Road had had on Connecticut traffic since time out of mind, and which resulted first, in the electrification of a number of the suburban lines of the New York, New Haven around Bridgeport and New Haven, and eventually in the purchase through a new holding company at profitable prices, of a number of the roads which cut into the railroad's preserves most seriously.

The New York and Stamford in extending its line to the Bronx will be in a favorable position from which to consider offers of the New York, New Haven and Hartford. As a side issue in the trolley deal, it is understood that Col. Ineft, formerly of the New Haven Road, with National Committeeman Ward and Mr. Stratton, have in mind transforming Rye Beach into a Summer resort of the "Dreamland" order.

"WATER WAGON" NEW TO HIM.

Educational Results of a Pastor's Visit to Subway Saloon.

Special to The New York Times.

YORK, Penn., Sept. 16.—The Rev. Dr. George Enders, pastor of Christ Lutheran Church and President of the Susquehanna University, has returned from a visit to New York, where he made a personal inspection of the famous subway saloon. In an interview Dr. Enders gives his impressions of the saloon he visited, and in the course of the interview said:

"In the rear of the long bar I saw a door. Over it there was a large arched sign inscribed in big letters with the words: 'To the Water Wagon.' The sign was mystifying to me. What in the world could this water wagon mean? It did not seem to be the entrance to a stable where sprinkling carts were kept. The more I thought over it the more I was puzzled, so I resolved to investigate. I passed through the door and found myself in a second dingy room like the first. Here men and women were seated at tables drinking from mugs and glasses.

"After I left the subway saloon and was telling my experience to others, I learned the significance of the sign, 'To the Water Wagon.' Beyond the portals over which the sign appeared nothing stronger than beer is sold. Mostly soft drinks and coffee are dispensed there. No, I am not impressed with the model saloon. I do not think it will turn the tide of drunkenness, nor will it solve or diminish the curse of rum."

BOARD OF ESTIMATE BUSY.

125 Items on Calendar—Votes $2,500,000 for Bridges.

Mayor McClellan presided over yesterday's meeting of the Board of Estimate, which found itself confronted with a calendar of not fewer than 125 subjects for consideration. It required almost three hours to clear it up.

Bridge Commissioner Best obtained $2,500,000 for expenses in connection with the Williamsburg Bridge, including the payment of property awards in connection with its construction. In April the payment of $2,000,000 of awards was authorized by the Board. Sept. 24 has been fixed as the date for the payments authorized yesterday. The Bridge Commissioner said after the meeting that the sum of $1,600,000 had been originally asked for the acquisition of property necessary for the construction of the bridge, but that the sum needed for the purpose would exceed these figures by $600,000. He also got $600,000 for the Blackwell's Island Bridge.

President Haffen of the Bronx got $150,000 for bridges over the New York and Harlem Railroad at One Hundred and Forty-ninth, One Hundred and Sixty-first, and One Hundred and Seventy-seventh Streets, and $50,000 for a bridge extension over the Port Morris Branch Railroad at Elton Avenue.

An allowance of $250,000 was made for the erection of buildings and additions for the Charities Department. Richmond Borough got $250,000 for the completion of its Borough Hall. The claim of Norman S. Dike, for services while Sheriff of Kings County, was allowed.

Borough President Ahearn was authorized to appoint a confidential inspector at $1,800 a year for watching all contract work on streets, that all violations of the eight-hour labor law might be detected. The resolution of the Board was made general, that other Borough Presidents may appoint similar inspectors, should they see fit.

MAY REVEAL MAN "HIGHER UP."

New Move in Duke-Beyers-Sonner Extortion Plot.

The identity of the mysterious "man higher up" who was alluded to when the Duke-Beyers-Sonner extortion plot was aired in the courts may be known if a certificate of reasonable doubt be granted ex-Policeman Rudolph Beyers, who is now serving six months in the penitentiary for his connection with a scheme to sell places in the Police and Fire Departments.

An order has been served on District Attorney Jerome to appear before Justice Leventritt in the Supreme Court, on Wednesday next and show cause why the certificate should not be granted.

At the office of Breen & Harris, counsel for Beyers, it was said yesterday that the ground on which the application for a stay had been made was that Beyers had not had an opportunity to take the stand in his own behalf. They declared that their client could tell a story that would clear him and place the blame where it really belonged, and that incidentally the identity of the man "higher up" would be revealed.

KEPT TROUSERS, SOCKS, TOO.

Plaint of Dead Language Translator Against His Landlady.

Mrs. Jessie Parkin of 86 Grove Street, appeared before Magistrate Moss, in the Jefferson Market Court, yesterday morning to show cause why she should not release the trunk of her late lodger, Edwin Lewis.

"My name is Lewis, Sir!" said the complainant. "I am a translator of dead languages, Sir! I am also a political man—a man of influence, Sir! I am a business man, Sir, and this woman by detaining the trunk—and—its—contents!—has injured my business.

"I suppose the contents of which you speak are very valuable?" ventured the Magistrate.

"I will not gainsay that," said the student of dead languages. "And the contents are of little intrinsic value to any but myself."

"Ah, documents—heirlooms, I suppose?"

"No, Sir. If you wish me to be specific and concise, that trunk contains my other trousers and two pairs of socks."

"Give him back his other trousers, Madam," ruled Magistrate Moss; "also his socks. Don't injure his dead language business."

Lewis again appeared in court in the afternoon.

"If your Honor please, I think I had better apply for a writ of duces tecum," he said.

"What do you intend to do with that?"

"Get possession of the extra pair of trousers and that other pair of half hose. The defendant's husband is a posse cunctans and to talk to the woman is like casting pearls before—"

"I will advise you to get a summons for conversion," the Magistrate said.

"Oh, thank you, that never occurred to me," said Lewis.

BRILLIANT BALL AT LENOX.

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Sept. 16.—The largest ball ever given in Lenox took place at the Hotel Aspinwall to-night by the Berkshire Hunt Club, whose membership is limited to Lenox cottagers. It was a fitting introduction to the horse show, which will be the entertainment of to-morrow.

In the delicately tinted pink room hundreds of bunches of pink gladiolus had been arranged to form a hedge all around the room, standing as if growing in a garden. These were supplemented by pink hydrangeas, while above and about the room were medallions, crops, fox brushes, trophies of the hunt, elk and deer heads, a beautiful mounted peacock occupying a prominent position. Streamers of red and green were suspended from ceiling to pillar. The men of the Hunt Club wore red lapels on their dress coats.

The patronesses of the ball were Mrs. William D. Sloane, Mrs. Girard Foster, Mrs. George G. Haven, Mrs. John E. Alexanadre, Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, Miss Kate Carey, Miss Heloise Meyer, and Miss Clementine Furniss.

CIGAR STAMP ROW IS AIRED BEFORE ARMSTRONG

Importers Argue Against Any Change in Custom.

SAY PUBLIC IS PROTECTED

Domestic Manufacturers Declare That Big Stamp Is Nothing More Than an Advertisement.

Robert B. Armstrong, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, heard both sides to the import cigar stamp controversy yesterday.

For several years the domestic manufacturers of cigars from Havana tobacco have been urging the adoption by the Treasury Department of a less conspicuous stamp for imported cigars. The agitation has so far been unsuccessful, but lately it has assumed such proportions as to alarm the Havana Cigar Company, which is the branch of the Tobacco Trust handling its imported cigar business and which controls all the important brands made in Cuba.

The domestic manufacturers complain that the present stamp, which is a large and conspicuous affair, is really an advertisement, bearing an indorsement by the United States Government, of the supposed superior qualities of the imported cigar.

At the request of the Havana Cigar Company, Mr. Armstrong granted a hearing to J. B. Cobb, First Vice President of the company, at the Custom House. Mr. Cobb argued that the big stamp was the only protection the public had against the substitution of inferior domestic cigars for imported ones by unscrupulous dealers. At the close of his interview with Mr. Cobb, Mr. Armstrong was waited on by a delegation representing the Clear Havana Cigar Manufacturers' Association, the National Association of Cigar Manufacturers, the National Retail Cigar Dealers' Association, the New York and Brooklyn Retail Dealers' Associations, and the Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade. The delegation favored the adoption of a small stamp, to be pasted on the bottom of the box.

Morris S. Wise, who is counsel to most of the tobacco-trade associations, said yesterday:

"Our position is that the domestic cigar trade, which is the most heavily taxed trade in the country, is being discriminated against by the Government, which by affixing this big, glaring stamp to the boxes gives a fictitious guarantee of quality to imported cigars. As a matter of fact, just as good cigars are made in this country as in Cuba, and all imported cigars, no matter what trash they may be, are stamped alike. The public, however, has been educated to the idea that the import stamp is a guarantee of quality, and we maintain that the Government is aiding in the deception."

CHARLES F. CLARK'S WILL.

Late Bradstreet President Leaves Property to His Family.

The will of Charles F. Clark, who was President of Bradstreet's Agency, and who died in England Sept. 3, was filed for probate in the Surrogates' office yesterday. The house in which he resided at 831 Madison Avenue is left to the widow, together with the income on $500,000 for use during her lifetime.

To his daughter, Mrs. Henry Phipps Ross, who resides in Canada, is bequeathed the income on $200,000, and similar provision is made for his daughter, Ella Mabel Clark, who resides at Fairacres. The sum of $200,000 is bequeathed outright to the son of Charles Martin Clark, who resides at South Orange, N. J., and the will specifies that the executors are to pay to him $25,000 cash immediately. The residuary estate is left to the members of the Clark family, each child to receive one-fifth and the widow to receive two-fifths.

FORBID SIGNS IN WINDOWS.

Trinity Building's Plan Not to Mar the Old Churchyard.

Following out their announced intention of making the new Trinity Building harmonize with Trinity Church in outward appearance and of doing nothing that might mar the quiet aspect of the intervening churchyard, the officers of the United States Realty Company have decided to insert a clause in all leases of offices in the new structure prohibiting the display of any signs in the windows along its southerly side.

In the Empire Building, at the southerly end of Trinity churchyard, no such custom prevails, nearly all of the windows up to the seventh floor containing gilt lettering.

DONATIONS TO CANCER HOME.

Much Has Been Done, but Need Is Still Great.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish that the public, to make this work of the Servants of Relief for Incurable Cancer a solid success, would once for all come to the conclusion that our charity is worthy of a splendid support; and that, as cancerous poor are untended everywhere in America, their care by unpaid women devoted to them for life may well be as extensive and thorough as the disease itself. We are willing to give our lives to establish this charity and extend it. The needs of science in this direction, the needs even of the State, would be heard without too frequent petition; but this charity will only be listened to by crying to the passers to halt and act.

We acknowledge the mercy of our patrons with the utmost gratitude, and the $600 reported is beyond words precious to our work. But in the very face of this generosity I feel that it would be cowardice to fail to say that the charity should be strengthened by large donations at this time. To see the change in our patients, when they are newly installed, from agonized to quiet sufferers, is argument enough that we are not mistaken.

We desire to acknowledge these donations:

20-HOUR SEARCH FOR GIRL.

Had Missed Father at Train and Went to Friend's House.

Edna Quinn, the eight-year-old daughter of George B. Quinn of 109 Centre Street, had been with her mother on a visit to Philadelphia. A sick relative detained Mrs. Quinn, but Edna had to go to school, so on Thursday the mother telegraphed Mr. Quinn to meet the 10 o'clock train at the Jersey City Station of the Pennsylvania Road.

Quinn was on time; so was the train; but Edna did not appear, and the fond parent waited and watched the Philadelphia trains all through the afternoon, but in vain. He telegraphed Philadelphia, and Mrs. Quinn replied that Edna had left as arranged.

Then Quinn was thoroughly scared, for be it known that Edna is the heiress of a wealthy grandmother. A vain search was conducted for twenty hours. Quinn was worn out, while Mrs. Quinn in Philadelphia was distracted.

At 11 o'clock yesterday morning Quinn, haggard and distressed, entered his office in Centre Street. To a friend who was awaiting him he told the sad tale. The friend laughed.

"Edna's over at my house in Brooklyn," said he. "You just missed her at the station. She came home herself, and as you didn't come back last night—why, I took the little girl home to our folks."

VACATION TEACHER'S PLAINT.

Says Pay Is Slow—Authorities Declare There Is No Delay.

A teacher in the City Vacation Playgrounds Schools has written to THE TIMES complaining that the checks for that work have not been sent out yet for the first term, which ended over six weeks ago.

District Superintendent Evangeline Whitney declared yesterday that she was certain that the playgrounds teachers had been paid for the first month, ended with Aug. 1, and said that the payrolls had been sent down to the City Paymaster for the second term, ended Sept. 1.

City Paymaster Timmerman confirmed that assertion.

IN THE SHOPS.

Those envelope-shaped leather handbags for women which in the Spring were seen only in the finest and most expensive leathers are now to be found at popular prices. One style is in a rough leather after the order of the walrus, moire lined and fitted with cardcase and purse, and is to be had for 95 cents. They come in different colors, some with a broad strap across the back, by means of which they are carried, or with two narrow strap handles.

Fancy ribbon corsage belts, made of handsome ribbons, some plain and others of changeable silk, all with inch-wide fancy edges in colors to agree with the centre, cost $2.50. They are high in back and front, boned and made up with a fancy gilt buckle. Other ribbon belts are made while you wait at the ribbon counters for about $2.50, varying a little, more or less, according to the quality and price of the ribbon. They are boned.

Very pretty is a dark blue suit of rough cheviot. This is plaited coat and skirt. The plaits are narrow—about half an inch wide. The skirt is formed of these, set a little apart, and the jacket also. This is snug fitting, six or eight plaits in the back, tapering in at the waist line. There is a stitched belt around the waist, finishing in points on either side of the front. The coat basques about twelve inches below the waist, is straight around, and makes a neat and smart little suit. It costs $22.50.

Raincoats are being sold at reduced prices. Attractive dark gray cravenettes, with triple collars, finishing with stitched straps in the front, with loose backs belted in, were $19 and are now selling for $12.50. An attractive coat which was $25 is now $19.50. This is of dark color, an invisible check. It is a large size.

New in raincoats are those of black and white check shepherd's plaids. The button is of brass and ball shaped. The coats are $23. They have box backs and very long shawl sleeves.

Pretty gowns of albatross which are recommended for the robe de nuit for traveling are in colors. A couple of pretty ones are in a soft, pale gray, and in pink. They are simply made, embroidered with dots, and cost $5.50.

An albatross gown in white which is pretty has a deep turnover collar with a wide ruffled edge and ruffles in the sleeves. These have a solid scalloped edge of embroidery in white. They cost a trifle more than the others.

An olive green velvet turban has a breast of peacock's feathers around the deep rim.

The lingerie hat is for all seasons. One of these is made with simple low, round crown, and wide rim made entirely of narrow edges of Val. lace. The outer edge of the brim droops. The hat is trimmed in the front with a big straggling bow of narrow bands of chinchilla combined with the lace. It is a pretty hat.

A chinchilla turban is trimmed at one side with a military pompon of white feathers, set high and with a base of soft marabout.

An odd brown velvet hat is made in the form of a chrysanthemum or sunflower. There is a low round crown formed of orange ribbons in different shades, put on like petals and with a brown velvet button in the centre. There is a wide rim of the velvet.

Another odd hat is of black velvet and white ostrich plumes. Only the rim of this is of the velvet. The ostrich plumes forming the crown, or covering it, radiate from the centre, where there is a small black bow.

AWFUL RUMPUS AT BELLEVUE.

Doctors Don't Want Men Servants Displaced by Women.

The forty-four doctors at Bellevue Hospital are not in a good humor over the order of Dr. J. W. Brannan, President of the Medical Board, that the men who take care of the rooms of the physicians be displaced by women. They made a protest to the doctor and he said he would think it over.

The order was to go into effect to-day. Dr. Brannan's plea was for economy, but the doctors told him there would be no economy in his plan. But this was not the only argument.

"Gee, suppose you're taking a bath after being out on an ambulance call, and want to hurry to bed," said the spokesman, "and a woman comes in to make up your room. What d'ye think of that? Besides, suppose you want your clothes pressed. You can't send a woman to the tailor's all the time. She doesn't know what you want, and you can't be sending her on errands — you could a man. It

Batch, a Brooklyn boy who was "farmed out" by Manager Hanlon to the Holyoke (Mass.) team last Spring, was a conspicuous figure in the double-header between the New Yorks and Brooklyns at the Polo Grounds yesterday. In the games at Washington Batch did not do anything beyond the ordinary, but yesterday he showed fielding ability of an unusual order and used the bat equal to a Lajoie. He hit the ball hard at every opportunity, and his batting record included two home runs and a three-bagger, the latter just escaping the ropes at left field, which would have entitled him to another home run. He showed excellent judgment in fielding bunted balls, and his throwing was fast and accurate.

Batting as a rule was light in both games, the Brooklyns making but four hits off Mathewson and the New Yorks six off Jones in the first contest. Each team was entitled to a run, but Jones was responsible for the extra tally scored by the New Yorks.

New York outbatted Brooklyn in the second game; besides, Hanlon's men were somewhat loose in their fielding. Both McGinnity and Cronin pitched excellent ball, the "Iron Man" distinguishing himself by striking the side out in the third inning. The scores:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Greater New Yorks Quit Even in a Double-Header with Champions.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 16.—What was claimed to be the largest crowd that ever witnessed a baseball game in this city was present to-day at the double-header between the world's champions and the Greater New Yorks, their nearest rival for the American League pennant. According to the official count there were 22,983 persons on the grounds. Both games abounded in brilliant fielding, especially the first contest, in which Chesbro was pitted against Dineen. For two innings the New Yorks had everything their own way. They batted Dineen hard, Dougherty and Anderson each batting for three bases. On the other hand, the Bostons were unable to do anything with "Happy Jack's" delivery. After the second inning Dineen steadied himself, and during the balance of the game not a New Yorker got across the plate. The Bostons, however, in the fifth and seventh innings, by streaks of batting, scored four runs, making the score at the finish 6 to 4 in New York's favor.

In the second game the batting was not so heavy nor the fielding so clean. Garvin, late of the Brooklyn Club, was pitted against "Farmer" Young, but the New Yorker was hit so freely in the second and third innings that Puttmann, the left-hander, was substituted. The latter did well, only two hits being made off him in four innings.

A two-base hit by La Chance, Ferris's three-bagger, and a wild pitch gave Boston two runs in the second inning, and Elberfeld's fumble and Collins's three-bagger resulted in another run in the third. Criger's three-bagger and Elberfeld's low throw to Ganzel gave the champions their last run. Conroy, on a single, a steal, a high of Criger, and an out, scored New York's first run, and Williams, on a three-bagger and an out, tallied the second in the ninth inning. Scores:

DETROIT WON TWO GAMES.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 16.—Detroit won two games from Cleveland to-day, the locals being unable to make hits with men on bases. Stovall pitched his first game against his former club and scored a shutout. Rossman's error in centre gave Detroit the only run of the first game, while errors by Bradley and Carr gave them three in the second. Lajoie is out of the game with a lame knee, while pitcher Donavan and right fielder Crawford have been suspended for three days by Ban Johnson. Scores:

NEW YORK RIFLEMEN WIN.

Capt. Hudson of Ninth Regiment Captured the Thurston Match.

The Thurston match, the Old Guard Trophy match, and the revolver team match were concluded yesterday under perfect weather conditions at the Fall meeting of the New York State Rifle Association on the Creedmoor range. A large field of competitors reported at the firing line and everybody was kept busy from 10 o'clock in the morning until dusk. The Thurston match, which was open to every one, was won by Capt. W. G. Hudson, Ninth Regiment, N. G. N. Y., with a total of 135 out of a possible 140.

The distances in the Thurston match were 800 and 900 yards, each competitor firing seven shots at each distance. The use of any make of military rifle was permissible. The total scores of both ranges were: W. G. Hudson, 135; C. B. Winder, Ohio, 134; K. K. V. Casey, Seventy-first, New York, 134; W. B. Short, Seventh, New York, 134; A. E. Wells, Seventy-first, New York, 129; W. B. Martin, 126; G. E. Bryant, 125; W. G. Lent, 124; G. H. Doyle, 122; G. E. Cook, 118; D. C. Meyer, 116; J. McNevin, 116; J. F. Jenkins, 115; H. E. Evans, 115; W. A. Boyle, 113; E. J. Flack, 112; F. J. Loughlin, 108; F. J. Moynahan, 92; J. L. Doyle, 80; C. Heisler, 75.

The winner of the Old Guard Trophy match was Team No. 2, United States Marine Corps, its total being 255 out of a possible 300. The victor is entitled to a $200 trophy, presented by the Old Guard, and $50 in cash. The second prize, $25, was captured by the Seventy-first Regiment, New York, with a total of 254.

United States Marine Corps, Team No. 2—Cope, 40; Evans, 43; Maybee, 43; Baptist, 42; Burkhart, 42; Schriver, 45. Total, 255.

United States Marine Corps Team No. 1—Hayes, 42; Howard, 39; Lonsdale, 40; Divine, 40; Bishop, 39; Barker, 42. Total, 242.

SMYTHE RETURNS TO FOOTBALL

Columbia's Old Tackle Back in the Line This Year—Other New Candidates.

William R. Morley, coach of Columbia's football team, announced yesterday that D. R. Smythe, tackle on the 1901 and 1900 Columbia elevens, would return to college this year and play football. Smythe has been out of college for the past two years, but as he did no pursue sufficient studies to get his degree h has decided to come back. As he was one o the best tackles Columbia ever had, he i expected to prove a strong man in the line With his presence it will be possible to tak either Duncan Brown or Thorpe, who playe tackles last year, and put one of them in a guard to allow Smythe to take his old position. This will serve to build up the line. Smythe is in the best of condition and weigh 214 pounds, 37 pounds more than when h last played. "Sam" Smythe, his brother who played part of last season at centre an was then incapacitated, was on the field yes terday and is expected to report for practic Monday.

Five more new candidates reported for th team yesterday. They are Williams, formerl of Amherst, and now the champion pol vaulter at Columbia; Starbuck, one of th strongest members of the 1907 freshma eleven; Leslie, from the New York Militar Academy, and Kilroe and Untermeyer, neithe of whom has had any previous football ex perience. For the first time Morley decide to line up his men in two elevens, and afte the usual practice in elementary principle they lined up and ran through signals. Ther was no attempt at scrimmage and this wor will not begin, probably, until Monday. Th line-up of the two teams was:

Dr. Knipe Cannot Box at St. Louis.

Dr. Knipe of this city, who was the amateur champion boxer of the United States, has been declared ineligible for the amateur bouts for the Olympic championship, which will begin in the Stadium at St. Louis on Monday. Dr. Knipe, for several years has been an instructor of boxing and physical culture in this city, and for receiving pay for such tuition he became a professional under the rules of the Amateur Athletic Union. During his boxing career Dr. Knipe has put on the gloves with "Bob" Fitzsimmons, "Kid" McCoy, and Joe Choynski.

INSTRUCTION.

A Boy That Failed
to make progress at a noted New England academy entered the Groff School recently with several having had similar experiences at other large schools. They were all put into Yale and other large colleges the following September without a condition, one year ahead of their former classmates, and their present standing at college is very high. Mr. Groff's experience with these boys is typical of the success he has had for ten years.

THE GROFF SCHOOL,
228 West 72d St., New York,
now occupying the most handsome school quarters in New York, is ideal and exceptional as a boarding and day school. School home conducted somewhat as a fraternity house.
No young and inexperienced teachers to experiment with students.
Absolutely individual attention, the number being strictly limited to 25. No very young boys admitted. Handsome study parlors, billiard room, piano, phonograph, and full and free use of skating rink, bowling alleys, fencing hall, gymnasium, &c.
Proper and judicious supervision of the daily life of all students of the school, but all foolish school discipline, military drill, and consequent loss of time eliminated.
Term begins Sept. 29th.

Big Loan for New Hippodrome.
The New York Hippodrome, the corporation formed by Thompson & Dundy to handle their new enterprise at Sixth Avenue and Forty-third and Forty-fourth Streets, has secured a loan of $900,000 from the New York Security and Trust Company. The loan is made for a period of twenty years, and will bear 6 per cent. interest.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.
There was a larger number of issues traded in in the curb market yesterday than in some time, but there were a number of unimportant stocks among these issues, while such stocks as Northern Securities and Interborough were not traded in. There was a good market for bonds, and American Tobacco new 6's continued the feature, with a sharp advance at the close of 1¼ from the previous day's close to 106½. Standard Oil scored a gain of 3 points on the sale at 641, while Seaboard stocks showed small fractional losses after small trading. Washington Street Railway preferred sold at 72, which is a gain of 2 points over the previous high record. American Nickel stock, which was offered for such a long time at low figures, although it was being advertised as a good thing sure to rise to $100, was offered all day yesterday at 3, but a sale was made at 3½ notwithstanding this offering.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Strong; Call Money Easy, 1 1-4@2 Per Cent.

The List Rises Generally, Upon Better Crop News, Reinforced by Broad and Liberal Buying.

The stock and produce markets acted as they should yesterday. That is to say, the produce markets weakened and the stock market strengthened. The markets for both wheat and corn reflected better weather in fact and in expectation. Reports of previous damage were denied, and it was even added that the mild frosts had assisted toward maturity of early corn. The wet weather which had stopped thrashing had passed, and resumption of thrashing had surprised the crop killers, big yields being reported. The cotton market was less vivacious than the produce markets, but in general resembled them enough to help the stock market outlook with those who think the crops are more important than the speculative operations of pools which occupy so much space in market talk.

The result of dealings of almost a million shares was no decline worth specifying, except possibly Manhattan's loss of 1½ points more than its dividend. Probably this will convince no more observers that Manhattan is worth any less than Metropolitan's similar gain will convince the doubting that it is worth any more. Metropolitan's overcapitalization, and earning deficiency, and exposure to fresh competition, are familiar topics, and yet it remains obstinately strong. Movements without information, and movements contrary to depressing facts, are dangerous to follow and more dangerous to oppose. Whoever is buying Metropolitan, it would seem that only those dare do so who know that its dividend is secure, and who are careless what its selling price may be. The largest representative rise of the day was in Toledo, St. Louis and Western, to explain which there were stories of pools and traffic combinations and even of purchases for combination. It is less exciting to make reference to the road's excellent earnings and locality in a region especially favored by the crop outlook. Reading's advance was conspicuous and unexplained. Dividend prospects are inadequate when actual dividend payers can be bought cheaper. For instance, there is something incongruous in approximately equal prices for Reading and Steel preferred. It will puzzle many to say which is too high, especially when both are rising as if in a race. Colorado Iron and Fuel, which was weak on Thursday because of doubts that Steel would buy it, was strong yesterday on a different opinion, and there was no authority for either. Its new financial plan is not helpful. The Pacific stocks, which have seemed a little laggard lately, were harder yesterday, and altogether the market was of the cheerful sort recently familiar, with some reservation regarding the Gr angers, the very ones which ought to have improved most upon the improved crop outlook. International Pump halved its dividend on the common, which rose ½, the news having evidently been discounted by early information.

The cash movement indicates a considerable but smaller loss of reserve in today's statement, and there is the usual doubt what will be the requirement of reserve against deposits created by granting of loans. The time when the bank statement will arouse practical interest is approaching, but apparently is not yet here.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Market Turns Strong Again and Everybody Wants to Know the Buyers.

Those who after Thursday's display of weakness expected to see the market sell off yesterday must have been grievously disappointed by its perversity in not fulfilling their expectations, for while there were slight reactions during the morning session, the afternoon developed strength all around. The one exception was the Granger shares, which did not act well, in spite of the fact that the cereals sold off, and that there were no crop damage reports to speak of. The rally in the market was again effected by big buying in a limited selection of stocks. The total of the transactions was not quite up to that of the previous days, but this was due mainly to the slackening of activity during the reaction in the morning. In the afternoon the sales equaled those of other days.

PUZZLE: WHO ARE THE 'BUYERS?

What the Street is most concerned in just now is to get a satisfactory answer to the question as to who the big buyers are. The explanation of a big short interest has been worked to death, and gives little satisfaction, especially as it is demonstrated from day to day that the demand for stocks in the loan crowd is not enough to account for a big short interest. Another explanation is that the buyers are insiders who sold their stock on the decline and then waited too long to buy it back. It is stated that many of the most influential factors on the Boards of Directors, and among the officials of big companies are in a position where if they were called upon to show their strength they would be found wanting. Many annual meetings are approaching, and it would be awkward to have to explain, so these men prefer to buy their stocks back at the best prices they can get. That in the meantime the floating quantity has been reduced by investment buying does not make their position any more pleasant.

STEEL AND COLORADO FUEL.

United States Steel issues were remarkably strong, establishing new high records on this movement. Per contra Colorado Fuel and Iron was inclined to weakness, though it rallied somewhat in the later trading. Nevertheless the story was tipped about that the former would absorb the latter, and that Colorado Fuel had a brilliant future before it. Anybody who believes this story will please hand over his cash for safekeeping.

READING STRONG, ERIE WEAK.

Reading was one of the leaders in the afternoon, and showed great strength and activity. The annual report, which comes out to-day, makes such a good showing that no further explanation need be sought. Erie, on the other hand, was, if not actually weak, at least lifeless, which goes to prove that after all material and actual conditions cannot be ignored absolutely and for any length of time.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Odds and ends would seem to be a more refined appellation for a certain class of stocks than the familiar cats and dogs. The interest in this class of engraved art is becoming daily more apparent, and some of the most reputable houses take a fancy to speculation in such issues. Yesterday, for instance, there was activity and strength in "Dodo" common and preferred, by which euphonious name is meant Detroit Southern, now in receivers' hands. The preferred advanced 1¼ points. Then there was Brunswick, which went up to 7; "Little Leather," which rose 1¼ points; International Paper common, which went up 2¼ points; American Hide and Leather, which went up 5%, and a number of other watered issues of about the same valuation were active.

READING AND JERSEY REPORTS.

Both Railroads Show Substantial Increase of Earnings for 1903.

The annual reports of the Reading and the Jersey Central Railroads are made public this morning. That the report of the Reading would be an excellent one was expected on account of the recent big rise in the quotations of its issues. The operations of the Reading Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railway, and the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company are included in the consolidated statement:

Gross expenses	55,240,725.13	42,815,462.38
Net earnings	$21,799,930.14	$19,325,280.76
Gross fixed charges and taxes	14,042,392.07	14,127,498.03
Net surplus before payment of Reading Company's dividends and general mortgage sinking fund	$7,757,538.07	$5,197,782.73

The amount contributed by the railway company to gross receipts was $34,939,395, of which $15,921,800 was from coal traffic, $11,032,640 from other freight, and $5,516,-692 from passenger traffic. The railroad spent for improvements the sum of $1,173,-764. The report contains a history of the results of the voting trust, which has just ended, in the course of which it says:

The stockholders and the security holders are to be congratulated on the complete success of the reorganization plan. The voting trustees deserve high praise for the good management of the interests committed to them. Under their administration the companies have been established on such solid financial and business foundations that, with conservative, progressive management their future prosperity is no longer problematic.

The report of the Jersey Central, which is controlled by the Reading, shows that the gross earnings were the heaviest in the history of the company. The total gross earnings were $20,738,778. Net earnings amounted to $8,918,158. After deducting improvement and renewal funds and taxes, fixed charges, rentals, and dividends there remained a surplus of $467,593, against a deficit last year of $38,468.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 16.—New York exchange was 10 cents discount. Time and call loans, 4@5 per cent.

Few influences were at work on the local Exchange to enliven trading in either direction. Can preferred found a small market at steady prices. Biscuit common ranged between 48½ and 47¾ during the morning, and City Railways on one sale of 50 shares fell 5 points to 185 and on the subsequent purchase of 50 shares rose to 189¾. Some odd lot sales in Quaker Oats preferred brought a loss from 84 to 81, while a one share sale of Carbon preferred was at a loss of 3½ points. Swifts shares were about steady. Box Board preferred sold freely at 13. In the bond department $2,500 of Chicago Board of Trade 6 per cents went at 104. Afternoon variations of the morning trend included firmness in Can preferred and Swifts.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—Money was in less demand in the market to-day and supplies were abundant. Discounts were easier on the Bank of England's strong position.

Prices on the Stock Exchange were firmer and business was more active in most departments.

Consols were steady and closed with a better tone. Home rails were higher.

Americans opened with a general decline, but recovered to above parity. Missouri Pacific was strong. At the close prices were easier.

Japanese rose suddenly owing to a rumor that Port Arthur had been captured. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 96.

Closing prices: Consols for money, 88½; consols for account, 88 9-16; Anaconda, 4⅝; Atchison, 84½; Atchison preferred, 101; Baltimore and Ohio, 91; Canadian Pacific, 120¾; Chesapeake and Ohio, 43⅜; Chicago Great Western, 17½; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 102; De Beers, 18½; Denver and Rio Grande preferred, 83¼; Erie, 32½; Erie first preferred, 58; Erie second preferred, 48½; Illinois Central, 143; Louisville and Nashville, 127¼; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 25; New York Central, 131¾; Norfolk and Western, 70¾; Northern Pacific preferred, 98; Ontario and Western, 34; Pennsylvania, 67⅝; Rand Mines, 10¾; Reading, 38⅝; Reading first preferred, 44; Reading second preferred, 38½; Southern Railway preferred, 34; Southern Railway preferred, 98¾; Southern Pacific, 67¾; Union Pacific, 100⅞; Union Pacific preferred, 95½; United States Steel, 17½; United States Steel preferred, 69; Wabash, 22¾; Wabash preferred, 43½; Spanish 4s, 87½.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 38.02; Lisbon, 19.50.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England to-day was £16,000. This sum of £250,000 was withdrawn for shipment to Egypt.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Sept. 16.—Trading on the Bourse to-day was animated, Russians strongly advancing and later going off on a rumor that Port Arthur is about to fall. French rentes were depressed. Internationals were higher.

Russian Imperial 4s were quoted at 93.90 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 503.00.

Three per cent. rentes, 98f. 27½c., ex interest. Exchange on London, 25f. 23c. for checks.

BERLIN, Sept. 16.—On the Boerse to-day Americans were higher on New York advices. Domestic iron shares fell heavily.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 41½ pfennigs for checks.

Discount rates—Short bills, 2 per cent.; three months' bills, 3¼ per cent.

THE STATE OF TRADE.

Trade conditions are improving, according to Dun & Co.'s Review, which says to-day:

Industrial and commercial progress is slow, but none the less definite. Low temperature and some injury to crops provided the only adverse influences of the week, and this had little effect upon manufacturers and traders, who have started to prepare for increased business. Buyers of dry goods, clothing, and millinery are notably active in placing orders, although difficulty in regarding specified delivery prevented business. In the woolen division there was decided improvement in dress goods, and fair duplicate orders were received from other lines. Footwear manufacturers are still receiving supplementary orders for late Fall shipment and plants are in full operation, as a rule, while prices tend to securing slightly higher prices. Jobbers state that if old rates would be accepted on Spring lines they would place case orders now, which is unusually early. At the same time buying has appeared a liberal demand for Chicago packer hides, fully 100,000 being sold during the week. No recovery in price is noted, however, and foreign dry hides are barely steady. Leather is selling more freely, all lines showing improvement, except glazed kid, of which the output is being curtailed. A phenomenally large sale of upper quality hemlock sole was reported on Thursday.

Bradstreet's Review on the same subject says:

While there are diverse movements in domestic and foreign trade, the tendency as a whole is for improvement along conservative lines. Buoyancy in the stock market, possibly largely manipulated, and the strength of cereal prices are factors stimulating to trade, but the advance of the Fall season, with cooler weather in some sections, and the prospect of good returns to the agricultural interests, despite the heavy shortage in the wheat yield, are all elements tending to encourage buying. The feeling in many lines is that as the season advances and the corn crop situation becomes clearer the need of additional reorders will result in a fair volume of trade, comparing better with Fall business a year ago than did last Spring's trade with the corresponding period of 1903.

Telegrams to Bradstreet's indicate a fair expansion in Western trade, though buying from the corn-growing sections is still cautious. Railroads centring in Chicago report the largest traffic on record, with west-bound freight not equal to east-bound. Dry goods, clothing, shoes, and groceries note relatively most activity at Western points, and there is more doing in iron and steel, hardware, coal, and lumber. Telephone prices have strengthened at Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Louisville, and Detroit all report improvement in wholesale or jobbing trade. St. Louis reports the rush of personal buying over, but trade in dry goods compares favorably with a year ago, while shoes, hats, and millinery show an increase. In the Northwest, St. Paul, Sioux Falls, and Sioux City note improvement, and at the first-named city sales exceed those of the corresponding period. Trade is brisker at nearly all Pacific Coast points, though San Francisco wholesale trade is rather smaller than expected. Tacoma, Spokane and Seattle report free buying of wheat to be shipped East. Southern trade advices are best from the section east of the Mississippi, Savannah, Charleston, Montgomery, Chattanooga, Nashville, and Augusta all showing improvement. Memphis reports house trade small, but road business increasing. At New Orleans jobbing trade is steady and collections are good. Little Rock notes that the lateness of the crops affects business, but Waco reports wholesale trade active, and at Dallas trade shows further improvement. Among the Eastern centres Baltimore reports the Fall trade rush over and the best business done in years. Jobbing trade in dry goods has improved at Boston, Chinese demand for drills and sheeting shows activity, and some rush orders for shoes are noted, but shipments, as a whole, for the year are 8 per cent. behind a year ago. Providence notes rather more demand for wide print cloths and inquiry for machinery and tools improving. Philadelphia reports moderate activity in dry goods, but shoe jobbers report trade dull, and leather is apathetic. Demand for dry goods in New York is hardly up to seasonable expectations as yet, though a good business is doing. Higher prices for Spring weight woolens are announced, based upon the strength of the raw material, which is firmly held, with an upward tendency, the statistical position being a strong one.

REFEREES' NOTICES.

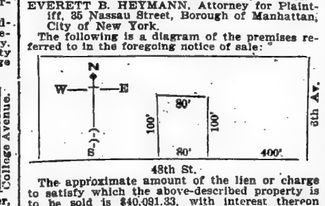
In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale duly made and entered in the above-entitled action, bearing date the 29th day of August, 1904, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, No. 161 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 23d day of September, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by L. J. Phillips & Co., auctioneers, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:
All that lot of land, with the buildings and improvements thereon, described as follows: All those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land situate, lying, and being on the northerly side of Forty-eighth Street, between the Sixth and Seventh Avenues, in the Twenty-second Ward of the City of New York, Borough of Manhattan, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the northerly line of Forty-eighth Street, distant four hundred (400) feet westerly from the northwest corner of Forty-eighth Street and Sixth Avenue; running thence northwardly parallel to Sixth Avenue one hundred (100) feet ten (10) inches; thence westwardly parallel to Forty-eighth Street, eighty (80) feet; thence southwardly and parallel to Sixth Avenue one hundred (100) feet ten (10) inches to the northerly line or side of Forty-eighth Street, and thence eastwardly along the said northerly line of Forty-eighth Street eighty (80) feet to the point or place of beginning, be said several dimensions and distances more or less.
Dated New York, September 1st, 1904.
PETER A. HENDRICK, Referee.
EVERETT B. HEYMANN, Attorney for Plaintiff, 35 Nassau Street, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York.
The following is a diagram of the premises referred to in the foregoing notice of sale:



The approximate amount of the lien or charge to satisfy which the above-described property is to be sold is $40,091.33, with interest thereon from the 22d day of August, 1904, together with costs and allowance amounting to $311.07, with interest thereon from the 29th day of August, 1904, together with the expenses of sale; the approximate amount of water rates is $28, with interest, such amount to be allowed to the purchaser out of the purchase money or paid by the referee.
The premises will be sold subject to a first mortgage for $100,000, with the interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from January 1st, 1904, accrued and to accrue up to the time of the delivery of the referee's deed, and to any foreclosure thereof that may be instituted, with the costs; subject also to the restrictive covenants contained in the instrument recorded in Liber 906, Conveyances, Page 273, in the office of the Register of the County of New York affecting the westerly five feet only of the mortgaged premises, and subject also to an encroachment by the easterly wall of the building on the premises adjoining on the west to the extent of about three inches on the mortgaged premises; to an encroachment by the southerly wall of the building and shed on the premises adjoining on the north to the extent of about ten inches on the mortgaged premises; to variations between the location of the retaining and yard walls and the record lines, and to the projection over the mortgaged premises of the window sills of the building on premises adjoining on the north; all as shown by survey made by George C. Hollerith, dated January 23d, 1898.

DENOUNCE CARBOLIC RULE.

Druggists Will Ask Health Department to Relax Restrictions.

Pharmacists all over the city are preparing to descend on Health Commissioner Darlington in earnest protest against his recent amendment to the Sanitary Code prohibiting the sale of carbolic acid at retail except in the form of 4 or 5 per cent. solution. The Kings County Pharmaceutical Association has already appointed a committee to arrange with other pharmacists' organizations in the greater city for a common appeal.

The complaint of the druggists is that the prohibition of the sale of the acid, while it will not accomplish its purpose, that of making suicides more difficult, will inflict a great hardship on the public, who use carbolic acid more than any other agent for disinfectant purposes. At the same time they assert that an intending suicide can go to a wholesale drug house and by the acid in the original package without question, and a child can do this as easily as an adult.

In the notice of the new carbolic acid regulation it is stated that, while the Department of Health does not desire to pursue the drug trade particularly, if carbolic bottles bearing the name of a drug firm are found by the Coroner's office by the side of suicides, the department will take action against such druggist through the District Attorney's office.

Gale at Sea Was Heavy.

All of the ocean-going vessels that arrived yesterday reported that the gale of Wednesday night covered a wide area of the ocean and was one of the fiercest that seafaring men have weathered in many months. The reports showed that a great many of the small sailing craft suffered, and many of the vessels reported sighting schooners at anchor repairing damage to their sails and spars.

BANKERS CHEER NEGRO DENYING RACE HATRED

John Mitchell, Jr., of Richmond, Makes Eloquent Appeal to Convention.

NOT READY FOR HEAVEN

So, Speaker Says, Colored Man, Having Tried Religion, Turns to Finance—International Clearing House.

"There is no clash between the white man of the South and the negro of my class!"

The members of the Bankers' Association turned as one man to see the speaker. The proceedings of the convention in the Waldorf-Astoria ballroom were about to end. From the very last row of seats, where for three days he had remained unnoticed among the hundreds of delegates, a light-complexioned negro had risen to talk. Without waiting for the Chair to recognize him formally, he had launched two or three rapid-fire sentences before the big audience realized that it was listening to an eloquent appeal by a man who could hold his own against any of his auditors.

The speaker was John Mitchell, Jr., President of the Mechanics' Savings Bank of Richmond, Va. For half an hour, except in the intervals of applause that followed almost every period, he spoke of the negro problem, the friendship of the best elements in both races, the rise of the black man in recent years, and his hopes for the future of the South. And when he had finished and was being cheered and congratulated on all sides, the bankers were roused to new enthusiasm by a response from one of the South's best-known financiers, Col. Robert J. Lowry of Atlanta.

"I am delighted to hear from my Southern brother," said the white man. "There is no fight, no hostility, between his class and my race in Georgia—or anywhere else. I am glad to hear this gentleman from Virginia. I am a Southern man bred and born, but I love one part of this country as well as another. The gentleman is right in what he says."

Mr. Mitchell's speech was entirely outside the programme. It would never have been made but for a remark in the address of an Atlanta banker, R. F. Maddox, on Thursday. In speaking of Southern conditions Mr. Maddox had said:

"We people of the South believe there is a middle course between social equality and lynching. The one is contrary to the law of nature, and the other contrary to the law of the land. Both tend to elevate the negro above his sphere and separate him from his friends."

The bankers, when they heard this on Thursday, manifested no inclination to smile at the play on words, and it was thought that the incident had been passed unnoticed, or at least unaccentuated. Mr. Mitchell, however, planned to make his associates take notice that his race had a defense, and while he neither abused nor took direct exception to the views of any Southern white man, he made it plain that he was reproving Mr. Maddox.

ACTED ON ADVICE.

"I came to this convention," said the negro banker, "after I had consulted with white men. I would not have come, if you please, unless they had advised it. 'I love the white man. There is no quarrel between me and him. I want to say to you, gentlemen, that I expected the best treatment.

"I am proud of the South. I have served on the Democratic Committee at my home. You men of business told us negroes to eschew politics and take to business. Before that we had tried religion first, but we had found we weren't ready for heaven. Then we had tried politics, but after thirty years you drew us out of that. Now we have tried finance and business. Here we expect no discrimination. A man is judged by his worth.

"The colored man is respected just in proportion as he respects himself. That is so in the South, as it is elsewhere. We have found that the way for us to reach success and respect is through finance. Nowhere in the domain of business have I found the white man other than ready to help us upward. Therefore I expected a welcome when I came here among you, I found myself here. I wondered if at last I had reached heaven—except that they say the streets of heaven are golden, while here the chairs are gold."

Raising his hand to stop the laughter and applause, he continued:

"The negro leaders are the only block to our advance. We'd like to run them out, to throw them into the trash heap. There is no fight between the intelligent white man and the intelligent negro. Listen to Mr. Brown's great oratory! (Mr. Brown was a North Carolina speaker at a previous session of the convention.) Does not the negro love it? Does not he love to hear the voice of that distinguished Kentuckian (Col. Powers) who spoke in the fight we had over the bonding plan?

"When you hear a white man get up here and talk about the negro with a future to solve, he means the loafing negro. He don't mean the negro of our kind. We are just as much against the other kind as he is. I want you to know that, Sir."

He said there were ten negro banks in the South, and none elsewhere, continuing:

"And not one of those ten can exist without the authority of the Southern white men. Their aggregate capital is $230,000 and their deposits $300,000."

Reviewing the statistics of negro activity for the last year Mr. Mitchell recalled that the workers of his race had produced a large part of the wheat, the tobacco, the cotton, and the other staples of the country. He dropped into dialect as he talked so fast that his hearers had a hard time to keep up with him.

INDUSTRY OF THE NEGRO.

"Don't you know it's true?" he would say, as he gave each figure. The total production of the race in the South amounted to $232,437,515.89 in the year, not taking account of rice and hay and buckwheat.

"Doesn't it demonstrate that we are bread winners?" he cried.

"Now, our friend from Georgia—" he began. He paused and seemed to decide not to mention a particular case. "Ah, I like to hear a white man talk," he continued. "No matter what he is talking about, there's something musical in his voice, even when he's abusing us. How I'd like to hear the white man talk! Look at our beautiful Secretary, Mr. Branch—"

The rest of this was drowned by the applause.

"We in the South suffer from the hoodlum classes in both races. I want you to know that the negro is working out his own—his own—salvation. The colored race now owns $490,000,000 worth of property in the South, and more than $700,000,000 worth in the United States. When you think that the white business men of the South are opposed to us, you are wrong. The only kick over us is about our politics, and most of that comes from the lower class of white men. It doesn't amount to anything coming from them.

"I am proud of the white men of the South, and I like to hear them talk. And when I hear them abuse us—when the last day comes, the sunset sheds its last light on our earthly work, I shall say: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.'"

As the speaker sat down the bankers rose and cheered, the women in the balconies clapped their hands and waved handkerchiefs, and dozens of the delegates rushed back toward the negro banker, crowding around him, shaking his hand, and complimenting him on his address. It was then that Col. Lowry of Atlanta made his reply, and all the Southern members joined in the cheering that followed.

"I am sure," said President F. G. Bigelow, when quiet was restored, "that Mr. Mitchell must see he has thrown no shadow over our proceedings during his stay here. No one has been better received than he, and it is plain from his speech that in the matter of oratory there is no color line in the Southern States."

The principal address in the day's programme was delivered by Ellis H. Roberts, Treasurer of the United States, on "The Strength and Weakness of American Finance." In view of Mr. Roberts's position, the bankers listened to his utterances as more or less official. He said in part:

"The Nation now stands on a granite base of credit, and over the door of the Treasury may be inscribed, 'We are not borrowing here.'

"The stronghold of our financial system is its actual gold, as well as our statutes. The world has about $5,500,000,000 of this metal, of which the United States has in its stock $1,342,422,740. In the last reported year the world produced less than $300,000,000, of which our mines gave $80,000,000. Our Treasury holds $700,000,000 in gross, and our banks, National and other, have $300,000,000, approximately. So over one-fifth of all the world's gold is in the United States, and the bulk of it in the banks and the Treasury. The increase in gold in both forms in our currency in five years has been just less than $300,000,000, ($299,853,457,) and in the past year, from Aug. 1 to Aug. 1, $157,727,920. The charge is put forth, often in spirit and sometimes in words, that we are extravagant and wasteful in the possession of so much of the precious metal. Are we?

"It is a question whether the supply of yellow metal in this country and in the world is in excess. That problem is important and far-reaching. We are to note that gold here is in the ratio of $23.19 to the total currency, while in Great Britain it is 70; in France, 62.12; in Germany, 66.10; in Russia, 87.71, and in Austria-Hungary, 68.90. In all these countries combined gold is 69.6 to the total circulation. If the world's experience is to be accepted, our gold is not in excess, although our whole volume of money may be too great."

Speaking of international movements of money and the need of a clearing house for all the great nations, Mr. Roberts said:

"Why should this treasure be carted back and forth between nations, as the banks of this and other cities used to deliver money to each other? Is it not possible to frame a system by which only the differences may be paid in metal at proper intervals? Surely it would be cheaper to pay the balances than the gross sums, as the clearing houses daily testify.

INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION.

"Why cannot an international clearing house be organized? Perhaps jealousy will forbid the selection of a single city for the purpose, as the Greek cities were rivals for the deposit of the offerings to Apollo. The international organization may well have its vaults in London, Paris, and Berlin, as well as in New York, and the treasure can be divided in the ratio of the gold of the several countries. The certificates of the four vaults can be interchangeable. The barbarism of shipping kegs of metal east and west over the Atlantic may go with the method of the mummies and the cave-dwellers."

After an address on "Credit Indemnity: Its Value to the Banker," by W. E. Schweppe of St. Louis, the convention closed with the election of these officers:

President—E. F. Swinney, President of the First National Bank of Kansas City, Mo.

Vice President—John L. Hamilton, Vice President of Hamilton and Cunningham, Hoopeston, Ill.

Members of the Executive Council for three years—G. S. Whitson, Vice President of the National City Bank, New York City; Clark Williams, Vice President of the United States Mortgage and Trust Company of New York; John Perrin, of the American National Bank, Indianapolis; Grier Hirsch of the York National Bank, York, Penn., and J. T. Dismukes, President of the First National Bank, St. Augustine, Fla.

Members of the Executive Council chosen by State Delegates—E. R. Fancher, cashier of the Union National Bank, Cleveland, Ohio; T. J. Fletcher, cashier of the First National Bank, Marshalltown, Iowa; L. B. Farley, cashier of the Merchants and Planters' National Bank, Montgomery, Ala.; William George, President of the Illinois Bankers' Association, Aurora, Ill., and F. E. Marshall, Vice President of the National Bank of Commerce, St. Louis, Mo.

In addition to these officers, a Vice President was chosen for each State. The Executive Council met later and made Mr. Whitson of the National City Banak of New York its Chairman. Before adjourning the delegates presented a fine punch bowl to the retiring President. Mr. Bigelow, and listened to a few words from the only two living charter members, William G. Deshler of Columbus, Ohio, and L. B. Murray of Louisville, Ky. The association was founded in 1875 by fourteen men.

It was announced last night that the next meeting probably would be held in Washington, D. C. This was a surprise to the Westerners, who had been working to have their section honored in 1905.

The second section of the theatre party of the American Bankers' Association was at the Knickerbocker last evening to see Lulu Glaser in "A Madcap Princess." The house was crowded to the doors, and the number of visiting bankers and their friends wanting to see the performance was so great that after the three floors of the theatre had been filled many were sent to near-by theatres. Before the performance Miss Glaser held a reception on the stage, and she was the guest at a supper at the Waldorf after the performance, attended by the officers of the association and their wives.

The New Black Suits for Fall Wear at $15.

From every quarter people are hurrying back to town. And along with them comes the half worn Summer wardrobe, soon to be replenished with the new Autumn styles. Black suggests itself first, after the gayer summer colors. Here's a showing of men's black suits that we really feel proud of. Six distinct models in the new double breasted sack suits (double breasted is going to be very popular) and an equal number in single breasted models. The styles are radically different from last season's, but one thing is the same as usual about Vogel Brothers' clothes—they fit with a nicety that the critical man demands, and they are tailored to hold shape and with a style that is distinctly superior to ordinary ready-made clothes.

Twelve single and double breasted sack suit models made of black cheviots, black thibets and undressed cheviots, $15.

GIRL RUNS AWAY TO CONVENT.

Judge Refuses to Say Whether She Shall Obey Father or Mother.

Frieda Carty, fourteen years old, of 2,777 Eighth Avenue, was arraigned in the Children's Court yesterday on complaint of her mother, who charged her with running away from home. Mrs. Carty belongs to the Lutheran Church, while the daughter prefers the religion of her father, who is a Roman Catholic.

On Sept. 7 Frieda told her mother she was going to her two aunts at 22 Sterling Place, Brooklyn, arrangements having been made to send her to a convent. Mrs. Carty locked the girl in the house. Frieda, however, got away, and Mrs. Carty got a warrant from Judge Olmsted, in the Children's Court, for her arrest. She was found in a convent at Brentwood, Long Island.

Meanwhile former Police Commissioner Bernard J. York told Judge Olmsted that the girl was satisfied and that her father was willing for her to be in a convent. When the case came up before Judge Olmsted yesterday he would not decide which parent the daughter must obey. The mother was advised to secure a writ of habeas corpus and have the case tried in the Supreme Court.

BROOKS LED BROOKLYN RAID.

Police from This Side Crossed River to Smash Into Poolroom.

For the second time in three weeks the Manhattan police went over to Brooklyn yesterday to make a raid. They descended on an alleged poolroom in Moore Street, just off Broadway, one of the busiest parts of that borough, and took six prisoners out of over a hundred men and boys found in the place, and confiscated a lot of the usual poolroom fixings. The raid was made over the heads of Inspector Sylvester Baldwin and Capt. Bernard J. Hayes of the Stagg Street Station.

Detectives Hooker and Callanan of Inspector Brooks's staff had been to the place half a dozen times to see what was going on. They saw scores of men and boys go in and out daily, and when they got enough evidence Inspector Brooks headed the raiding party, all in civilian clothing. The alleged lookout, Oscar Kolsky, who was in front, drew a "billy," but the detectives soon subdued him and burst in the main door.

There was a scramble for windows and other exits, but the inspector and his men drew their revolvers.

"You stop, or we shoot!" commanded Inspector Brooks, and the scrambling ended. The detectives then picked out the men they wanted, who were:

James Crawford, the alleged proprietor; Adolph Hurafield and Daniel Henry, alleged to have been accepting money for bets; William Howard, who was said to be operating the telephone, and William Hines, who was alleged to have been posting the names of horses, jockeys, and the prices. Kolsky was the sixth prisoner. The rest of the hundred or more were let go.

Inspector Baldwin and Capt. Hayes were dumfounded when the Manhattan Inspector and his prisoners reached the station house. It was said by the Inspector that a game of "Klondike" was going on in the place besides the alleged poolselling.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

ADMIRAL SCHLEY'S volume of naval reminiscences may be said to open the Fall book season on this side of the Atlantic. It may not have quite as many readers as the new letters of "Old Gorgon Graham" or "The Sequil" to "The Real Diary of a Real Bad Boy," but it will surely receive more of the public attention than the ordinary autobiography or book of recollections can hope to attract. As Mr. Spears's lucid and kindly review shows, it is a clearly told, and, withal, a modestly told, tale of a brilliantly distinguished life. Admiral Schley had had his memorable triumphs in the navy long before the Spanish war of 1898. There is no reason, in noting the publication of Schley's book, for reopening the famous controversy. In a literary review it is well to avoid the disputes of the hour, and, as Mr. Spears intimates, men who have already made up their minds about the merits of the controversy, one way or the other, are not likely to change them now. But Admiral Schley shirks nothing and is guilty of no evasion in the statement of his case, which is frank, clear, and complete.

The number of books of autobiography, biography, and personal reminiscence to be published this Autumn and Winter, to which we referred last week, swells as the complete lists of the English and American publishers begin to come in. Lady Burne-Jones has edited the "Memorials of Sir Edward Burne-Jones," which should be a valuable book. A volume of interesting gossip and anecdote should be Moy Thomas's Life of Sir John Richard Robinson, called "Fifty Years of Fleet Street." Robinson was for many years an editor of The London Daily News. Notable autobiographies will be Prof. Vambery's "Story of My Struggles" and "Bygones Worth Remembering." The second part of [illegible] of Rocky Ramp and Betty Wales. We could not [illegible] George J. Holyoake's "Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life." Prof. Goldwin Smith's "My Memory of Gladstone" will soon be published. Louise Imogen Guiney has written a biography of Richard Hurrell Froude, the historian's brother, and one of the leaders in the Oxford movement. C. M. Atkinson is the author of a new Life of Jeremy Bentham. The "Letters and Literary Remains of J. H. Shorthouse," the author of "John Inglesant," will be accompanied by a memoir written by his widow.

A biography of George Frederick Watts, the painter, is a certainty, but nothing is known of it yet, not even the author's name. It is known that Watts made all the necessary arrangements for the work before his death. His letters and papers must be full of rich material. He was in touch with the English art world and a conspicuous figure in it for sixty years. He was the friend of many of the most prominent Englishmen in politics, science, and letters for half a century. He was the associate of the Pre-Raphaelites. His own personality was fascinating, and he was one of the greatest men of his time.

Mr. John Cotton Dana of the Newark Library was conspicuous in the proceedings of the recent conference of the British Library Association at Newcastle-on-Tyne. He spoke in favor of the librarian entering the field of criticism. He expressed his belief in official library lists of books accounted of value by the librarian. Librarians were inevitably regarded by the people as literary censors, he declared, and they should not hesitate to put trustworthy information before the public. Mr. Dana believes that in a few years public libraries of a million volumes will exist. In this country, he said, there are now 40,000,000 people with the reading faculty, but only 10,000,000 do the reading. The 30,000,000 are all coming into the reading field. Within a few years 5,000,000 copies of a popular book may be sold in six months of its publication. These are showy figures, but Mr. Dana is something more than an enthusiast in library work. He evidently is not alarmed, as is the President of the British Library Association, Dr. Thomas Hodgkin, by the perils of a "book-choked world," and does not fear that the "human intellect" may be "snowed under."

Mr. Barry Pain is one of the representatives of the British new humor who, we fancy, is not very well known on this side of the Atlantic. His "Playthings and Parodies" is less familiar here than the comic books of Jerome K. Jerome or even the parodies of Owen Seaman of Punch. His fantastical story "The Octave of Claudius" is hardly known at all. But Mr. Pain's humorous writings have pleased many readers in England for a dozen years or more. He has now written a serious novel, "Lindley Kays," which has been cordially received, and is sure to cross the ocean, for there is always a good market here for novels. Mr. W. L. Alden, in his letter from London this week, calls this story of the struggles of a poor young man in London an admirable piece of work, containing much of real beauty and true pathos. Mr. Pain may be encouraged to devote himself exclusively to novel writing hereafter. But at present he is employing his talent on the compilation of a new kind of "Birthday Book"—a "black" one, he calls it—containing highly uncomplimentary quotations for each day in the year. This may supply a "long-felt want."

The London Academy, commenting upon somebody's tale of the hard work Balzac had to find suitable names for the personages in his books, puts the question if much depends on the name of a character in fiction. "Would not Mr. Micawber be as delightful with any other name?" asks The Academy. Certainly not. He could not possibly be named other than Micawber. Could Washington be named Wellington? The Academy suggests "the psychology of names in fiction" as an interesting study. It asks if we could transfer the

ADMIRAL SCHLEY.

His Spirited and Interesting Account of His Long and Brilliantly Distinguished Naval Career.*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW by

JOHN RANDOLPH SPEARS,

Author of "The Port of Missing Ships" and "Our Navy in the War with Spain."

FROM one point of view Rear Admiral W. S. Schley's "Forty-five Years Under the Flag" is the most valuable contribution to the history of the American Navy that has been written in many a year. For, with the exception of one other officer—Elliot, who was second in command at the battle of Lake Erie in the War of 1812—no one in the navy has been the centre of such a bitter controversy as he has been, and it was necessary for the guidance of future historians of the navy that he should have every opportunity to say everything he could say in describing the events in which he had part and in resisting the accusations of "reprehensible conduct" that were made against him. In the book of 433 pages, exclusive of index and preliminary matter, the Rear Admiral has now "had his say," and he has included some valuable documents relating to the war with Spain that were not readily available save through a visit to Washington.

It is probable that every reader of this book, unless he be thoroughly familiar with the history of the navy, will be astonished at the number of notable cruises in which the Rear Admiral had part in the course of his forty-five years' service. Like many another sailor, Schley was taken with the seagoing fever through reading Marryat's works, and in 1856, when seventeen years of age, he was appointed a cadet at the Naval Academy from the Fifth Congressional District of Maryland, and was graduated on June 10, 1860, his warrant as midshipman bearing the names of President James Buchanan and Secretary of the Navy Isaac Toucey.

Thereupon Schley was ordered to the steam frigate Niagara, which had been detailed to carry home the Japanese embassy that visited the United States just after Commodore M. C. Perry's famous "opening" of the island kingdom of great modern renown. To add to the interest which the presence of the Japanese gave to the cruise was the fact that the Niagara was a new, and, properly speaking, an untried kind of warship. Of the same class as the Minnesota and the Merrimac, she was at once a full rigged sailing ship and a steamer, while her battery consisted of 11-inch Dahlgren guns—the most powerful gun afloat at the time. "There was much feeling among older naval constructors of that day distinctly unfavorable to the Niagara," says Schley, and Bush, a British author of the day, in his "Navies of the World" speaks contemptuously of her. But Schley found her a most comfortable ship, and so swift under canvas that she "passed everything both ways." What she could do as a fighting machine was to be shown in the civil war. The voyage was therefore a most successful trial trip of a type of warship that was distinctly American.

In her return home the Niagara left Cape Town in March, 1861, and she reached Cape Cod early in May, where a pilot named Dolliver came on board with his pockets full of newspapers. The Captain asked for the news with such eager anxiety that the pilot stopped to ask where the Niagara had come from, whether "anything at all" had been heard, and then in a way "so memorable and dramatic that its bluntness in words can be excused," he said:

"Why, Captain, the country's all busted to hell."

The civil war was on, and the officers of the Niagara were called upon to decide whether they would stand by the old flag or not. A new oath of allegiance was presented to all the crew. Schley was from Maryland. A number of the officers refused to take the new oath, but he, with a look at the ship's ensign, which he could see through a hatch, chose the better part, and was a little later rejoiced to receive a letter from his father advising him to take the course he had already chosen.

Schley's first service in the civil war was on the blockade off Charleston, whence he was sent North on a prize, the General Parkhill, the first square-rigged ship captured. Thence he was transferred to the Gulf, where he served under Farragut, eventually. He tells with delight how an old Quartermaster—speaking for the old sailors of the squadron—hoped the department would "pick out Cap'n Davy Farragut" when a new flag officer was to be chosen, because it "Davy [illegible] out," came down. "It wouldn't be long till this fort was flying."

Schley was under fire for the first time on the night of Dec. 28, 1862, when a blockade runner was run ashore near Fort Morgan. Schley volunteered to go with a party sent to destroy the vessel, and he found "the sound of projectiles whistling over the boats an entirely novel sensation." This did not prevent his volunteering in the following month, even though the second expedition took him where a preceding party had been cut to pieces and really whipped.

From the blockade the Potomac was sent to Vera Cruz, where the English, French and Spanish were making a powerful demonstration against Mexico. The story of this trip is interesting because Schley heard a British Commodore say that "he had confidently expected in ten days after his arrival at Vera Cruz to have had his squadron in operation against ours."

In July, 1862, Schley was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant and made executive officer of the gunboat Winona, and in her he eventually went to the Mississippi, where she was detailed on patrol duty, and where she had a lot of sharp fighting with the light artillery batteries with which the Confederates haunted the levees. Schley notes that it was Farragut's work in the Mississippi River which first demonstrated conclusively the advantages of having guns aloft, and led to the development of the modern military top.

The most important action of the war in which Schley had part was when he was for a time in command of the Monongahela. He was sent up to bombard one of the works at Port Hudson. While firing on the fort, signals were hoisted on the flagship to recall him, but he could not read them, and kept on firing until the fort was silenced. When he reported on board the flagship, he says Farragut said sternly:

"Captain, you begin early in life to disobey orders;" and when Schley tried to explain about the signals that were seen but could not be read, the Admiral said he "wanted none of this Nelson business in his squadron about not seeing signals." Afterward, however, when in the cabin, the Admiral said to him:

"Do it again, whenever in your judgment it is necessary to carry out your conception of duty."

These words of Farragut are emphasized by the author, who says he "has always believed that the secret of all important success was dependence upon the responsible judgment of an officer on the spot," and that "if circumstances compelled him to disobey his orders to achieve signal success," such disobedience was a virtue.

In saying that by the opening of the Mississippi River "the great dream of Admiral Farragut was realized," Schley is in error. Farragut wanted to go from New Orleans to Mobile, and thence to every other Gulf port, which he could have closed effectually within six months. But the department, of which Assistant Secretary Fox was the executive officer, kept him butting sandbars until Mobile was rendered all but impregnable. It was the army that made the opening of the Mississippi possible.

Before the war ended Schley was sent off to the Pacific on the Wateree, and saw service in some of the revolutionary fighting in Central America. In 1866 he was at the Naval Academy as teacher of Spanish, and it is the memory of one who was then a cadet that Schley could teach more of the language in a single lesson than others of the teachers could in a week. He was made a Lieutenant Commander on July 25, 1866.

In 1870 he was made executive officer of the Benecia and sent to the China station. There, under Rear Admiral John Rodgers, he had a part in the attack on the Korean forts on the Salee River. His account of this affair in connection with that in Cullum's "History of the Marine Corps" makes one of the most interesting of the half forgotten stories of the navy's achievements. It appears that in the fight where McKee fell Schley for the first time killed a man in personal combat.

An interesting item in the political history of the Nation is found in Schley's reference to the Tilden-Hayes imbroglio of 1876. Schley was on the Essex, and he says she was under orders to keep her bunkers full of coal and her magazine full of ammunition for use in case the Tildenites should assert themselves by the proposed gathering at Washington.

Early in 1877 Schley, commanding the Essex, went to Vera Cruz and saw Porfirio Diaz make a triumphal entry into that city and proceed to the capital, where he has since ruled the Mexicans well.

Skipping over a whole volume of good sailor stories, which cannot be mentioned for want of space, one comes to the account of the expedition for the relief of Lieut. Greely in the arctic region. In the account of this expedition which Schley published at the time, he was too modest to do the writing himself, but obtained the services of a professional writer. But the account in the present work shows that the former one would have been no worse had the commander done the work alone. In fact, the official report which Schley wrote, and which is one of the rarer public documents to be found in second-hand book stores, is by no means a dry statement of facts. One of the stock stories of the wardrooms of the navy told how Schley said, when he heard about an army man going to the arctic region, that some unfortunate naval officer would have to go up there to bring them back, little dreaming that he would be the one selected for the hard task.

Schley at this time ranked as Commander, having been promoted in regular course on June 10, 1874. For his excellent work in the last he was placed in charge of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting in the Navy Department at Washington, a post but recently vacated by Rear Admiral Hart English. It was a most responsible post, because the reader will remember the building of the new navy had begun in 1883. Of what he did there but one thing can be mentioned here. Schley urged upon the Department the advisability of opening a way for the promotion of capable men from the forecastle to the quarter-deck—something that ought not to be forgotten. On March 31, 1888, Schley reached the rank of Captain, and on June 20, 1889, was ordered to the command of the famous cruiser Baltimore. This ship, on her first cruise on high water, carried the remains of John Ericsson to Sweden.

A cruise to the Pacific followed, and it was while the Baltimore was at Valparaiso on Oct. 16, 1891, that the mob, led by the police, made the infamous attack on a part of her crew (115) that had been allowed to go ashore for a day's liberty. Two of the crew were killed. The attack was reported to Schley by a merchant Captain who was so indignant that he urged Schley to open fire on the town forthwith. Many naval officers thought, and still think, that a more summary procedure in demanding retribution for the outrage would have commanded the respect of the cowards who made and supported the attack. But Schley would not listen to the cruel suggestion of an immediate attack on the city, and every one who believes that weak nations should be treated leniently will commend Schley's course—particularly after reading his account of the affair. Moreover, the crew of the ship presented him with a gold-headed cane when he was detached.

The fact that Schley had had such important commands as those enumerated shows that he was a marked man in the Navy Department—one who was trusted and kept in mind for important duty. And this view is confirmed when it is found that he was chosen, though in rank but a Captain, for the command of what was called the Flying Squadron, when the war with Spain was at hand. To his work in the war with Spain, and to the controversy that ensued, the Rear Admiral devotes 177 pages of his memoirs. It is by no means possible to offer here even a summary of his account and arguments. But the Rear Admiral goes into the matter in full detail, and he has the courage to publish in full the charges and finding of the Court of Inquiry. Those who have read the accounts and arguments in the newspapers will accept or refuse to accept the accounts and arguments of this book according to their previous information and predilections. The friends of the Rear Admiral will be made more enthusiastic, very likely, by the book. The historian of the future, with the full report of the Court of Inquiry, and the other published documents relating to the Spanish war, and this memoir of the Rear Admiral in hand, will be fully prepared to write an impartial story that will do exact justice to all who had part in the work off the Cuban coast, even though the statements of various officers are often not to be understood save on the harsh theory that some one is guilty of falsehood.

It is not too much to say that Schley's book is not only a most valuable but it is a most interesting account of a memorable life in the American navy.

JOHN R. SPEARS.

WRITERS AND VERITIES.

SHELBURNE ESSAYS. By Paul Elmer More. First Series. 12mo. Pp. 253. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, The Knickerbocker Press. $1.25.

Mr. More's essays make a volume worth while. All but one of them have appeared in various periodicals. Many of the papers are revisions, but all of them take a wider scope than is customary with reviewers, and most of them go somewhat deeper and bring in more background. The first essay is on Thoreau, the second on "The Solitude of Nathaniel Hawthorne." In this Mr. More uses as his lever a sermon he heard once in the little English church at Interlaken, the text of it the cry of the Christ on the cross, "Why hast Thou forsaken me?"—a strange theme to lay before an audience of Summer idlers. The story hints, says Mr. More, at the predominant trait of Hawthorne's work.

That trait, the deep sense of the tragic isolation of soul from soul, is traced in "The Scarlet Letter," in "The Marble Faun," in "The House of Seven Gables," in the "Essay on Hawthorne and Poe" Mr. More propounds a theory to explain the pre-eminence of these two not only in America, but in the school of the "weird."

Other essays deal with Emersonianism as distinguished from Emerson, of the spirit of Carlyle, which Mr. More thinks was fairly caught by Froude despite the wild alarums Froude's biography has raised, of the science of English verse, in which he seems to talk excellent good sense; of Arthur Symons and his "decadent" poems, of the Epic of Ireland. The last is, of course, Lady Gregory's "Cuchlain of Muirthemne," which Mr. More explains to the general reader in a manner for which the latter is likely to be grateful, for he is so thoughtful as to summarize the cloudy story and appendix, moreover, a short glossary which enables one to get a reasonably serviceable notion of how to pronounce the Irish epic names, otherwise mere letter puzzles. Then he talks of young Irish poets, W. B. Yeats and the late Lionel Johnson, and finally switches off to Tolstoy and his barbaric answer to the question, "What Is Art?" What Mr. More says about this subject is sensible.

MIRABEAU.

The Genevese Etienne Dumont's "Souvenir" Translated by Lady Seymour.*

ABOUT this Genevese, Etienne Dumont, who wrote some of Mirabeau's speeches for him, (there were many others who had the like honor,) very eminent opinions differ. His "Souvenir sur Mirabeau" was published in 1832. Carlyle, who adopted many anecdotes and other material from Dumont, said he was "faithful, veridical within his own limits he has even a certain amount of picturesqueness and light clearness." The sage exclaimed, however, at the "whim he had of looking at the great Mirabeau as a thing set in motion mainly by him (M. Dumont) and such as he," so that it "became on all sides that here again a great pretender had been stripped * * * that, in fact, this enormous Mirabeau, the sound of whom went forth to all lands, was no other than an enormous trumpet of coach horn of Japanned tin, through which this dextrous little M. Dumont was blowing all the time and making the noise." On the other hand Macaulay, in The Edinburgh Review for July, 1832, wrote in this fashion:

M. Dumont was one of those persons whose fame belongs in an especial manner to mankind * * * Though no man was more capable of achieving for himself a separate and independent renown, he attached himself to others, he labored to raise their fame, he was content to receive as his share of the reward the mere overflowings, which redounded from the full measure of their glory. Not that he was of a servile and idolatrous habit of mind; not that he was one of the tribe of Boswells, those literary Gibeonites born to be hewers of wood and drawers of water to the higher intellectual castes.

Thus he furnished "arguments and eloquence to Mirabeau," furnished it and kept mum at the time. Macaulay says further that "the view which M. Dumont has presented us unostentatiously and we may say unconsciously of his own character" seems to him to approach "nearer perfection than any of the Grandisons and Allworthys of fiction."

Reading after Dumont, in the translation of Lady Seymour, the first rendering of the work as a whole into English, one will incline rather to Carlyle's view of him, though Lady Seymour herself takes Macaulay's attitude in her preface. Though the cream of the book was long ago skimmed off by Carlyle, there is much of interest in being conducted, almost personally, by M. Dumont into the secrets of a great man's greatness, and getting in a measure, though in no large measure, behind the scenes of one of the greatest dramas of modern times. M. Dumont admits that as he looks back and considers the opportunities he had, he wonders how he managed to see so little. But he saw very clearly, and it is his "faithful veridical" telling about it which makes the value of his memoir.

Dumont, who was a preacher in Geneva, got involved in the political troubles of that town in 1783, and went to St. Petersburg, where he was pastor of a Protestant church for eighteen months. In 1785 he went to London to undertake the education of the son of the Marquis of Lansdowne. In 1788, going to Paris with Sir Samuel Romilly, he met Mirabeau, then somewhat in disesteem in the society of the French capital. The three were much together, and Dumont was charmed by the Count. In 1789 he was in Paris again on political business connected with the revolution of that year in his native town. The famous States General was assembling and "getting constituted." Dumont met Mirabeau again. Mirabeau was just then neglected by the Assembly, and he was very bitter against the members on that account.

He believed, or pretended to believe, that he was "ostracized" on account of his superior talents, but he meant to impress on the Assembly the fact that he was a power with which it must reckon, that the nation held him of account, and that his influence would be a weight in the balance. In the midst of these explosions of anger and bravado I could easily perceive that he was genuinely grieved, and tears of vexation were in his eyes. I chose a favorable moment to soothe his wounded pride, and represented to him frankly that his first appearance had offended every one; that there was nothing more disadvantageous for a member who wished to aspire to a high place than to be the editor of a newspaper, and that to criticise the Assembly was certainly not the way to make himself popular, and that if, like myself, he had lived in the Republic, he would understand the give-and-take of different parties, and would not give away so hurriedly to despair.

Dumont and another Genevese, Duroveral, with Clavière and others, soon fell into the way of doing the hack-work of speech writing for Mirabeau, composing even the famous peroration urging for the title of the Assembly the name "Deputies of the French people." He, with Duroveral, also wrote Mirabeau's letters to his constituents, and the same two wrote for him his newspaper, Courrier de Provence, which gave an account of doings in the Assembly and was at first immensely successful. But there was a woman in it, Mme. le Jay, wife of the publisher. Says Dumont:

At the end of four months, when we wished to look over the accounts, we found that there were none. Mme. le Jay had hidden the books, she had furnished her house with the profits, and stocked her shop, which, from having been a wretched little newspaper depôt, had become a regular library; everything pointed to her having attained an opulent position, but she had absorbed the whole profits of the undertaking and refused to disgorge what was due to us. I left the task of unravelling all these worries to Duroveral. Quarrelling was not my strong point; business matters did not interest me, and I did not understand them. Mirabeau was placed between two batteries; he was irritated by Mme. le Jay's dishonesty, and one day said to her in my presence: "Mme. le Jay, if honesty did not exist, it would be necessary to invent it in order to attain riches." But Mme. le Jay had different ideas of morality, and Mirabeau's connection with this clever and capable woman prevented his taking a high line with her. She was in possession of all his secrets; she knew too many anecdotes about him, and was too dangerous and wicked for him to dare to quarrel with her.

They decided to give up the paper, whereupon "the too dangerous and wicked Mme. le Jay," bereft of editors, sought to get Dumont to leave the others and write the paper. He refused with some display of virtuous indignation.

"Very well," she said. "You have brought it on yourself. I am sorry for it. But we live in a civilised town and there are other authors besides you. I have already received proposals from them." She therefore visited all the writers she knew, and proposed to them to contribute to what she considered was her newspaper, for she looked upon it as her own property as much as if it were landed estate and we her laborers.

Mr. Dumont reverts to the Assembly and the fact that at this time the sympathy of Europe was with the democratic side.

One may say that in Europe every one except the nobility had trembled for the fate of the Commons, and had felt that their deliverance was that of humanity itself. It was a trial at the bar between the human race and the usurping and dominant classes. The unhappy events that were fatal to the revolution now throw a dark shadow even on its cradle; one is ashamed to have admired at its commencement a cause that one was forced to hate in its further progress; but an impartial historian must remember that at this time there was a general ferment of frenzied hopes and that the enthusiasm excited by the greatness of the occasion caused an insensibility to disorders which were looked on as unhappy accidents in the national triumph. Could the whole scaffolding of an antique and ruinous edifice collapse without wounding some unfortunate and obstinate people who would persist in trying to prop it up? This was the opinion held by the best minds in Europe, the greatest philosophers, all the best philanthropists, and the friends of liberty. If it was an error, it was a universal one. England, as the freest and noblest of them all, declared herself more strongly than other countries.

At this point it is well to observe that save for some months spent in France as Mirabeau's hack and mentor, in 1789-90, and some in 1791, when he was attached to Talleyrand, M. Dumont spent most of his later life in England. From the time he left Paris in 1791 till 1814 he lived in London and was the coadjutor of Jeremy Bentham. Maria Edgeworth in her letters speaks of his social qualities. He died in 1829.

He thus speaks of the drawing up by the French National Assembly of the "famous declaration of the Rights of Man."

It was an American idea, and there was hardly any one who did not consider such a declaration an indispensable preliminary. I well recall this long debate which lasted for weeks, as a time of appalling dullness; useless discussions over words, metaphysical clap-trap, overwhelming garrulity. After rejecting several suggestions a committee of five was charged to draw up a new project. Mirabeau, one of the five, with his usual generosity, undertook the work and then gave the job to one of his friends. We found ourselves therefore, with Duroveral, Clavière and himself disputing, adding a word here, effacing some there, wearing ourselves out with this absurd task and, at last, producing a piece of patchwork of supposed "Natural Rights," which never had had any existence. During the course of this melancholy composition I reflected on many things for the first time. I felt the futility and absurdity of the work; it was only a puerile pretense. The Declaration of Rights, I said, may be made after the Constitution has been established, but not before, for rights only exist by virtue of the laws, and cannot precede them; besides this, these maxims are dangerous, law-givers must not be bound by general propositions that may afterward be necessarily modified and restrained, nor, above all, by false opinions, as that "all men are born free and equal" is not true; they are not born free; on the contrary, they are born in a state of weakness and necessary dependence, and where are they equal?

M. Dumont says:

The prevailing character of the French is that of conceit; every member of the Assembly considered himself capable of undertaking everything. * * * I often said if you proposed to the first hundred men you met in the streets of Paris and to the same number in the streets of London to undertake the charge of the Government, that ninety-nine of them would accept in Paris and ninety-nine would refuse in London.

And again.

Mirabeau never thought of paying his debts, except the most pressing ones, and probably it was not expected that he should do so.

Then he tells about a quarrel between Clavière and the great man in which "violent reproaches succeeded each other in quick succession; accusations of treachery and offensive remarks on each other's characters were freely indulged in" till both were so affected as to be "often compelled to wipe their eyes, but the tears were certainly not those of affection."

Yet in spite of their fury, they were still careful to treat each other with consideration. * * * Mirabeau, although foaming with rage and pride, was still clever enough to mingle with his abuse expressions of esteem and even praise of Clavière's talents, so that with the same hands he dealt out wounds and caresses.

M. Dumont in divers places dwells upon this caressing habit of Mirabeau, how he flattered his friends into doing things for him, how charming he was. At the same time he admits that what Mirabeau took he was apt to transform with a touch of his genius. On the whole, since Lady Seymour has omitted little, it seems wise to refer the reader, in the matter of serious critical opinion of M. Dumont and his book to Carlyle, as already quoted—Carlyle's judgment being at all events more in accord with the spirit of this current year of grace than Macaulay's.

THE WEATHER.

A Book About Its Effect Upon the Human Race Physically, Mentally, and Morally.*

MANKIND has ever believed in weather influences, but may we not have been inclined to lay too much stress on the effects of sun and storm? Prof. Dexter's "Weather Influences" relates to a theme often discussed. It is evident that if we want to arrive at anything like a definite solution of a complex subject we must follow out the possibilities of evolution and natural selection, just as we do for animals or plants, with reference to their environment. As far back as 1748 Baron de Montesquieu, in his "Esprit de Lois," wrote concerning the relation of climate to mankind, and D'Alembert made an analysis of the work. The habit of many of the thinkers of those days was to make generalizations, and D'Alembert was one of the encyclopedists. Some of D'Alembert's conclusions are certainly original. He says:

Nobody doubts that climate has an influence upon the habitual disposition of men's bodies and characters; on that account laws ought to be framed to accord with the nature of the climate. Thus, in countries where the use of wine is hurtful the law which forbids it is a good one; in countries where the heat of the climate inclines people to laziness the law which encourages labor is a very proper one. Therefore the Government can correct the effects of climate.

According to Montesquieu "the inhabitants of cold countries have but little taste for delicate pleasures. There is your Englishman, who is phlegmatic, and on the other side the Italian, who is so lively." Climate explains almost everything.

There are many strange problems arising from change of locality among men. Man always has migrated, and the evolution of races has been going on from the very remotest period. How long it has taken humanity to develop given traits, we never will be able to tell. Man might have perished long ago if it were not for his adaptiveness. Long ago we toppled over the shrines of Jupiter Tonans, of Pluvius the Rainmaker, and even the saintly St. Swithin is now laughed at. Portents were once believed in and certain phenomena were supposed to attach themselves to special days. Even to-day, among some, the croak of the tree toad is supposed to be the precursor of rain. Let us respect the ancients, for Theophrastus, in the fourth century B. C. told this, and also that "the ass shaking his ears is a sign of a storm." Herschel the elder was credited with having constructed a lunar table of the various conditions of the moon, foretelling the weather. This table was indignantly "repudiated by Herschel the younger, who denies that his father could have been guilty of such a monstrous folly."

Animal weather lore is not to be summarily dismissed. Mr. Dexter writes: "Its extent is something enormous. It would seem as if every animal and every plant with which man is familiar had been accredited by some one with especial power of prognostication; and boldly championed in prose or verse."

Though man has carefully watched the actions of animals and plants, it is doubtful whether he has acquired anything reliable. Many silly things have been written concerning the leech, and how changing conditions of the weather could be foretold by noticing the peculiar wriggles of the creature. In England the farmer imbues the pink-eyed pimpernel with particular meteorological prowess. One chapter is entitled "Weather Influences in Literature." Mr. Dexter writes "that the weather has a pronounced effect upon physiological conditions few affected with rheumatism or diseases of its nature would for an instant doubt." Here is something which seems to be novel, and must be taken for what it is worth. Maybe dark weather affects the eyes of those who are studying their ledgers:

During the London fogs and on days when the weather is particularly depressing, in the Bank of England certain sets of books an error in which would be cumulative and produce disastrous results further on are locked up, and the clerks set to tasks less intricate and important in character. Experience has taught those in charge that the percentage of error increases manifold during such climatic conditions, and that it is money in pocket to yield to them. The same necessity for cessation of certain lines of work during bad "spells of weather" is recognized by the larger banking institutions in New York and the other Eastern cities, and a rotation of work in conformity to them is rigidly observed. It has been the universal reply, too, by the Superintendents of prisons and asylums for the insane, to whom I have appealed for their opinion upon the subject, that the persons in their charge varied so markedly with the meteorological conditions that no man who ever had their experience could for a moment doubt that the relation between the weather and emotional states was any other than cause and effect. When asked, however, what definite conditions of the weather tended to the most productive of emotional abnormalities, no satisfactory answer could be made, and we were as much at sea as ever.

Mr. Dexter says, in another chapter:

Varying temperatures have been recognized by every student of climatology. Inhabitants of hot climates are usually listless, uninventive, apathetic, and improvident. An equable high temperature, especially if moist, weakens body and mind. No long established low land tropical people is a conquering race in the broadest sense of the word. For the inhabitants of the higher latitudes, even under the tropical sun, this may be true; for as we ascend the temperature lessens about one degree every 270 feet on an average, and even at the equator we may have a temperate climate. The most favorable temperature for health which carries with it an aggressive energy which is felt, and which has led the world march of civilization, is about fifty-five degrees, on an average, and this is found in the temperate zones. From there have come the brawn and brain of martial conquest and intellectual attainment. The dominant peoples are shown between the latitudes of twenty-five degrees and fifty-five degrees. Further north the available vital energy seems so largely expended in furnishing mere body heat and stimulus for the necessary physiological functions that there is little left for use in those activities which make leaders.

We now come to the ability of certain races to thrive under conditions "other than those of their ancestors." The need of strict observance of certain sanitary and hygienic rules should be fully recognized. "Many of the places which were once considered fatal to the white man are being proved comparatively healthful." Mr. Dexter is hopeful that it will be within the power of man to reduce the unhealthfulness of even large areas of tropical climates. "It has been said that England holds India, not by the bayonet alone, but by dosages of quinine." When a great power holds a tropical country, it does its best to correct, as far as possible, certain accidents of a local character. We must bear in mind, too, that the main stock of the new-comers is always being reinforced from the mother country, and thus the newer stock is kept all the purer, and on that account becomes the stronger.

Barometrical pressure has much to do with human conditions. Unquestionably high altitudes are invigorating, though they may act on the heart and the general nervous system. Humidity, when in excess, is prejudicial to life. When to humidity is added heat, as on the West Coast of Africa, mortality is increased. The influence of winds on the human economy does not seem to be of any marked importance. Of course there are certain local exceptions, as in regard to the winds which sometimes blow in the neighborhood of Buenos Ayres. There is a north wind which sweeps over plains covered with marshes and becomes overcharged with moisture. A writer describing the condition of the South American city says:

"The effects produced in the human body are in general lassitude and relaxation, opening the pores of the skin, and inducing great liability to colds, sore throat, and all consequences of check of perspiration. The damp wind of La Plata seems to affect the temper and disposition of the inhabitants. The irritability and ill humor it excites in them amount to little less than a temporary derangement of their former faculties. It is a common thing for men among the better classes to shut themselves up in their houses during its continuation and lay aside all business till it has passed; while among the lower classes it is always remarked that cases of quarreling and bloodshed are more frequent during the north winds than at any other time. Even murderers are said to lay to it the blame of their foul deeds. No sooner, however, does the southwest wind, blowing from the dry and snowy summits of the Andes, set in than health and comfort and peace are restored.

Treating of the influences of the weather on the child, the summary of it is that pupils at schools are better behaved during the Spring and Autumn and the days of normal temperature. Much depends, however, on the length of time the pupil has been at his or her studies. The literature of criminology is full of scientific attempts to analyze the complex states which give rise to excesses in conduct. Mr. Dexter prints a table of assault and battery which, strange to say, shows that there were more acts of violence carried out by women during the month of August than by men during the same month. The study of social conditions in India seems to show that in September there are more suicides, and in October the majority of the murders. As to the effects of the weather on insanity we find insufficient data. It requires no elaborate data to confirm the belief that there is a close connection between health and the weather. The relation of drunkenness and the weather is another subject treated in the volume.

A New Story by Opie Read.

TURK. A Novel. By Opie Read. Illustrated. 12mo. Chicago: Laird & Lee. $1.25.

Opie Read believes in having things happen in stories and telling about them. He doesn't waste much time on scenery or background; he introduces his characters and then starts, in a proper and business-like way, to let them act.

Turk was a young gentleman whose true name was Lorenzo Griffin. Because he was freckled like a turkey egg he acquired the more familiar sobriquet. Turk came from a family of fighters. Being Kentuckians, they were engaged for generations back in a bitter feud with the Nesbitts. Turk inherited the family love of a quarrel, but he also inherited the family high honor and courage. On the whole, although Turk was not perfect, he was mortal. He was bound out to a farmer who at one time had been a professor, and Turk's life with the farmer was not at first all that it might be. The professor had in his youth been disappointed in love, and his manner was not always agreeable. There were two daughters—Amy, gentle and fair, and Nan, a veritable devil. Of course, it is all very clear from the very beginning which maid is the right one for Turk, even though one is thrown off the scent for a while by Amy's unselfish goodness.

The time of the story is just before and during the war of the rebellion, but although we have Turk marching to battle and being taken a prisoner of war, it can in no sense be called a "war story." No celebrities fill its pages; not even Lincoln is mentioned once throughout the whole book.

On the whole, it is a healthy, cheerful [illegible]

IN BURNS'S LAND.

Scotch Neighborhoods Associated with the Poet Described by Mr. Charles S. Dougall.*

"I HAVE no dearer aim," said Burns, "than to make leisurely pilgrimages through Caledonia, to sit on the fields of her battles, to wander on the romantic banks of her rivers, and to muse on the stately towers or venerable ruins, once the honored abode of our heroes." In "The Burns Country," Mr. Charles S. Dougall carries out just such "a leisurely pilgrimage." The reader is taken to the banks of the rivers and streams and to the homes and haunts of the past, is made familiar with the traditions of old Scotland, and is introduced to the many boon companions of the great poet. Besides the biographical character of the book, acquaintance is made with the times when Burns lived. "The Land of Burns" can also lay claim to be the land of Bruce and Wallace. It was the home of Lollards and Covenanters; it witnessed centuries of feudal strife; Galt and Boswell, Ainslie, and Cunningham, Burns and Scott are among those who have invested it with the charm of literary associations.

To the banks of the Doon came, the father of Robert Burns. William Burnes was a gardener and a frugal man. He leased a piece of ground and laid out his garden. In 1757 he married Agnes Brown, and thirteen months later Robert Burns was born. The cottage at Alloway was occupied by the family until 1781, when it was sold.

For nearly a century thereafter it was a public house, the most notable landlord of which was Miller Goudie, whose ignorance of Burns and love of whisky used to raise the ire of devout pilgrims. Keats did not spare him when he visited the cottage in 1818. "His gab hindered my sublimity," he said. "The fiat dog made me write a flat sonnet." * * * From time to time additions were made to the building, but the Trustees of the Burns Monument acquired the property in 1881 and put the cottage in the same state in which it was in 1759. In it and in an adjoining museum are preserved many relics of the poet —articles of furniture, valuable manuscripts, and engravings—which are full of interest. Visitors enter the cottage through the barn and pass through the byre and the "best room" into the kitchen, in a corner of which stands the bed in which the poet was born.

Describing Robert's father, the author says:

If ever a man strove to do his duty by his children that man was William Burnes. He read with them, he observed with them, he talked with them, he wrote a manual of religious belief for them, and all this in the midst of an unceasing struggle for bare life with the barren soil of an upland farm. Undoubtedly the seemingly hopeless fight with poverty, the knowledge that his strength was failing, and premature old age pressing upon him while his children were still unable to "fend for themselves" made him irritable.

Starting for a tour through the land of Burns, you would begin at Ayr. This was the town of Burns's boyhood.

Through the gently sloping uplands that stretch to the east, "auld hermit Ayr" steals to the shore past many a country seat deep set amid ancient trees. Southward the Doon "pours down his far-fetched floods," sweeping past Kirk Alloway and the "auld clay biggin," in which Burns was born. From the Mull of Cantire past the mighty mass of Arran, round by Bute and the Cumbraes, and down along the coast, with its busy towns—Androssan, Saltcoates, Irvine, Troon—on the bold Heads of Ayr, seem one broken line. Far off a clear eye may catch a glimpse of the Irish coast, and the black bulk of Ailsa is set between, like an enormous watch tower in the middle of a wide lane of waters, Scotland's greatest highway to commerce.

Old Ayr is replete with the history of the past, notably the prowess of Wallace. Nowadays electric cars rumble through the streets of Ayr. Pilgrims always pay a visit to the "auld brig o' Doon." The boyhood of the poet, as he describes it, was "the unceasing toil of a galley slave."

Too soon his bowing frame had to bear the weight of a man's work. His shoulders were bent with holding the heavy four-horse plow, which never turned over a furrow fifteen to twenty inches broad. * * * Harvest entailed the severest strain. From dawn to dark, with but two short intervals for food, the reaper strode along the rigs plying his "teething hook," till his back ached and his head swam and his spirit was well-nigh broken. * * * What a life for any indifferently fed lad of fifteen! How hard it must have been to Robert Burns, with his proud spirit, conscious of latent powers, forever chafing at his lot. The physical effects remained with Burns all through life; they hastened his death. The moral effect—the loss of a steadfast aim, the stifling of ambition, the desire to seek pleasure while it might be found—was no less than disastrous. To understand Burns's life and to account for the weakness that marred his strength one must follow him closely through the toilworn years of his boyhood. * * *

As the family increased in size existence became more difficult, and a move was made to Lochlea. There is a romantic story concerning the origin of Robert Bruce in the country. The first Lord of Carrick was Duncan, who lived at Turnberry. His son left a daughter, Marjorie, who inherited his broad lands. Marjorie's first husband was Adam de Kilconquhar, who, as a crusader, lost his life. Then, according to the custom of the day, the widow became the ward of the King. He alone could dispose of Marjorie's hand. One day when the fair widow was riding through the Carrickwoods she spied a handsome knight, and "his courteous mien and noble bearing won the young widow's admiration, and she invited him to join her party." Courteous though he might have been, the knight declined the honor; then Marjorie bade her followers capture the man. "She did the knight—subject as Bruce was only married to her. The issue of this romantic marriage was Robert the Bruce, "the restorer of Scottish liberties."

At Lochlea Burns made many friends. Somewhere in the neighborhood, it is believed Coilsfield House, is associated with the well-known love of the poet for Highland Mary. Possibly she was a dairy maid. The famous parting of the two he most touchingly describes. The author writes:

It is generally believed that her name was Mary Campbell: * * * that the parting was on Sunday, May 14, 1786, and that she died in Greenock in October of that year. Men have peered into her character with microscopes; kirk session records have been ransacked; every little of village gossip has been noted down, and she has appeared at one time as "the white rose that grew up and bloomed in the midst of passion flowers," at another as "something of a light skirt," and yet another as merely a creation of the poet's imagination.

Whether Mary ever really existed or not, the tenderness of Burns's lines have left on us one of the most lasting of impressions, so we are not to smile at the pilgrims who look with intense sympathy on the vista, covered with heath, on the Ayrshire spot where "the poet took his last farewell of his sweet Highland Mary." Tarbolton is a village in the parish of the same name, where Burns's father came to live. He had leased some land and once more tried to gain a living from the soil, but with no better success than before. There was a Bachelors' Club at Tarbolton frequented by Robert Burns. A Dr. Mackenzie describes his meeting Burns there in 1783:

The poet seemed distant, suspicious, and without any wish to interest or please. He kept himself very silent in a dark corner of the room, and before he took any part in the conversation I frequently detected him scrutinising me during my conversation with his father and brother.

At Tarbolton there was another club held at the Tarbolton Cross. There were debates here, the topics being religious. It was here that the poet made the acquaintance of David Sillar and the two became life-long friends. When did Burns's literary activity begin? What we do know is that his "amazing outburst of song began in April, 1785, when he wrote the 'Epistle to Lapraik.' From that time until the appearance of the Kilmarnock edition, in July, 1786, his inspiration was at its height."

Nothing proves the white heat of his inspiration more than the simple fact that such a masterpiece as "The Jolly Beggars" was a trivial amusement, fired off to delight a friend, and then thrown aside and forgotten. Our sympathy with the failure and misfortune of Burns as a farmer is mixed with a selfish joy that "the bitter blaudin' showers that cowpit the stooks" and ruined the crop of 1785 drove him to "dedicate the hour in idle rhyme to possy."

In Mauchline's churchyard sleep many of the poet's old friends. It was at Mauchline that Burns is supposed to have made Jean Armour's acquaintance, and the story goes "that Jean and the poet used to communicate with one another from windows on opposite sides of the lane, thus arranging their stolen meetings." In time Jean became Burns's lawful wife, and they set up their establishment in a humble way in a single apartment of a small house. The room has changed but little since the time when the two lived there.

The outer wall of the house bears a tablet recently inserted by the Rosebery Burns Club. The old lady who occupies the room now feelingly laments that any inspiration which it may have had is gone forever. "I have slept in the poet's bed for seventeen year," she says, "an' I hae na made a song yet."

As to that much-discussed question, the marriage of Jean Armour to Burns, Mr. Dougall writes:

It has been stated on the one hand that Burns married Jean from a crude sense of duty rather than from love, and that it was only because Ellison Begbie, Mary Campbell, Peggy Chalmers, and Clarinda were lost or denied by him that he turned with a series to mind to Jean. On the other hand it has been said that this "facile, empty-headed" creature was a drag to him —that he was not even first in her affections, and that the marriage was the beginning of the end of Burns's career. No one who knows the facts can have the slightest difficulty in refuting these statements, insulting as they are to the memory of both the poet and of one who proved herself to be his true a wife as ever man was blessed with. It is worse than idle to conjecture what Burns's life would have been had he married some other woman. It is enough that there is absolutely no evidence to show that he ever regretted his marriage with the woman to whom he was bound in honor, before he saw either Peggy Chalmers or Clarinda. He was happy in having in Jean "the handsomest figure, the sweetest in temper, the soundest in constitution, and the kindest heart in the country."

What sort of an exciseman did Burns make? At times he both worked on his farm and attended to the King's revenues. Sometimes he rode hundreds of miles during the week. He often rose at break of day and went to work in his fields. At nights he was occupied with his letter writing. Sometimes it must have been a relief to him to have let loose the reins of his fancy. He had the gift of inspiration. It is believed that "Tam o' Shanter" was written in a day, and according to his own statements "he composed easily and corrected laboriously." In 1791 he gave up all agricultural pursuits and moved to Dumfries. It was a poor house he lived in with his wife, and he was not happy. It was the matter of money which was ever troubling him. Near by ran the River Nith, and on its banks the poet loved to linger. Often he directed his way to the ruins of Lincluden Abbey. The house he lived in was on the Millhole Brae, now known as Burns Street. It was in Dumfries that his health broke down. He had taken some short journey, and when he returned home he could scarcely walk.

There is no need to recall the closing scenes—the sadness of it all; the anxieties for his wife's welfare; the fear of prison, none the less pitiable that it was imaginary; the tender ministrations of Jesse Lewars; the sympathy of his fellow-townsmen, thinking now only of his genius, and talking of it with awe "as of some departing spirit whose voice was to gladden them no more." On the morning of the 21st of July he died.

On Sunday evening, July 23, 1796, his mortal remains were borne to the churchyard of St. Michael's. That epitaph "In Aeternum honorem Roberti Burns" is sufficiently grandiose. How touching, however, is this verse of the great poet's:

"Is there a man, whose judgment clear
Can others teach the course to steer,
Yet runs himself, life's mad career,
Wild as the wave?
Here pause—and thro' the starting tear,
Survey this grave."

GARDENING.

A New Edition in Fac Simile of John Parkinson's "Paradisus."*

By Arrangement with The London Times.

MESSRS. METHUEN deserve the gratitude of all gardeners for this beautiful reprint of the best book about gardening that ever was written. The delights of Parkinson can be enjoyed as well in this fac simile as in the original edition, which has grown so costly of late years. They are delights, too, which it does not need a specialist's knowledge to enjoy; for though Parkinson wrote always as a practical gardener for gardeners, he was master of a most rich and curious style. His names for colors alone are worth the study of a virtuoso in such things. He describes the varieties of different plants with a fullness and precision quite lost from our modern gardening books. For instance:

Master Tuggies Princesse [a variety of carnation] is the greatest and fairest of all these sorts of variable stanzies, standing comely and round, not loose or shaken, or breaking the pods as other sorts will; the marking of the flower is in this manner. It is of a stamell colour, striped and marbled with white stripes and veines, quite through every leafe, which are as deeply jagged as the Hulo. Sometimes it hath more red than white, and sometimes more white than red, and sometimes so equally marked that you cannot discerne which hath the mastery; yet which of these hath the predominance, still the flower is very beautifull, and exceedingly delightsome.

His zest for his subject is so great that it quickens every detail, and there is a peculiar interest in seeing which of our garden flowers were known in the seventeenth century and how their names have changed. The illustrations are not only beautiful in design but usually so accurate that the flowers can be recognised from them at a glance. The book consists, after a few introductory chapters, of descriptions of all the plants cultivated in flower and kitchen gardens in the author's time. The introductory chapters "On the Ordering of the Garden of Pleasure" are full of good things. There is a plate of the curious and elaborate patterns into which it was then fashionable to divide flower beds, and an account of the ways in which they may be bordered or margined with living or dead materials. The dead include lead, boards, tiles, bones, &c., "but as for the fashion of jawe-bones," says Parkinson, "used by some in the Low Countries and other places beyond the seas, being too grosse and base, I make no mention of them." He has the true gardener's indignation against whatever offends his own taste. He will not have Latin names used unnecessarily for English:

Again, let me here also by the way tell you that many ignorant and idle gardiners and others, who get names by stealth, as they doe many other things, doe call some of their Daffodils narcisses, when as all know that know any Latine, that Narcissus is the Latine name and Daffodil the English of one and the same thing. I would willingly, therefore, that all should grow judicious and call every thing by his proper English name in speaking English, or else by such Latin name as everything hath that hath not a proper English name.

It is the custom now to call only the large trumpeted class of narcissi daffodils, but there is no reason why we should not return to ancient usage and give them all the beautiful English name.

Parkinson has a chapter on the gardening superstitions of his time. He himself was a rationalist, as became a physician. Flowers cannot be doubled, he says, by observing the changes of the moon or the conjunction of planets. It may be that they were "appointed by the god of nature as conducing and helping to the making of these flowers double." But no man can imitate nature to do the like. It is curious that he believes double flowers to have been double from the beginning, and that no art of man can double single flowers, though he knows that high culture is often needed to keep them doubles. There were a great many double flowers in his time, and they were much prized. They must have been produced, one would suppose, by artificial selection, as they are usually produced now. Yet the art seems to have been unknown to Parkinson. He protests against the superstition that the colors of flowers can be changed by steeping their seeds in the lees of red wine or by putting "vermillion or cynaber between the rinde and the small heads growing about the roots." You cannot make roses yellow, he says, by grafting a damask upon a grown stalk. He proves all this in a really scientific manner, for plants, he explains, digest foreign matter and absorb it into their own substance as human bodies do.

The carnation was the chief flower of our gardens in Parkinson's time. "What shall I say to the queen of delight and of flowers, carnations, and gilloflowers," he cries, and fills a long chapter of his introduction with minute instructions for their culture. There were almost as many varieties of carnations then as now, but only one of them, "Master Tuggie his rose gilloflower," had the unjagged edges fashionable now. Their names are pretty and fantastic, as, for instance, the Pale Pageant, the Sad Pageant, the Marbled Tawny, the Striped Savage. Only the smaller carnations were called gilloflowers, and the name even then was also given to wallflowers and stocks. A book might be written on the names of flowers in Parkinson. Many pretty ones have gone out of usage and might well be recovered. We have no English name, for instance, for Lychnis chalcedonica. Parkinson called it the Flower of Bristowe or None Such. That very ugly plant, love-lies-bleeding, was then known as the Flamingo, a name that might be revived for something better. There were not only Sweet Williams, but Sweet Johns. The Sweet John seems to have been the Deptford pink, and the name was afterward used for other kinds of polyanthus pinks, such as dianthus atrorubens and Carthusianorum. Hyacinths, still primitive and unrefined by the florist, were jacinths, and the name covered the muscaris and other plants of the same tribe. The name Spider Wort was given, not only to Tradescantia, called by Parkinson John Tradescant's Spiderwort, but also to St. Bruno's lily, a plant that has no connection with it. There were many varieties of cowslips with curious names, as, for instance, Redbird's Ayen, Double Paigles, the Foolish Cowslip, or "Jacke an apes on horse backe." This last, which seems to have had each flower surrounded with green tracts, together with the "double greene feathered cowslip," is perhaps lost from our gardens. They must both have been fantastically ugly. Sometimes one comes across names in the making. Parkinson, for instance, speaks of the "Christmas flower like unto a single white rose." Goatsbeard was also called "Go to bed at noon." The passion flower was the maracoc, or Virginian climber, and Parkinson gives a picture of the "Jesuites Figure of the Maracoc."

He will have nothing to say to the legends about the mandrake. He had often transplanted them and broken and cut up the roots, "but never found harme by so doing, as many idle tales have beene set downe in writting." Nor had he ever seen "any forme of men like or woman like parts in the rootes of any." "Many cunning counterfeit rootes have bin shaped to such formes and publickly exposed to the view of all that would see them," but they are all "vaine, idle, and ridiculous toyes of men's invehtions." The mandrake, or mandragora, it may be mentioned, is a plant of the nightshade tribe, rather like the henbane. It is still fairly common in gardens, though it has lost its legendary fame.

Parkinson boasts that he can enumerate thirty varieties of roses. Most gardens contain more nowadays. His illustrations prove that the rose as we know it is a modern flower. His roses are like those of Healdry, small and stiff. The names of some of them are unknown to us, as, for instance, the chrystall rose and the gillyflower rose. The gardens of that time were better off for daffodils. Parkinson gives a hundred kinds, many of them still rare, and some still among the finest we have. The variety of his tulips, or Turk's caps, as he calls them, is infinite. The tulip mania was not far off. Some of what we suppose to be our oldest garden flowers are curiously absent. Parkinson only knew the annual larkspurs or larksheels. He calls the nasturtium Indian cress or yellow larkspur. The botanical name of the plant is really tropæolum. Nasturtium is the botanical name for water and other kinds of cresses. But already in Parkinson's time the tropæolum magus was called nasturtium, because the leaves were used instead or cresses for salads. He only classifies the nasturtium with the delphinium under protest and because of the likeness of their shades. Though there was little scientific classification of plants in his day, he is usually right in his arrangement, even in difficult cases. For instance, most people would be surprised even now to learn that the lobelia belongs to the campanula tribe. Yet Parkinson puts the tall scarlet lobelia cardinalis with the campanulas. He is altogether puzzled by the nasturtium; it is still a plant of a somewhat uncertain family, though usually placed with the geraniums.

The garden pansy, again, is a modern creation. Most of Parkinson's are the little wild ones, though he has a yellow viola, rather larger, which he says seldom ripens seed. He has a good many irises—indeed, most of those now common in our gardens, including the great mourning iris, (Iris saxaria,) of which he says "the chief of all is your sable flower, so fit for a mourning habit that I think in the whole compasse of nature's store there is not a more pathetical, or of greater correspondency." He says nothing, however, about its culture, which is still an unsolved problem. Few saxifrages were known to him, and they have not yet acquired a common name; he calls them sanicles, navel worts, and prince's feathers. He speaks, in passing, of "our white saxifrage," by which he probably means Saxifraga granulata, so that the name was known to him; but it seems to have been only applied to that one species. In the seventeenth century the belief in the healing power of herbs was still absolute. Parkinson was apothecary to James I., and naturally he gives the virtues of every plant. Thus "all the sorts of Beares eares are Cephalicall, that is conducing helpe for the paines in the head, and for the giddiness thereof. They are accounted also to be helping for the Palsey, and shaking of the joynts." Much of this lore is obsolete, but none the less curious. In fact, everything in the book is interesting, and a great deal of it still useful.

MR. ALDEN'S VIEWS.

Animal Stories—Second Volume of Swinburne's Collected Poems—Other New Books.

THE fashion of writing stories in which wild animals are represented as acting like reasoning beings—as they undoubtedly are—has spread from America to England, and the magazines are now full of "Nature Stories." It may be said that the fashion was set by Mr. Kipling in his "Jungle Books," and that it is therefore English, and not American. I fancy, however, that the real originator of the "Nature Story" was Mr. Thompson Seton. When it was new it was an attractive sort of story, but it is beginning to grow just a little tiresome. In other words, it has been decidedly overdone, and it is probable that editors in both countries will soon arrive at that conclusion.

I am told that two of the London magazines are on their deathbeds. It would be unfair to mention their names, for while there is life there is hope, especially if the advertising business improves. Still, the chances certainly are that within a few weeks we shall be notified that the two magazines in question have passed away universally regretted by their contributors. The Realm died with its September number after a brief existence of six months. It was a good magazine of its kind, but there are too many of that kind. In order to succeed a new magazine must have a special character of its own, and any attempt to bring out a new Strand, a new Pearson's, or a new Windsor has little chance of success.

Mr. Maurice Hewlett, whose "Queen's Quair" is selling largely, is contributing to The Speaker a series of papers on Tuscan Roads which are thoroughly delightful. Possibly I have spoken of these papers once before. If so, there is no harm in again calling attention to them. They will, of course, be collected in a volume, sooner or later, and equally of course some American publisher will issue them. If this does not prove to be the case, it will show a curious lack of good taste and enterprise on the part of American publishers.

The second volume of the collected edition of Swinburne's poems contains his "Songs Before Sunrise" and his other political lyrics. It forms a beautiful volume, and the admirers of the poet, by which term we might include nearly all English-speaking people who know how to read, will be glad to have in one volume what was formerly published in two. There are magnificent lines in many of the poems—such as the "Halt Before Rome," to mention one—but the press does not welcome the new volume as warmly as it welcomed the first. That was inevitable. The political poems appeal to a comparatively small audience, while the poems and ballads appealed to all men and women.

Mr. Jerome's new book, "Tommy & Co.," is just out. It is commonly spoken of as a novel, but it is really a collection of seven stories, connected by a common plot. Any one chapter can be read without reading another, while if one reads the entire book in orderly sequence he feels as if he has read a novel. Thus Mr. Jerome has combined the advantages of the short story and the novel, and is to be congratulated upon his success in so doing. The book is really delightful; it is full of Mr. Jerome's characteristic humor. I should not wonder much if the book proved to be one of the most successful that Mr. Jerome has yet written. It is quite as humorous and a great deal better in point of art than was his "Three Men in a Boat," and that has sold by the hundred thousand. I must say that when Mr. Jerome drops into pathos he does not quite carry me with him, but I am indebted to him for the most satisfactory laughs that I have had in many years. Of course "Tommy & Co." is not as pretentious a book as "Paul Kelver," which was undoubtedly one of the best novels of the last ten years. But of its kind it is excellent, and for one I like the kind.

Mr. Barry Pain's new book, "Lindley Kays," is a serious novel, though at times Mr. Pain's humor thrusts itself into the book. It seems to me to be a most admirable piece of work. It is a story of a poor young man who comes to London and tries to make a way for himself. Not a very original conception, it may be said, but that has nothing to do with the fact that Mr. Pain set out to give us a history of his hero, and has done the work like a thorough artist. Nobody will find the book other than interesting, and I do not envy the man who mistakes it for something that it is not, and therefore goes to work to find fault with its author. There is much of real beauty and true pathos in "Lindley Kays," and Mr. Pain ought to be proud of this book, though he probably is nothing of the kind.

Mr. Seton Merriman's posthumous novel, "The Last Hope," has been reviewed at some length in nearly all the leading papers, and the verdict upon it has been, with hardly an exception, that it is an excellent piece of workmanship. Of course one's like or dislike of a novel is influenced by other things than its story merits. In this case Mr. Seton Merriman's book appears to deal with [illegible] may perhaps estimate the book more highly than it deserves. But it certainly seems to me to be the best novel that the author ever wrote, which is saying a good deal. The characters which figure in it are admirably drawn, and the plot is skillfully handled. In comparison with the vast majority of the novels that come from the press, "The Last Hope" reads like the work of a true master. It will deepen our regret that it is the last book that will ever come from the author's pen. "The Last Hope" reminds one of Mr. Anthony Hope, and that also reminds one that Mrs. Anthony Hope has just published a daughter, instead of a book, wisely leaving the latter task to her husband. Mr. Hope's friends will congratulate him on the birth of this daughter, and trust that she will in her day prove to be even more delightful than Dolly.

Mr. Bernard Capes also has a new novel this week. It is entitled "Diana Please," and its supposed author is an adventuress who took part in the political affairs of Naples in the days when Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton did the same, not at all to their credit. It is a capital story of adventure, and the character of the supposed authoress is very lifelike. Mr. Capes grows with each book he writes, and there is a long distance between his first book and "Diana Please." It is safe to predict that the book will be praised by the critics, and read by the public, and what more, except the approval of his own artistic conscience—which he doubtless has already—could Mr. Capes ask?

"Tales from Jokai," edited by Mr. R. N. Bain, has just been published. It is an excellent collection of short stories. They do not in the least resemble the sombre social and political sermons that the Russians dress up in the guise of short stories, but are genuine stories that are meant to be nothing else, and fulfill the function for which they were designed thoroughly well. Nobody, I presume, could call Jokai a great novelist, but these stories certainly show that he could write excellent short stories, and that he was an artist so far as he went. If any one wants to read stories that are full of movement and adventure, written by a man who knew how to write, he could do no better than to take up this volume that Mr. Bain has placed within reach of those who do not read Magyar.

Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy, writing in one of the weeklies, has put forth a new theory to account for the mysterious disappearances which are so common. A man walks out of his front door and is never seen again. What becomes of him? Mr. Molloy holds that the man is suddenly possessed by some other intelligence, good or bad. This possession changes the appearance of the man to such an extent that his friends cannot readily recognize him. It also changes his personality so completely that he totally forgets his original self, and becomes a new and different person. The theory is certainly a very plausible one, provided we admit the existence of intelligences which can suddenly take complete possession of a man and change his identity. No one would have had any difficulty in accepting the theory 200 years ago, but in this skeptical age it will not be so easily accepted. There is no doubt, however, that it does fully meet the exigencies of the case, and affords a full and satisfactory explanation of the many mysterious disappearances which have hitherto had no satisfactory explanation. Probably Mr. Molloy's theory will be widely discussed in the newspapers, for it is far more interesting than the Bacon-Shakespeare delusion, and this is just the time when the newspapers hail with delight any opportunity for a newspaper controversy.

London Opinion, the new penny weekly which made its appearance two or three months ago, seems to be doing fairly well. This is unquestionably due to the fact that it has contrived to differ from the other penny weeklies. As a rule, it may be safely prophesied that any new paper which resembles other papers already before the public has next to no chance of success, for the reason that the market is already overstocked with papers. But a new paper or a new magazine that can strike out a path of its own will always stand a chance of attracting sufficient patronage to make it financially successful. This is what London Opinion seems to have done, and it ought to be an object lesson to people possessed with the mania of starting new papers, though, of course, it will be nothing of the kind, for the people who want to start new papers are usually unable to learn anything from the successes or failures of their predecessors.

CLOCKS AND WATCHES.

Mr. F. J. Britten's History of Timekeepers from Their Beginning to the Present Day.*

IN 1894 appeared Mr. F. J. Britten's "Clock and Watch-makers and Their Work." The volume just issued by the same authority is called "Old Clocks and Watches and Their Makers," and contains much additional matter. The illustrations are many, derived from numerous sources both in England and on the Continent. Possibly the oldest method of ascertaining the time of day was by means of the sun dial. Popular legend attributes to King Alfred the invention of the water clock, but long before his time the water clock was in use by the Egyptians, and in Judea, Babylon, Chaldea, and Phoenicia. The contrivances for measuring time by means of water are thus described:

They appear to have consisted each of a basin filled with water and exposed in some niche or corner of a public place. At the extreme end of the vessel was a spout or tap, from which trickled the liquid drop by drop into a receiver having on its inside marks for indicating the hours of the day and night. In parts of Southern India was used a thin copper bowl about five inches in diameter and rather deeper than half a sphere, having a very small hole at the bottom. The bowl, placed in a vessel containing water and floating thereon, gradually filled. At the expiration of an arranged interval it sank, and a boy or another watcher than struck a gong and thus announced the time. It sinks after the lapse of forty-five minutes with tolerable accuracy, but the time varies with the temperature of the water.

It was possible by the introduction of a cylinder containing a floating piston which worked on a cog wheel to indicate the hours. The clepsydra was introduced into Greece by Plato, and was used by the Romans. The King of Persia is said to have presented Charlemagne with a water clock of bronze, inlaid with gold. Water clocks were used up to the seventeenth century. Even with the introduction of the pendulum, water served "as the motor, and the pendulum as a regulator." The Japanese and Chinese use a primitive timekeeper, made with a wick about two feet in length which takes a certain time to consume. Knots are tied at intervals which give some indication of the time. There is the record of a lamp timekeeper which was placed in the bedchamber of the French King in 1022. Mr. Britten writes that these lamp timekeepers may still be found in outlying places in Germany and Holland. The sand glass is of the most remote antiquity. To this day "a sand glass is used in the House of Commons to measure certain intervals, and in comparatively recent times it was not uncommon to see a preacher, as he began his discourse, turn a sand glass in the pulpit." The author says that it would be guesswork to accept any of the stories concerning the introduction of clocks, as we understand them to-day. Examining the origin of the word "clock," Mr. Britten writes:

The word "clock," whether derived from the Saxon "clugge," the Teutonic "glocke," the Latin "glocio," or the French "cloche," signified "a bell," and there is reason to suppose that many of the early efforts consisted merely of a bell sounded at regular intervals by hand, the instant of ringing being determined by a sun dial or a sand glass. In monasteries prayers were recited at certain fixed hours of the night as well as of the day, and as the monks were not always unfettered by sleep at the needful moment, this horloge or alarum was probably invented to rouse the drowsy religieux to a due sense of their duties. In the "Rule" of the monks of Citeaux, drawn up about 1120, and quoted by Calmet, the duty prescribed to the sacristan was to so adjust the abbey clock that it would strike and awaken the monks for matins. Durandus, in the thirteenth century, alluded to the clock as one of the essential features of a church. Dante, who was born in 1265 and died in 1321, mentions an "orlogia," which struck the hours; and Chaucer, who was born in 1328 and died in 1400, speaks of the cock crowing as regularly as clock in abbey horloge.

Before dials were thought of there were what were called "Jacks." These were figures which by means of mechanical devices struck bells. It seems to be fairly authentic that prior to 1288 there was a clock at St. Paul's Cathedral with such figures, and they were called "Paul's Jacks." Later came the dial, but that great authority Violet-le Duc writes that he finds no indications of dials on the walls of the churches even up to the twelfth century. The Jacks were of all kinds, and were in vogue for centuries. There is an illustration of a portable clock of the sixteenth century where the figure strikes the hours with a hammer held in his hands, and kicks out the half and quarter hours with his feet.

The fourteenth century was distinguished by the introduction of the peculiar class of clocks which, besides indicating the flight of time, were furnished with mechanism for other purposes. One of the earliest of this kind was described by Violet le Duc as having been given about the year 1346 to the monastery of Cluny by the Abbot Pierre de Chasteaux. In addition to its indications of the phases of the moon, the movements of the sun, &c., the clock had a quantity of little figures which acted various scenes, as "The Mystery of the Resurrection," "Death," &c. The hours were announced by a cock, which fluttered its wings and crowed twice. At the same time an angel opened a door and saluted the Virgin Mary, the Holy Ghost descended on her head in the form of a dove, God, the Father, gave her His benediction, a musical carillon chimed, animals shook their wings and moved their eyes; at last the clock struck and all retreated within.

Strange to say, there seems to be a precedent in the crowing of the cock in the clocks invariably found in certain Swiss clocks. Such marionette horology exhibited in sacred places is certainly not in conformity with the tastes of to-day. The author describes the three clocks of Strasbourg. The first was constructed in 1352, the second in 1547, and the third and last as late as 1854. Portable clocks are much older than is generally supposed. They are mentioned as having been made in the fourteenth century. In the corridor of Windsor Castle there is a clock which is said to have been presented by Henry VIII. to Anne Boleyn. It is some four inches square and ten inches high. Once it was a part of Horace Walpole's collection at Strawberry Hill. It was probably of foreign make. The chapter on "Portable Timekeepers" begins with the name of a maker—Peter Henlein, or Helle, a clockmaker of Nuremberg, who was born in 1840. About the year 1500 he used a long ribbon of steel slightly coiled around a central spindle, to maintain the motion of the mechanism. Mr. Britten writes that the earliest watches are scarcely to be distinguished from small table clocks.

The case was a cylindrical box, generally of metal, chased and gilt, usually with a hinged lid on one side to inclose the dial, the lid being engraved and, as a rule, pierced with an aperture over each hour through which the position of the hand might be seen. Most of the watches were provided with a bell, on which, in some cases, the hours were sounded in regular progression. In other instances the bell was merely used as an alarm.

In the Elizabethan age, with its extravagance of dress, came many varieties of timekeepers. Rock crystal and other stones were often converted into cases which were cut in the form of crosses, stars, shells, and other extraordinary fancies; while the dials and mounts were occasionally enriched with colored enamels. The most elegant of these costly toys emanated from France. Blois being distinguished as an early seat of manufacture. There were many clocks of the fifteenth century, which are finely designed. Occasionally grotesque contrivances were put on the clocks, as a Bacchus sitting astride of a cask, and when the hours struck he lifted a cup to his mouth and seemingly took a drink. There is a clock representing the flagellation of Jesus Christ. As the hours strike the Prisoner is belabored by the soldiers, their weapons rising and falling with each sound of the bell. An Adam and Eve clock has its peculiarities. The two figures are supposably in the Garden of Eden. As the hours are struck "Eve turns, and presents an apple to Adam, who appears to hesitate, and then retires, refusing the gift. Abundance of foliage and fruit is spread over the three trees or columns supporting the dials, while a huge serpent gazing menacingly at Adam is twined around the central trunk, and indicates the hour with its tail."

There is uncertainty as to when the portable watch, as we understand it to-day, came into use. It was probably at the close of the sixteenth century. Queen Elizabeth owned a large number of watches. Mary Queen of Scots was the possessor of a skull-shaped watch. In fact, the "Death's Head" pattern was at that time much in vogue. Endless were the styles, for there were watches shaped like books, pears, butterflies, and tulips. The Nuremberg egg was a special shape, and they were first made in 1600.

The shapes of watches prevented their finding a place in the pocket. When was the fob first used in the dress of the man? The German of fob is "fuppe," and it is believed that it came from England through the Puritans, "whose dislike of display may have induced them to conceal their timekeepers from the public gaze." The author adds:

This conjecture is strengthened by the fact that a short "fob" chain attached to a watch of Oliver Cromwell's in the British Museum is, in point of date, the first appendage of the kind known. The watch is a small oval one in a silver case, and was made about 1625 by John Midnall of Fleet Street, who was one of the first members of the court of the Clockmakers' Company and Warden in 1638. On one side of a silver plate at the seal end are the Cromwell arms.

The advantages of the fob became at once apparent, and it seems that there was an increasing demand for portable watches. Women still suspended their watches from chatelaines. It was not uncommon to carry two watches, as do the Chinese to-day. Decorating watch covers with enamel began early and reached its height during the eighteenth century. Jean Petitot was a master of this delicate art, and a watch case ornamented by Petitot is highly esteemed to-day. Just as we have traveling clocks at present, so in the time that has passed there were sedan chair watches. These watches were fixed in wooden frames. Later on they were known as "post chaise watches." What we call "grandfather's clocks" are very old. In the volume there are many illustrations showing the high clock cases of former days. Chippendale and Sheraton made cases. The French designers lavished their art on metallic clock cases.

It is uncertain who first used the pendulum as a controller of clocks. There is a pendulum clock of 1602 in Vienna. Mr. Britten describes the various watch movements, and at the conclusion gives a list of all the distinguished watch and clock makers from an early date. With her mechanical devices the United States has completely modified the watch business of the world. Fashions change, and so it is probable that the gold case of the past, with its incrustation of diamonds, will be regarded in the light of a curiosity. We look now for the best works inside of the watch, regardless of the outside, only as far as it resists atmospheric changes, is dust-proof, and durable.

To Which is Added a List of Ten Thousand Makers. By F. J. Britten. Second edition, much enlarged, with seven hundred illustrations. Cloth. Pp. 735. BOSTON NOTES.

Sidney's "Certaine Sonets"—Cathedral Books and Some Juveniles.

THOSE who accept the boast of Palgrave that the Golden Treasury contains "all the best original lyrical pieces and songs in our language," and are content with its ten lines of Sidney, may be somewhat amazed when the limited edition of "Certaine Sonets" is published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., for there they will find "My True Love Hath My Heart and I Have His," not as two stanzas of five lines each, with the first line as a refrain, but as a sonnet of which five lines are not to be found in Palgrave or in Bryant, unless in a recent edition. The collection contains thirty-one pieces, of which eight appeared in Constable's "Diana" in 1594, and the entire group in the "Arcadia" folio of 1598, preceding "Astrophel and Stella."

Since Mr. Church's translation of Dante's "De Monarchia" has been long out of print, and Mr. P. H. Wicksteed's is only privately circulated, Miss Aurelia Henry's has the field to itself, and its publication to-morrow is of no small consequence to students of Dante, and especially to students of Dante the man. This is paradoxical, inasmuch as in this book the poet speaks not of his own matters, but of statecraft, of universal peace, of the relation between Church and State—still the question of questions in the world. But the best and noblest of himself appears both in the method and in the substance of his argument, and therefore is his utterance especially weighty.

Again the most admirable trait in Miss Helen Dawes Brown's "A Book of Little Boys" is the author's power of making one see the dear, pretty, inconsequent funniness of the little boy, not the "little man," not the "small boy," but the little boy; but if all possible praise have been lavished on the whining insistence of the "Wee MacGreegor" imp, what is left to be said in behalf of these American little boys? The names of twelve of them are woven into the cover design in a most teasing fashion, and the borders of the four pictures half conceal everything mentioned in the stories, in pleasant revival of a fashion older than printing.

Mrs. M. J. Taber, wisely compelling herself to see her countrymen as they are, has given her "The Cathedrals of England" a useful appendix in the shape of twelve pages "In Explanation," telling the meaning of architectural and ecclesiastical terms and expounding various kindred matters.

Photographic views of thirty cathedrals and a cathedral map of England pictured on the end papers make the book valuable for reference, and a great store of anecdotes may be found in its pages. The pictures in Francis Milhoun's "Cathedrals of Southern France" are after drawings by Miss Blanche McManus, and make a group hardly to be overpraised. The appendices, similar to those in the "Cathedrals of Northern France," make a reference library unnecessary to the reader. Mrs. Taber's book has a bibliography because her subject has again and again been treated. Francis Milhoun's has none, because in his two volumes both author and artist have worked in fields never more than slightly tilled.

Messrs. Page & Co. bring out one novel this week, the delayed "Hound of the North," a grim story in which simple, commonplace lives are set side by side with black crime and high legal offenses. The best man and the strongest of the male characters is a smuggler on the Manitoba border. The "hound" is a crippled savage "husky," who plays the part of Fate in strictly logical fashion.

Among all these full grown books comes an advance copy of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's "The Gypsy Trail," issued by Mr. Alfred Bartlett, in a book about four and a half inches square, and containing about four and a half pages. It has a frontispiece engraved on wood, and a rubricated title, and the printer has effectually marked the first edition by spelling "Gorgio" "Gorigo," which looks strangely absurd.

The single novel of Messrs. Lee and Shepard's Winter list, "Knitting of the Souls," has appeared this week, coming from the pen of Miss Maude Clark Gay. The hero is one of the Puritans who found the meat of Calvinism too strong for them, and his troubles with the Church and his efforts to guard the settlements against the Indian rising called King Philip's war occupy the greater part of the book. The author has aimed at nothing less than following Hawthorne, and although it cannot be said that she has succeeded, she has produced a story of which the general tone is uncommonly high. Mr. Frank Merrill's pictures are excellently drawn, and are printed by a highly effective "color" process.

Miss Cally Ryland's "The Taming of Betty" tells of a child who woefully needed taming, but was sadly mismanaged, and tamed at last by Bvt. Miss Brooks's "Dorothy Dainty" tells of little girls almost too good for adult belief, but not for childish credulity, and it contains a wicked uncle bad enough to come from the ballad of the babes in the wood. Col. Samuel Adams Drake's "The Young Wanderer" explains its subject by its title. Its great merit is that its author writes from personal knowledge of the California vigilance committees, and of the ways in which justice was sometimes obtained by amateur vigilantes.

"Making the Nine," by Mr. Albertus T. Dudley, is dedicated to "George Albert Wentworth, known to the world as the author of a score of standard textbooks, but to the alumni of the Phillips Exeter Academy as 'The Great Master of Boys.'"

Mr. W. O. Stoddard's "The Long Bridge Boys," issued by the Lathrop Company, gives an excellent description of the confusion in Washington in the days between the election of 1860 and the inauguration of 1861, a bit of history neglected by former writers for boys; it treats Mr. Buchanan justly, and, like current fiction for adults, admits Southern honesty and conviction. The hero saves President Lincoln from abduction, and is left crowned with honors and apparently ready to prosecute the war in another book next Winter.

"The Affair at the Inn," though containing only 320 pages, and having to do with only four persons, has the rather unusual attachment of four authors, each responsible for one of the characters. The especial advantage of such multiplicity of talent is not so plainly made manifest in the result of their combined efforts as to convince any one that Kate Douglas Wiggin, by far the best known of the collaborators on this side of the Atlantic Ocean, could not have woven as good a story by herself, having frequently done so in the past. However, "The Affair," as it stands, is too well done for the reader to have anything to complain of in the delectable combination of persons and events offered by Kate Douglas Wiggin, Mary Findlater, Jane Helen Findlater, and Allan McAulay in this highly amusing account of a little international comedy that took place "in the month of May, in a recent year, at a quiet country inn on Dartmoor, in Devonshire."

Except for the accompaniment of a red motor car and the air of modernity that it lends to the story, there is, to be sure, nothing startlingly new about the plot, which describes the slow but very sure and thorough subjugation of a titled young Scotchman by an American girl from Richmond, Va., but a touch of the unusual, if not of novelty, is also added by making events reveal themselves through the diaries kept by the four persons most interested. By this clever scheme the reader is constantly supplied with four more or less distinct versions of everything that happens. The divergent points of view thus revealed are as interesting as it always is to see ourselves as others see us, when the infrequent opportunity is presented. Either the illustrator or the authors seem to have so far carried out the idea as to make one of the pictures in one version quite flatly contradict the text of another version of the same affair, though this is a trick too common with illustrators to allow one to feel certain that it was the result of anything but unfamiliarity with that same text.

But the real fun-making of the book is by no means either indirect or of doubtful intent. One laughs, or at least smiles, at almost every sentence, and wonders constantly at the skill with which the authors have harmonized their material and their style of writing. There is little to suggest that all four characters are not the creatures of one brain.

Mrs. Wiggin, as her share, contributes the record of Miss Virginia Pomeroy as to the way in which she melted the icy heart of Sir Archibald Maxwell Mackenzie, and she has never conceived a more attractive character or painted one more delightfully. Southern Virginia is as charming as was New England Rebecca, and as true to life, and it is to be hoped that she will aid as materially in correcting some of the erroneous impressions as to American women that have gained ground across the sea.

The other characters, though perhaps less attractive personally, furnish more cause for laughter and are excellently drawn. In fact, it is not often that the early Fall is enlivened by a book so thoroughly enjoyable as "The Affair at the Inn."

Dr. Lorimer's Novel.

The sudden death of Dr. George C. Lorimer at Aix-les-Bains recalls, perhaps more vividly than his religious books or his published sermons, his one novel, "The Master of Millions," which, although published last year, has already passed through several editions.

That Real Boy Again.

SEQUEL, OR, THINGS WHITCH AINT FINISHED IN THE FIRST. By Henry A. Shute. Boston: The Everett Press.

Our Boston correspondent informs us that Bostonians are neglecting serious works to read Judge Shute's continuation of his chronicle of a small boy's life in Exeter, N. H., in the early sixties. Well, it is easy reading—and droll. There is something of the real boy in it all, and, although we refuse to believe that this "diry" is an authentic document, we have no doubt that many actual occurrences are veraciously set down. Family names of Exeter are freely used, yet no old Exeterite has yet assailed the Judge as some Cape Cod folks assailed Sally MacLean. The real boy, having abandoned his "diry" in order to devote more time to mischief, begins it again suddenly for the reasons herein set forth:

Sept. 7, 186—Gosh, what do you think last night father and mother and me and Keene and Cele and aunt Sarah was sitting at supper when father, he sed i am going to read your diry tonite. Gosh i was scart for i hadent wrote ennything in it for a long time. so after supper i went over to mister Watsons and asked him if he dident want to see father and he sed he wood and i went home and told father mister Watson wanted him to come over jest as quick as he cood and father went over. i knew father woodent ever think of it agen.

The "diry" thus reopened carries the record of Plupy Shute's exciting life through an Autumn of mischief and pugilism, a Winter of snowballing and scarlet fever, a lively Spring, and a Summer vacation. There is much in it of the humor of a small boy's life, and the hopes and ambitions, imaginings, perplexities, trials, and disappointments which belong to it.

A Stolen Jewel.

THE GREEN DIAMOND. By Arthur Morrison. Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1.50.

Arthur Morrison in his graver moods is a student of human nature with a turn for philanthropy and a liking for the new and vaguely defined science of sociology. He has pictured for Londoners, vividly and sympathetically, and without exaggeration, the life of the lowly and sorely tempted in the great metropolis. He is always a good story teller, however, and in "The Green Diamond" he is nothing else. This is a good story, and one need not bother about its improbability. At the great Durbar in Delhi, to celebrate the accession of Edward, King of England, Emperor of India, a priceless green diamond disappears, under strange circumstances. It is traced to England and pursued there, and a love story, two or three murders, a bond robbery, and various other interesting matters are involved in the pursuit.

The diamond is never found. We are inclined to believe that the theory that it was hidden in one of a dozen magnums of imperial Tokay is false. But not all of us are good detectives.

Mr. Morrison sketches character boldly and with few strokes in this book. His American millionaire is a grotesque caricature, but so is his Scotchman. No harm is done. We recommend "The Green Diamond" to folks who like to read a good, stirring story for the story's sake.

Education and Religion.

UP THROUGH CHILDHOOD. A Study of Some Principles of Education in Relation to Faith and Conduct. A Book for Parents and Teachers. By George Allen Hubbell, Ph. D., Vice President of Berea College. 12mo. Pp. 303. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Certain skeptical Englishmen are in the habit of naming education the American fetich and cure of all ills. This is a book which strives to point the way to make education a cure for very many things, a way to make it a guide in the "right way." Especial reference is had to the upbuilding of character by education, and the religious element is naturally insisted on. In other words, Dr. Hubbell writes about education as a training for life and eternity, not as a mere apprenticeship to some trade or profession. His methods follow the line of the current psychological systems of pedagogy, he tries to lead you to understand the child (in his or her various ages and stages, moods, and tenses) before you undertake to teach it. In this regard, perhaps, he has nothing to add to what Prof. James and others have done. But Dr. Hubbell wants to apply these methods to Sunday schools and the like. He is of opinion that the weakness and inefficiency of Sunday schools and the "flabby tone" they have in so many cases (Dr. Hubbell admits these shortcomings as facts) are due to the absence of such methods. Part II. is devoted to the teacher. Part III. treats of the learner. Dr. Hubbell avoids technicalities as far as possible.

The Board of Health.

The officers chosen to serve on Health Boards will find almost a necessary little from its ten years of annual revision and the standing of its author, Lewis Balch. Dr. Balch is the Health Officer of Albany and the Secretary of the State Board of Health; furthermore, he is Professor of Medical Jurisprudence at the Albany Medical College. His object has been to put into the hands of the officials a working manual, a short, compact guide to be followed in the discharge of duties. It is not written as a legal work or as a digest of judicial decisions, neither is it a treatise on hygiene; it is simply a practical statement of the duties of health authorities required by the public health law of this State. There are a number of blanks to serve as models for newly organized boards; the prevention of certain diseases is described, what constitutes a nuisance, &c. The public health law of 1893 is quoted at length, and a fourteen-page index added. (Albany: Banks & Co.)

HARPER'S BOOK NEWS

The Georgians.

The scene of Will N. Harben's new novel is that of "Abner Daniel"; and Abner himself, with his shrewd humor, pervades the whole story. The plot is wholly original and has to do with characters largely new to fiction. It is the best story of Georgian life one can call to mind anywhere.

The Castle Comedy.

An engaging story of the time of Napoleon, written along comedy lines. The sprightly way in which the story is told, the dashing impudence of the hero, and the charm of the heroine, combine with the beauty of the volume to make this book unusually attractive. With illustrations in color and marginal decorations by Elizabeth Shippen Green. It is an ideal gift book.

A Dog's Tale by Mark Twain.

This wonderful little dog story by Mark Twain is published in attractive holiday style, with illustrations in color by W. T. Smedley. It is a perfect type of a perfect story. It is told from the dog's standpoint, and makes a wide appeal to all classes of readers.

Imperator et Rex.

A new book about Emperor William of Germany, by the author of "The Martyrdom of an Empress," whose knowledge of royalty in Europe is unrivaled, and whose entertaining style has been shown in her widely popular biographies of the Austrian royal family. The new book pictures the home life and human side of this unusual man.

The Flower of Youth.

This is by far the most important book that Roy Rolfe Gilson has written. It follows the delightful lines of his former successes, and can be compared only with "Prue and I." It is full of quaint humor and sentiment, and the parts dealing with child-life are handled with Mr. Gilson's inimitable touch.

Love in Chief.

A tale of English rural life, with the most winning of heroines. Dolly Fane is altogether charming, with her sturdy independence and original ways. The dialogue is frank and bright.

SAINTE-BEUVE.

In the celebration, whatever form it may take, next December of the centennial of the birth of Sainte-Beuve, every journalist conscious of an ideal in his profession, every lover of letters who sees how intimately and lastingly letters influence life and how real and serious is the accountability of him who aspires to practice them, should take a sympathetic interest. For undoubtedly Sainte-Beuve was a great and beneficent power in the French literature of the middle half of the nineteenth century, and French literature during his period of activity was the fine fruit of a national character and intellect singularly stimulating.

We think of Sainte-Beuve as a critic, and it was to criticism that he devoted the greater part of his life, producing in it far the greater and more important part of his remarkable work. But he began the literary career with poetry as well as criticism, and to this he added a romance of poetic tendency. And while it is the opinion of his most friendly judges that his verse was defective in the qualities that make verse live, he himself looked back on it in his riper years with tenderness and even with considerable approval—a fact worth remembering in a man so curiously and carefully shy of personal predilection in his judgments. And it is at least true that the temperament of the poet, the eager interest in the human soul, the sensitiveness to the emotion that impels life and the sentiment that so largely shapes it were unquestionably qualities that deeply impressed his noble work as critic and gave to it the permanent, ever-fresh, and refreshing tone it retains. "Truth" was the word, the English word, he had engraved on his seal, and it was an admirable expression of his purpose and his habit. But the truth he sought with such indomitable patience and to which he gave such unflagging devotion was not mere accuracy, though that he insisted on; it was the truth as to the life of the writers he commented on, their own life and that of their circle, nation, time. The gift he craved and cultivated and in the main attained in wonderful degree was insight.

Now it might well seem that insight is not a gift to be attained or even successfully to be cultivated in any practical degree, and undoubtedly there must be a working capital of sympathy with which to work. But given this, which Sainte-Beuve had in more than usual measure, his method was to be credited with much of his rich result. He was an intense and systematic student. His deliberate design was to master minutely the details of the subject on which he was engaged, to saturate his mind with it, to live with it as intimately as possible—more intimately, as he quaintly observed, than he could live with his contemporaries on the next floor—and from the depths of that intimacy to derive his critical judgments. He was singularly free from formulas, the besetting temptation of the professional critic, whom they tend to rob of the faculty of individual judgment, a temptation to which his great successor, M. H. Taine, was notably exposed. The charm and the value of Sainte-Beuve lay in the note of personal portraiture found in all that he did, the half-conscious revelation of the artist as well as of the sitter whom the artist drew, not in his own studio, but in the sitter's home or amid his daily occupations.

In the year 1865, four years before his death, it fell to Sainte-Beuve to distribute the prizes for virtue established by the respectable M. Montyon. On that occasion his gifted contemporary, M. Scherer, published a brief sketch of the distinguished Academician in his not too happy role, which reveals the impression he made in his later days. "A writer somewhat skeptical as to 'grand' devotion, singularly averse from the exaltations of the platform, with a style inhospitable to fanfares, as little suited as may be to the crowning of rosières and Sisters of Charity; complete good sense sharpened by long use; complete and penetrating finesse, with the tolerance experience gives, but also with the disdain it inspires for many an idol dear to the vulgar; sensitive assuredly to the great as to the beautiful in all things, but approaching neither from its theatrical side, a shrewd adviser, but nowise a preacher, touched by real merit, but not exaggerating it; just, and at heart indulgent, but hardly to be credited with emotion or unction."

It is not difficult to recognise in this brief portrait sketch the qualities that made of Sainte-Beuve the acknowledged representative of the intellect and character of his people to a degree no other writer of his time surpassed and few approached. He was one-fourth an Englishman, one of his grandparents being English, and he had a keen appreciation of English literature, especially poetry, which he thought could not be equaled in freedom and verve by that of the French, but this strain of foreign blood and love of the letters of another land were an aid rather than a drawback to his criticism of French literature in which most of his work was done. "Learn English," the advice he gave to a young writer of promise, was but the embodiment of the feeling most workers in language have that one tongue yields its riches more freely and fully under the light of another. What may be called cosmopolitan in Sainte-Beuve was his firm hold on that which was fundamental and enduring in the literature of France and his candor and acuteness in applying the standards of comparison. Certainly no reader of the present day not devoted to special study can hope to attain a fairly clear idea of that literature without including in his reading the wide and varied product of Sainte-Beuve.

The personal life of the great critic was a most laborious one. To the weekly task of the preparation of his articles he gave an immense and unremitting toil, which undoubtedly imparted to them their lasting value, but which also, especially in his later years, exhausted and depressed the writer and touched his work with a cynicism not wholly natural to the man. These years were shadowed, too, by the loss of many friends, some through death, others through the sharper separation of differences of attitude toward the Second Empire, under which he accepted the office of Senator, and which was nearing its fall when Sainte-Beuve died, in 1869. He was buried, according to his wish, without the addresses customary on such occasions—a last quiet protest against that "childishness" in public manifestations on the part of his countrymen which he had always avoided as much as possible and had gently satirized.

ENGLAND VANQUISHED.

"Der Weltkrieg." (The World War.) is the title of a startling new book, a "German Dream" the author calls it, written by August Niemann, and just published in Leipsic and Berlin by Herr Volach. An English translation, we understand, is soon to be published in London. It will make lively reading in England.

Herr Niemann seems to be a very serious and enthusiastic German patriot. The time of his story is about 1910, and he imagines that Mr. Balfour is still Prime Minister of England. There is a thread of a love story, but the book deals with larger matters.

Russia, happily recovered from the effects of her war with Japan, joins France and Germany to destroy the world power of England. With wonderfully little effort this alliance is brought about. A Russian army sweeps, by way of Afghanistan, over India, in the course of a few days subduing Lahore, Simla, Delhi, and everywhere welcomed, in contrast to the English tyrants, as offering to the natives freedom in religious belief and sympathy with local custom.

Meanwhile the German fleet, having obtained a copy of the British plan of action through an English lady who is beloved by a German officer, obtains, in combination with the French, command of the North Sea and the Channel. A German army under cloak of this action is quietly landed at the Firth of Forth, and England lies at the mercy of her conquerors. Result: India is handed over to Russia, France gets control of Egypt, Gibraltar is dismantled and given to Spain; German ambition is modestly content with South Africa, the federation of Holland as a member of her empire, and the possession of the port of Antwerp. The United States, Italy, and the British Colonies stand apart from the fray.

We understand that some Englishmen who have read the book regard it as a serious political manifesto and fear it may do harm. Others agree with the German critic, Friedrich Naumann, that the author's literary skill is so small as to limit the circulation of his book. This, however, is doubtful. Many "literary sensations" have been ill-written books.

Aubrey De Vere.

The memoir of "Aubrey de Vere," in active preparation by Longmans, Green & Co., by Wilfrid Ward, author of "W. G. Ward and the Oxford Movement," "The Life and Times of Cardinal Wiseman," "Problems and Persons," &c., is based on de Vere's unpublished diaries and correspondence which the noted philosopher-poet had intended to use in a second volume of "recollections."

The present volume is an attempt "at the exhibition of a very remarkable mind and character, as displayed in his intercourse and his correspondence with his friends." Mr. Ward, in his incidental selections from Aubrey de Vere's poetry, has had the same object in view; and while poems acknowledged to be among his happiest are included among them, the biographer's principal aim has been to choose those which best help to depict the poet himself. This is not, however, "in the fullest sense," a biography. All the letters have not been collected, and Mr. Ward has drawn mainly on those which de Vere had collected himself and was preparing for publication when he died. The biographer adds in his preface:

It will be to some readers an attraction, to others the reverse, that, as in the case of his beloved Dante, the poetry and philosophy of Christianity were the most absorbing subject of de Vere's imaginative meditation. The spirit breathed in the pictures of Giotto and Fra Angelico breathes in the letters and poems of Aubrey de Vere. And to minimize this element would be to fail in depicting the central object of his life and thought. Yet, as in the case of his great hero and friend Cardinal Newman, the play of human nature was very graceful and varied in him; and I have endeavored in my selection of material to do justice to both sides of his temperament.

There are two photogravure portraits of Aubrey de Vere and a couple of half-tones of Curragh Chase. In an appendix are given extracts from two letters from de Vere to Sara Coleridge, written in 1830, to illustrate the poet's philosophy of faith at that time.

Baedeker's Rome.

Central Italy and Rome, part two of "Baedeker's Italy," has reached its fourteenth edition. Of the 470 pages, 320 are needed for the description of the city itself, 130 for Southern Tuscany, Umbria, and The Marches. In this latter are such well-known towns as Florence, Siena, Pisa, Bologna, Perugia, Assisi, Rimini, and Ancona. There is an introduction of 76 pages, giving minute directions concerning railways, baggage, hotels, restaurants, wine shops, climate, history and art, a bibliography of the ancient city, a list of its Emperors and Popes, caution against beggars and a tariff of tips. Of the 49 plans 29 deal with Rome; there are 14 maps in the book besides a railway map of the whole country, a panorama of Rome, a view of the Forum as it was and as it is, and a couple of pages showing the arms of the Popes. There is also a list of the most important artists mentioned in the handbook, with a note of the schools to which they belong; also a forty-column index to the book.

Bound into the back and easily detachable if desired is an index of streets and a plan of Rome in separate cardboard covers. It contains a list and plan of the omnibus and tramway lines, cab tariff, list of the principal streets, public buildings, &c., and three plans of the city. The largest of them is a three-sheet map with a key map, each sheet a distinct tint to prevent confusion. (New York: Charles Scribner Sons. $2.25.)

"Riverland."

Robert W. Chambers's new "nature book for children" will be published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers Sept. 22. Mr. Chambers calls it "Riverland," and it is a companion volume to his "Outdoorland" and "Orchardland." Eight full-page pictures in color are furnished by Elizabeth Shippen Green.

Ferris Greenslet's "Walter Pater."

Ferris Greenslet's biography of Walter Pater, which William Heinemann is about to publish in London, was published here a year ago, by Messrs. McClure, Phillips & Co. in their Contemporary Men of Letters Series.

SWINBURNE.

THE publication of the new complete edition of the works of Algernon Charles Swinburne and of his volume of newly collected verse, "A Channel Passage and Other Poems," by Messrs. Harper & Brothers, will be deferred until later in the season. A critical review of the newly collected poems must be withheld until their publication in this country, but the appearance of the volume in London, with the imprint of Messrs. Chatto & Windus, is a matter of news not to be overlooked. These poems are political and historical as well as sentimental. The verses Swinburne wrote at the time of the Irish Home Rule movement under Gladstone are preserved, including these denouncing the great statesman:

The hoary henchman of the gang
Lifts hands that never dew nor rain
May cleanse from Gordon's blood again,
Appealing: pity's tenderest pang
Thrills his pure heart with pain.

Grand helmsman of the clamorous crew,
The good grey recreant quakes and weeps
To think that crime no longer creeps
Safe toward its end; that murderers, too,
May die when mercy sleeps.

The fierce verses on Russia, too, which created such a stir when they were first published, are reprinted:

So from hearts by horror withered as by fire
Surge the strains of unappeasable desire;
Sounds that bid the darkness lighten, lit for death,
Bid the lips whose breath was doom yield up their breath;
Down the way of Czars, awhile in vain deferred,
Bid the Second Alexander light the Third.

More agreeable to remember are his poems in honor of Nelson and Cromwell. "Nelson, Cromwell, and Shakespeare," says a London reviewer, "these are his gods." Here are two stanzas, quatrains of the FitzGerald-Omar type, from the tribute to the hero of Trafalgar Bay:

The Nile, the sea, the battle, and the shore,
Heard as we hear one word arise and soar,
Beheld one name above them, tower and glow—
Nelson: a light that time bows down before.

No year has yet put out the day when he
Who lived and died to keep our kingship free
Wherever seas by warring winds are worn
Died, and was one with England and the sea.

The Cromwell poem was written years ago, before the impressive statue that now stands in front of the Houses of Parliament had been accepted by the Commons; when, indeed, it had been refused:

What needs our Cromwell stone or bronze to say
His was the light that lit on England's way,
The sun dawn of her time-compelling power,
The noontide of her most imperial day?

His hand won back the sea for England's dower;
His footfall bade the Moor change heart and cower;
His word on Milton's tongue spake law to France
When Piedmont felt the she-wolf Rome devour.

Mr. Swinburne's Boer war verses are also preserved, but these have added nothing to his fame, even in his own land. "Swinburne the Apostle of Revolution," says a Tory newspaper, "was a worse statesman than Swinburne the Imperialist, but he was a far better poet."

In the verses which give the new volume its title Swinburne is again the poet of the sea and its "sacred spaces":

Forth from Calais, at dawn of night, when sunset Summer on Autumn shone,
Fared the steamer alert and loud through seas whence only the sun was gone;
Soft and sweet as the sky they smiled, and bade man welcome: a dim, sweet hour
Gleamed and whispered in wind and sea, and heaven was fair as a field in flower.

* * * * *

And the night was alive and unhungered of life as a tiger from toils cast free;
And a rapture of rage made joyous the spirit and strength of the soul of the sea.
All the weight of the wind bore down on it, freighted with death for fraught;
And the keen waves kindled and quickened as things transfigured or things distraught.
And madness fell on them laughing and leaping; and madness came on the wind;
And the might and the light and the darkness of storm were as storm in the heart of Ind.
Such glory, such terror, such passion, as lighten and harrow the far fierce East,
Rang, shone, spake, shuddered around us; the night was an altar with death for priest.

Childhood and the Elizabethans are as dear to Swinburne as the sea and the glory of his native land. Here are some lines in the new book, "To a Baby Kinswoman":

Sun and moon that lighten earth
Seem not fit to bless thy birth:
Scarce the very stars we know
Here seem bright enough to show
Whence in unimagined skies
Glows the vigil of such eyes.

For the Elizabethans there are prologues to various dramas. For Ford's "The Broken Heart," these lines:

That day was clouding toward a stormlit close
When Ford's red sphere upon the twilight rose.
Sublime with stars and sunset fire, the sky
Glowed as though day, nigh dead, should never die.
Sorrow supreme and strange as chance or doom
Shone, spake, and shuddered through the lustrous gloom.
Tears lit with love made all the darkening air

1904

Bright as though death's dim sunrise thrill'd it there
And life rerisen took comfort.

Of Marlowe he writes:

Blind fear, whose faith feeds hell with fire, became
A moth, self-shriveled in its own blind flame.
We heard, in thee, with even our seas that roll,
The speech of storm, the thunders of the soul.

And of Webster:

Where evil only crawled and hissed and slew
On ways where naught save shame and bloodshed grew
He bade the loyal light of honor live,
And love, when stricken through the heart, forgive.

There are tributes in this volume to Burns, George Frederick Watts, Leighton, and Christina Rossetti. Swinburne was a fervent admirer of the elder Dumas, and wrote the following verses to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the great romancer's birth:

Sound of trumpets blowing down the merriest winds of morn,
Flash of hurtless lightnings, laugh of thunders loud and glad,
Here should hail the Summer day whereon a light was born
Whence the sun grew brighter, seeing the world less dark and sad.
Man of men by right divine of boyhood everlasting,
France incarnate, France immortal in her deathless boy,
Brighter birthday never shone than thine on earth, forecasting,
More of strenuous birth in manhood, more of manful joy.
Child of warriors, friend of warriors, Garibaldi's friend,
Even thy name is as the splendor of a sunbright sword;
While the boy's heart beats in man, thy fame shall find not end:
Time and dark oblivion bow before thee as their lord.
Youth acclaims thee gladdest of the gods that gild his days:
Age gives thanks for thee, and death has no heart to quench thy praise.

The reviewer of The London Times calls the ode to Burns the best thing in the new book. It is unlike anything else Swinburne has written, and is in Burns's own favorite metre:

The daisy by his ploughshare cleft,
The lips of women loved and left,
The griefs and joys that weave the weft
Of human time,
With craftsman's cunning, keen and deft,
He carved in rhyme.

* * * * *

Above the storms of praise and blame
That blur with mist his lustrous name,
His thund'rous laughter went and came,
And lives and flies;
The roar that follows on the flame
When lightning dies.

A tribute to William Morris and Sir Edward Burne-Jones closes the volume:

No sweeter, no kindlier, no fairer,
No loveller a soul from its birth
Wove ever a brighter and rarer
Life's raiment for life upon earth
Than his, who enkindled and cherished
Art's vestal and luminous flame,
That dies not when kingdoms have perished
In storm or in shame.

No braver, no trustier, no purer,
No stronger and clearer a soul
Bore witness more splendid and surer
For manhood, found perfect and whole,
Since man was a warrior and dreamer
Than his, who, in hatred of wrong,
Would fain have arisen a redeemer
By sword or by song.

Men, mightier than death which divides us,
Friends, dearer than sorrow can say,
The light that is darkness and hides us
Awhile from each other away
Abides but a while and endures not,
We know, though the day be as night
For souls that forgetfulness lures not Till sleep be in sight.

The sleep that enfolds you, the slumber
Supreme and eternal on earth,
Whence ages of numberless number
Shall bring us not back into birth,
We know not indeed if it be not
What no man hath known if it be,
Life, quickened with light that we see not
If spirits may see.

The love that would see and would know it
Is even as the love of a child.
But the fire of the fame of the poet
Who gazed on the past, and it smiled,
But the light of the fame of the painter
Whose hand was as morning's in May,
Death bids not be darker or fainter,
Time casts not away.

New York Medical Directory.

Greater New York has so many physicians that the list of them published annually by the Medical Society of the County of New York fills over 250 pages of two columns each. Manhattan and the Bronx alone occupy nearly 160 pages.

Over a hundred pages are needed for a list of the practitioners in New York State outside of this city. New Jersey and Connecticut are included also. The last 125 pages contain varied information for the use of physicians and others. There is a list of the officers and committees of the Medical Society of the State of New York, the University of the State of New York, with the names of the Regents and of the State Board of Medical Examiners, and the laws and dates for its medical examinations; the names of the State Commissioners in Lunacy, a list of the physicians qualified to act as examiners, and another of the State hospitals, with their Superintendents. A list of pharmacies is given, arranged by streets under the boroughs, culture stations marked by a star. Then come the hospitals, with many details, including lists of physicians attending or consulting; benevolent societies, asylums, and homes; dispensaries and infirmaries, medical colleges, schools, and journals of New York; a full list of the Health Department, as well as fire and police surgeons, the names of the Coroners, and a street Directory. The whole is edited by Dr. Edmund Pearce Fowler. (New York: Medical Society of the County of New York. 8vo.)

Messrs. A. & C. Black have announced three volumes of a series of monographs on the great masters of the fine arts by Mortimer Menpes. These volumes deal with Gainesborough, Rembrandt, and Reynolds.

Science and Faith.

There are eleven essays in the volume entitled "Ideals of Science and Faith," edited by the Rev. J. E. Hand, editor of "Good Citizenship." They are "A Physicist's Approach Through Science and Education to Faith," by Sir Oliver Lodge; "A Biological Approach," by Prof. J. Arthur Thomson, M. A., of the University of Aberdeen, and Prof. Patrick Geddes of University Hall, Edinburgh; "A Psychological Approach," by Prof. John H. Muirhead of the University of Birmingham; "A Sociological Approach Toward Unity," by Victor V. Branford, M. A.; "An Ethical Approach," by the Hon. Bertrand Russell, author of "The Principles of Mathematics," &c.; "An Educational Approach—A Technical Approach," by Prof. Geddes; "A Presbyterian Approach Through Faith to Science," by the Rev. John Kelman, author of "The Faith of Robert Louis Stevenson;" "A Church of England Approach," by th Rev. Ronald Bayne, editor of "Hooker's Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity," fifth book; "The Church as Seen from the Outside," by the Rev. Philip Napier Waggett, author of "Science and Religion," and "A Church of Rome Approach," by Wilfrid Ward, M. A., author of "Witnesses to the Unseen," &c. The preface and introduction are by the editor of the book. Concerning the general character of the work the Rev. Mr. Hand writes:

> His general point of view is in the first place retrospective; it is analytical, also, of the present situation; it is hopeful, too, as regards the future, though not professing to lift the veil. * * * If we look beyond the militant scientists * * * we see that many men of science have felt more or less completely that the theologian has still his own problems, distinct from those of physical and natural science. Some prefer to ignore these problems; * * * others keep absolute silence; * * * others * * * have sought to formulate a scientific synthesis; * * * others deny both the scientific and the theological synthesis. Seldom do men of science and theology meet to think and talk these matters over. It is this attitude which gives its character to the present volume.

"Style in Furniture."

It is not the purpose of "Style in Furniture," by R. Davis Benn, which will very shortly be brought out by Longmans, Green & Co., to provide a complete history of furniture, the author writes in his introduction, but "simply to convey a knowledge of those National types which are still to be met with in original form," and which are perpetuated by the designer who draws from old forms for inspiration. The book opens with an account of furniture when James I. ascended the throne of England and continues dealing with every style that has won favor in that country since. The book has been written with two aims in view, as follows:

> In the first place, it has been the author's endeavor to treat his subject in such a vein as to render the text interesting to those who may wish to acquire sufficiently accurate knowledge of old English and some French furniture in order that they may be able to distinguish one style from another, to apportion each to its proper period, and to learn something of the history of all. * * * For the non-technical reader [illegible] minds; at the same time an effort has been made to refresh the memory respecting those leaders in art and literature of different ages whose names are venerated by all, and who in their day were unquestionably surrounded in their home life by such household gods as those depicted. * * * He has attempted also to demonstrate the fact that domestic furnishing, and particularly that of the past, may really be regarded as an outward and visible expression of the spirit underlying all National life.

Stamp Collecting.

An interesting book has been written by the President of the Junior Philatelic Society of London, Fred J. Melville. "The A B C of Stamp Collecting." (New York: Wycll & Co., 83 Nassau Street, 50 cents,) is a "guide to the instructive and entertaining study of the world's postage stamps." It is a tiny 16mo of about 150 pages, with a number of plates showing facsimiles of about 250 specimens from all the seven seas, ranging from the original stamped envelope Great Britain's tuppenny of 1840 through Abyssinia and the Cook Islands, Mafeking, Moldavia, and Sarawak to the Virgin Islands and Zanzibar. At the very end is a plate of a dozen unauthorized and bogus issues.

The story of the stamp, the romance of collecting, hints on how to start, warnings against fakes and forgeries, history in postage stamps, famous collectors and their collections, the philatelist's bookshelves, these are the subjects of a few of the chapters.

Elementary Arithmetic.

"Arithmetic Made Easy" is a name which will certainly sound attractive to those who are plodding through this study, and Mabel A. Marsh, the author of the book, has done her best to carry out all that the title promises. Though primarily designed as a handbook for teachers, it will be of use to pupils as well. The book is intended to simplify the teaching and learning of arithmetic and to convey the elementary principles and practice of that science on the lines of rational common sense. The author considers arithmetic when properly taught to be a mental discipline of the highest value, and it is with a view to employing its powers for the benefit of the thinking faculties that she has written this little book. In the introduction a few words are said to the teacher concerning the teaching of arithmetic.

The book is divided into twelve chapters; practical hints on class teaching, numbering and recording; decimal notation and simple processes, Work with various units, long processes, measures, and multiples; vulgar fractions, practice area and solidity, decimal fractions, unitary method, ratio, and proportion; square root and cube root, methods of working, &c, and conclusion. (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 30 cents.)

Pertwee's Prose Treasury.

Elocutionists, prize speakers, and others who must face an audience from the rostrum will find very helpful "The Reciter's Treasury of Prose and Drama," compiled and edited by Ernest Pertwee, Professor of Elocution in the City of London School. Its companion volume, "Reciter's Treasury of Verse," was reviewed in these columns some months ago, as have also others in the same series issued in uniform binding by the same publishers—"Harbottle's Historical Allusions," Swan's "Contemporary Quotations," &c.

Mr. Pertwee's "Treasury of Prose" is an octavo volume of over 900 pages that includes both serious and humorous selections. These are chosen from Froude and Elliot, and Goldsmith, and their like, but also from Jerome, Kipling, Maclaren, Turgenieff, and Stevenson; copyright matter has been freely used, by permission, the only exception being Stephen Phillips, scenes from whose dramas appear in the English edition that are not permitted the compiler to use in the American edition. This use of latter-day authors gives a freshness and value to the book which it could have had in no other way. (New York. E. P. Dutton. $1.50.)

OLD GORGON GRAHAM.

We published on Thursday what should be the most widely circulated book of 1904: George Horace Lorimer's new series of Letters from a Self-Made Merchant to His Son. The latter young gentleman is now a manager in the business instead of a clerk, and "Old Gorgon's" inimitably funny and shrewd advice relates to larger business problems. The fact that nine countries have called in advance for separate editions of "Old Gorgon Graham" shows the universality of its appeal. (Illustrated, $1.50.)

A BELLE OF THE FIFTIES.

Mrs. Virginia Clay-Clopton (the wife of Senator Clement C. Clay of Alabama) was a leading figure in the brilliant circle of Washington society during the two decades preceding the Civil War. Her memoirs, collected and edited by Ada Sterling, are full of most entertaining anecdotes of all the notabilities of that quarter century—social, political, musical, literary, theatrical. It is a fascinating and sprightly narrative by a typical Southern woman. With twenty-four portraits, two in color, from rare photographs and daguerreotypes, net $2.75. (Postage 28 cents extra.)

A Defense of Genealogical Literature and Research.

I.

New York Times Book Review:

A CORRESPONDENT in your paper of Sept. 10 expresses a criticism of the genealogical researches of members of patriotic societies. Attention is one of the first necessities, psychologically, in order to acquire ideas or information. The imagination is kindled by a personal interest, and the fad of working out one's ancestry or studying local history leads to a comprehension of historical movements and an understanding of the evolution of American society of to-day through contact with the conditions of our ancestors' lives, just as the pupils in German schools are taught geography by visiting mountains and rivers near home before they are taught about distant mountains and rivers, in order that the near may be the interpreter of that which is remote. The interest in particular things is always greater than in abstract things. Already the original American blood is hard to distinguish in the present generation. Sociologists point out the fact that the native-born population is failing to reproduce itself, therefore we cannot expect heredity and family tradition to perpetuate American ideals. The initial period of our country's history needs to be studied by the present generation in order that the character of the men of that day and the principles for which they stood may be appreciated; for our present prosperity is the fruit of their ideals of liberty. If the patriotic societies have led to a more vivid realization of those ideals, they have done enough to justify their existence; and the widespread revival of Colonial and Revolutionary topics in history, biography, description, and fiction is a proof that such a result has been achieved.

It is not strange that we should be proud of descent from the men who established this Nation; we may congratulate ourselves that our ancestry gives us a good start as American citizens, and we should show our pride not by boasting, but by regarding the fact as an obligation to perpetuate American liberties. I once heard a prominent Son of the American Revolution say: "If we are not better than our ancestors, with the opportunities they have prepared for us, we need to be ashamed of ourselves, instead of proud of our ancestry." Noblesse oblige. If a man is less than his ancestors, he is a degenerate, in other words.

To leaven new America with the spirit of the fathers is the worthy object of the patriotic societies, and it is their privilege to educate the immigrants and their children in the history and principles which made the Republic whose privileges they share and whose future they will make.

New York Times Book Review:

As an enthusiastic genealogist I cannot plead guilty to one of Arthur Thomas Dyson's acrid charges. My demoralization began in the nursery with tales by a grandmother (born 1763) relating to Uncle Ichabod, Aunt Keziah, and others as much more interesting to me personally than George Washington as the local column of the country paper touches me more nearly than the immense events of the Russo-Japanese war. The interest is much the same as that of a puzzle or algebraic problem or hunting. In straightening out the relationship to the few known people one's clues reveal themselves, following the plainest of which generally leads to tangles that invite attention. In America one's origins are so widespread that surprises occur along the entire way. De gustibus, &c. If you have the taste you have it, and that is all there is about it. To pick out and separate the strands in one's individual cable is at least a harmless hobby. DESCENDANT.

The Misuse of "Weird."

New York Times Book Review:

The vogue of the word "weird" in recent literature is noticeable. Not only in books but in the newspapers and monthly magazines its appearance is frequent. In the current number of The Century three writers use it in reference respectively to a natural phenomenon, a song, and a landscape.

The word is old Anglo-Saxon and is equivalent to fate or destiny. In this sense it is used by Chaucer and, by several sixteenth century writers, and it is still in living use in those districts of Scotland where the Scotch dialect, so called, survives. Scott's Meg Merrilees says of young Brown, "I kenn'd he behoved to dree his weird till that day cam"—that is, to endure or wait on his destiny. In another place we have "his weird is dreed"—his destiny is accomplished.

As is well known, the use of "weird," in modern English is due to a misapprehension of its meaning as employed by Shakespeare, who, in Macbeth, calls the supernatural women who greet the victorious Thanes "the weird sisters." Shakespeare found this designation in Holinshed, from whose Chronicle the story of the play is drawn, and that he understood its significance is evident because Holinshed is careful to make it clear. Later readers of Shakespeare, ignorant or forgetful of its derivation and supposing "weird" to be descriptive of the grotesque terror which the mysterious trio inspires, have appropriated and used it with an endless variety of meanings, all verging on what a Scotchman would call "the uncanny."

In evidence of its Shakespearean derivation it is to be noted that no writer has used "weird" in any of its modern acceptations until long after his lifetime and not until his writings were popularly known and widely read. In the first English dictionary to which I have access (Bailey, about 1740) "weird" is not given at all, and in Dr. Cooley's "Comprehensive Dictionary" (Edinburgh, 1851) it is given but one definition, "Skilled in witchcraft," while in the great modern dictionaries, as Funk's and the Century, definition is piled upon definition to the extent of half a column, involving minute shades of meaning, all of which, with the exception of "fate," destiny," and their equivalents, are pure imaginations of the writers whose names are quoted as authority.

"So Long."

I.

New York Times Book Review:

The Rev. William Dunn, an English clergyman, writing from Ponsonby Vicarage, says: "In Wright's 'Old English Vocabulary,' among words used in the fifteenth century, is one that possibly may survive, pronounced as 'so long.' It is spelled 'somedellonge,' and means in Latin 'aliquandiu.' 'Aliquandiu' is the equivalent in English of 'for some time, but not for long,' according to French, the lexicographer, whose work was Englished by T. P. Livent, and published at Boston, United States, by Wilkins, Rice & Kendall; my edition is dated 1852.

"I wonder," Mr. Dunn adds, "if I am on a warm scent."

The contribution to the lore of "so long" in last week's BOOK REVIEW is very acceptable. Some further version may come up. Meantime, "So long."

New York Times Book Review:

I wonder why the inquiry as to the origin of "so long" has troubled the minds of some of your readers. If these gentlemen had taken the little trouble of learning foreign languages, especially their beneficial mother tongue, the German, their wits would be sharpened so much as to easily perceive the meaning and the origin of the phrase.

When two Germans meet, and after a conversation about business or some matter to be properly arranged, part again, they are often heard to say as a farewell: "Bis auf weiteres," i. e., till further notice or till some other view or arrangement may please us. These words are a shortening of the sentence that this our view, is good "so long" till another and better one turns up. German-Americans say also "so lange."

Thackeray's Estimate of James Stuart.

New York Times Book Review:

In your issue of Sept. 10 Mr. W. L. Alden lauds, and I think justly so, the good public taste which as manifested in a certain recent incident still proclaims its adherence to Thackeray by selecting his "Esmond" as one of its three favorite novels. Neither with this nor Mr. Alden's further pronouncement that "Esmond" is one of our two great English historical novels do I quarrel, for I, too, am a Thackerayite born and bred. But yet if a certain fidelity to actual history be an essential requisite of the historical novel, what shall be said of the character assigned in "Esmond" to James Stuart, the Pretender. How many of the thousands who have read the novel, and have not read that hapless Prince's true story, have unhesitatingly consigned his memory to shades of infamy simply through their reliance on the truthfulness of Thackeray's portrait. Pilloried there by the hand of a compelling genius, he lives as the profligate Prince, the unscrupulous violator of hospitality. And yet nothing more opposite to the actual character of the young man, whose chief fault in the eyes of the ladies of his time was, as Andrew Lang justly says in his "Life of Charles Edward," "that he was too chaste," could be well imagined.

Another thing: It was this same James Stuart, who was so true to the faith for which his father had lost his throne, and to his own sense of honor, that when urged by Berkeley, Bolingbroke, and other Tory leaders to win back English loyalty by a letter professing—even a superficial adherence to Protestant tenets, refused that best chance of becoming King of England in language of enduring nobility. (See McCarthy's "Four Georges.")

Surely it is a pity that the pen of our great fiction master should have shaded so darkly the character of one who played a disheartening part with great dignity, and whose greatest fault was to fail where a Prince less scrupulous would have succeeded.

No Mystery in "They."

New York Times Book Review:

I differ from a writer in THE BOOK REVIEW who refers to Rudyard Kipling's "They" as poetical symbolism that has no practical significance. It has a deal of significance to some people. To those who have made a study of the higher or inner faculties of the mind, the beautiful blind woman's ability to see clairvoyantly the color of the emotions is nothing new. The black and red indicate ill-will and anger. The most complete work on this subject is C. L. Leadbeater's "Man Visible and Invisible" with color plates. I have myself proved by many experiments in telepathy that thoughts take form in a subtle matter and become visible to the mind's eye, as it were. I have taken part in experiments at night at a distance of several blocks, the messages sent and received being compared in the morning and found identical. This ability to see thought forms indicates a minor degree of clairvoyance.

Most people possess it.

The power to see the colors of the emotions indicates a higher type of clairvoyance not commonly met with. The Herald of last Sunday printed a story about a niece of the late Mr. Gladstone who has this faculty. The first signs of it appeared during three years of blindness from which she suffered. The theosophical publications give the best information on these subjects.

The Psychical Research Society has recorded overwhelming evidence for the existence of "ghosts," and Mr. Gladstone is on record as saying that the work of the society is the most important work being done in the world. But, then, what is a little matter like evidence when it conflicts with our prejudices. I would like to suggest as a balm to the lacerated feelings of many Kipling admirers that one can be well acquainted with the truth of certain statements put forward by theosophists or psychical researchers and yet be neither one nor the other.

"The Finest Story in the World," if I remember rightly, is merely an interesting story of a youth who could recall at times the memory of a past incarnation.

Herrick's Indebtedness to Anacreon.

New York Times Book Review:

There have recently appeared in THE BOOK REVIEW many references to the poetry of Herrick. I desire to call attention again to that subject. In a volume of "English Lyrics," edited by Edmund Gosse, (Appleton & Co.,) there is a charming and musical little effusion called "The Cheat of Cupid," attributed to Herrick, as if it were an original production. The editor, in his notes appended to the book, makes no remark to the contrary.

A long time after reading this I picked up Stanley's translation of the Odes of Anacreon. His version of Ode 3 seemed familiar to me, but I failed then to recall where I had seen it. One day, however, in a second-hand bookstore I accidentally noticed an old copy of Harper's Monthly containing an article on Herrick by T. B. Aldrich. This at once solved the mystery by suggesting the lyric to which I have alluded. Comparing the two poems, it is evident that each is a translation from the same original, that original being the Third Ode of Anacreon. The only difference is that the English poet omits the opening lines of the Greek. So far as I am aware, this "trifling literary curiosity" has escaped the notice of editors and critics. It may therefore be deemed worthy of a small space in your columns.

I have recently also come across two other instances of unacknowledged indebtedness to this same old Greek. George Bell & Sons (London) publish a volume, "English Lyrics from Spenser to Milton." Looking over a portion of this, I saw a poem entitled "The Grasshopper," by Cowley. This is really a rendering (with amplifications) of Anacreon's Forty-third Ode, on the same subject. The English poem is spun out to about three times the length of the original. There also appears another lyric, styled "Cupid in a Bed of Roses," the author of which is anonymous. Here again we plainly have a translation of the Fortieth Ode of Anacreon, to "The Bee." A careful reading of the book would probably increase the number of these poetic "pilferings."

We believe in giving even the devil his due. Why not, then, yield to the jovial and amorous Anacreon all credit which is justly his? His lyrical remains are few, but they have been a source of inspiration to several of his successors. They abound with touches of genuine poetic beauty which, linger in the reader's memory and become "a joy forever."

The Publisher Lloyd.

New York Times Book Review:

One may reason that, Colorado being so far off from London and 1840-90 so long back, Mr. William Howells Gulliford errs a little in his gloss on the notes about his old friend and partner, Edward Lloyd. "The String of Pearls; or, the Sailor's Gift," will be found only a more lackadaisical term for "Sweeney Todd, the (Ruffian) Barber of Fleet Street." As has been here pointed out, the story is based on a Parisian mediæval legend, that a barber supplied "the meat" for a neighboring pieman. His pies became the talk and the temptation of the epicures. For the variation, pieman and barber are one and the same—more likely than that two men were so criminal toward the gastronomical public. The first to use this ghastly incident for fiction was—laugh!—jolly old Paul de Kock. Another laugh, his historical romance—I am serious—called "The Barber of Paris," was reproduced in English by—another laugh—the respectable Richard Bentley, (identified in our time with "East Lynne," which he would not publish at a popular price as it was over the head of the shilling public!) Charming old-school publisher and gentleman—they are not incompatible, pace the carpers—it is a delight to recall him. He stood up for Ainsworth, I think, anent "Jack Sheppard" and "the Newgate novels" then. Much later, Paul's son Henri wrote the barber-pieman up in another historical romance. I repeat that Sala, who knew this legend well, repudiated writing it for Lloyd, but I guess he suggested it to his colleague. Further, familiar with Fleet Street as George was, I dare say he located the scene there, for a barber's shop, according to old prints, was here from Dr. Johnson's time. American tourists know the "tonsorial parlors" by Temple Bar, for its front has a tablet amid gaudy gilding setting forth that Cardinal Wolsey's town house was this one. With Truefitt's in Bond Street, this had the monopoly of American easy chairs, introduced into Liverpool much earlier by Capt. Lawrence of the Black Ball packets. This capillose saloon lies still under St. Dunstan's Church shade, but the automatic hammerman who struck the hours on the clock there is gone. A nobleman bought it for his Summer seat, having vowed, when his nurse took him to see it, that he would have the iron dolly one day. Readers of "The Sailor's Gift," for it was republished in this country, will mind them of the seafarer staring simply at "the Jack of the Clockhouse" and eagerly surrendering himself to the insinuative barber at his elbow. With his bundle, the string of pearls, he disappeared within the barber's shop. (To be continued in our next.) Lloyd, aiming at a higher ideal in publishing than "kitchen tales"—I thank thee, Mr. Gulliford, for the words!—he let the "barber," though famous as Beaumarchais's counter type, in cockneydom, sink into disuse. But the cheap reading rooms and circulating libraries retained copies.

A word as to Lloyd's Newspaper and his Chronicle. The confusion is as palpable as easy to commit. As here recorded, Lloyd founded his Weekly Newspaper nearly fifty years since. The "whole number" at its head is in four figures; it has now the largest circulation in the world—for a weekly newspaper—as the editor-in-chief of the Lloyd's Group is "right here." That can be verified. He will also keep me out, I dare say, in the following: Lloyd was sweet on the title of "Chronicle," since he published a weekly so called in the fifties. In our days, a printer in historic Cheapside (the ancient Gentleman's Magazine was published at St. John's Gate, here, and the place is under the walls of the prison impaired by the Fenian outrages,) took pity on the workers unable to pay the high price for advertisements; he issued a local sheet with "Wants" at a popular figure. Even that was too high for some "out-of-works," as one of the sights for "slummers" was the crowd reading his News, the sheets hanging on his railings freely. Lloyd bought the paper, stock and block, and clapped on the title of Chronicle. It is an axiom in English newspaperdom that it is better to invigorate an old paper than create a new one. The Chronicle is a success, and the little organ incorporated with it brought it profit and the popular goodwill.

Fiction and Real Life.

New York Times Book Review:

Fiction put up in sample packages seems to be the favorite mental food of the hour, mildly stimulating and guaranteed absolutely harmless. But though harmless, a package may not prove universally pleasing, and one such left upon my palate a disagreeable flavor. This is the short story in the September Booklovers Magazine, entitled "The Maid of the Mist."

The opening of the story, the artist Chilson painting in the country before the early mists have been put to flight, his seizure upon the maid with the pail as a delightful but quite unexpected and uncomprehending model—this is pretty enough, though there is manifest a touch of selfishness in the artist. To him art is supreme, the individual but a necessary instrument and aid.

A second division of the story deals with the private exhibition of Chilson's pictures to a few friends, their widely differing opinions, and chiefly the interest of his friend Judith in the country girl who appears in many of the sketches, and at her very best in one painting which he has named "The Maid of the Mist." A discussion arises concerning the depth of feeling and the intensity of love possible to such a child of the soil. Chilson asserts that "the nearest approach to love they know is mother love, and that is more than half instinct. The struggle for existence would kill the finer feelings if they had them, and, anyway, can the finer feelings exist without intelligence?" This view Judith strenuously combats and avers that one devoid of sensibility could not display such expressions of countenance as the artist caught and put upon his canvas.

Chilson loves Judith and wins her, and we find them next in his studio, where they indulge in some talk of art; but soon a misunderstanding arises. Judith has been thinking much about the "Maid of the Mist"—the flesh and blood maid—has read the girl's heart in the series of sketches, from the first shy wonderment even to the final despair of knowing that "her master" has no further use for her.

Now, Chilson does not see this, has never seen it, and Judith contends that one so blind, so selfishly centred in his art, may some time be blind to her. Whereupon a separation follows.

In the final division of the tale Judith is in the country seeking the "Maid of the Mist"—and finds her. Just one year has passed since she was the artist's sweet, rustic model. Now she is a wife, a common, hard, unlovely woman, flippant in speech and vulgar in her dress. Judith, recovering from the shock, rejoices that she was wrong and Chilson right as to the possibility of a country girl possessing any innate refinement or delicacy of feeling. And she hurries back to admit her mistake and accept the rejected hand of her artist lover.

This in brief is the story. If it were a piece of machinery, where all parts must work together harmoniously, this finale would be justifiable. But she is dealing not with a machine, but with human nature and the human heart. Had the girl been as Judith thought her, there would have been an awkward situation and an unhappy ending; it was so fortunate that she gave the lie to Judith's imaginings.

But in all fairness and honesty, had the author any moral right to end her story in that way? Has she not killed a soul for the sake of her story? I cannot but think so.

Stanley's Nationality.

New York Times Book Review:

The nationality of the late Sir Henry M. Stanley has often been questioned, both in Europe and on this side. Many believed him to be a Welshman; as many more that he was a native of America. Thirty-two years ago the subject received much discussion in England, the result of which seemed to show that he was a Welshman. Stanley himself long claimed that he was an American by birth. Some time after the above discussion he wrote a friend of the present writer, Mr. Charles Ollivant of Bath, England, as follows:

London, Aug. 22, 1872.

My Dear Ollivant: A thousand thanks for your letter and clippings. If I were to answer all the letters that I have received about such questions as The Rhyl Journal propounds, I should certainly be called an idiot, and deservedly so. I care not what anybody writes about me, nor do I intend to notice them. If English and Welsh folks are so gullible as to believe all the "rot" they read about me, I cannot help it—nor have I a desire to help it in any way. But for you, and such kind friends, I say I am an American, and can prove it by over 10,000 friends in the United States. The letter in The Rhyl Journal is all bosh. I never knew a man named Evans, nor have I ever sung a Welsh song, not knowing anything of the language. My name is neither Thomas, Rowlands, Smith, Jones, nor Robinson, but plain Henry M. Stanley. At sixteen I was in Missouri, at seventeen in Arkansas, at eighteen in New Orleans, at nineteen in Europe, traveling; at twenty in the war, and so on. Yours, &c.,

HENRY M. STANLEY.

This letter was published in The London Daily News of Aug. 27, 1872. Shortly after its appearance Lord Granville collected documents proving that Stanley was a native of Wales. The letter is placed before the readers of THE BOOK REVIEW as a curious historical document.

Charles Ollivant was private secretary to the lamented Capt. Mayne Reid while the latter was conducting his Onward Magazine for boys in New York City.

Dean Ramsay and Misused Words.

New York Times Book Review:

Owing perhaps to my nationality and a laudable admiration for the unique work of my countryman, Dean Ramsay, I was gratified to know that that finest work of humor (at least to the initiated) is perused by readers who cannot be supposed to be familiar with British Doric. I quite agree with your correspondent "C. K. B." On your "From Readers" page, that the relish of the reminiscence is more valuable than any finical "gerund grinding," and I hope that his quiet suggestion to his countrymen to reform their remissness will be meritied fruit.

(Parenthetically, allow me to congratulate you on the encouragement which you give your correspondents to ventilate their discussions on phrases, terms, and words, and thus cultivate in your readers the habit of exactness in the use of words. Will you also allow me to express the hope that you will as liberally countenance reminiscential contributions?)

Not in a spirit of hypercriticism, I should like to remark with some degree of decision that the word "carry," as used by Donald, is, although archaic English, peculiarly antiquated Scotch; and the anecdote is given by Dean Ramsay with the knowledge that the word was disappearing from the language, and for the purpose, as he says, of "fixing and preserving" it in memory. In the same way the Dean has stereotyped the definition of the old Scotch word "silly"; quite necessary, as the modern and English use of the word, in the general tendency, has become abstract instead of concrete. So Buckle ("History of Civilization," Chapter XVII., Page 683) has misunderstood the word, (pardonably, I think,) although he had read the "Reminiscences."

I am not prepared, however, to exculpate so readily the writer on Wordsworth in your "Current Comment" columns of the same issue) for his use of another Scotch word, "airts." I think the writer, independently of using a quotation of which he does not know the meaning, should have remembered the explanation in "Sartor Resartus", "With its windows it looked toward all the four orte, or, as the Scotch say, and as we ought to say, airts" (quarters.) A great many pure Scotch words are German in form as well as meaning, and a great many which have not the form retain the meaning, and vice versa. The German "führen" reminds one of the Scotch word "carry," and the German "alber" is from "albe," white, pale, weak, "silly."

Nelson and the Nile Campaign.

New York Times Book Review:

Prof. Gauss, in his review of "The French Revolution," in the Cambridge History, has made a mistake curious in one of his ability. In speaking of the Nile campaign Mr. Wilson did not mean just the battle, (Aug. 1 and 2.) He referred to the time in May when the storm drove the blockading fleet off Toulon, under Nelson, to Sardinia. From the escape of the French expedition to the battle of the Nile Nelson scoured the Mediterranean from end to end, landing at Messina, Malta, Crete, and Alexandria, where he was just four days ahead of the French, without finding the foe. At Sicily, where he had put in to get water and food, he had definite news, and left again for Alexandria.

Nelson was a man of delicate physique, poor health, nearly always seasick, and the year before (1797) had lost an arm at Santa Cruz. Add to this the wear and tear, mentally and physically, of that three months' campaign, and Mr. Wilson's theory has a very good foundation, whatever the truth may be.

As to Nelson's conduct at Naples in 1799, caution ought to be used by reviewers, even if they are professors. Quite a literature is growing up on this subject. Taking into view the excesses committed by the French and their allies at Naples, the character of warfare as then carried on, the power and rights of the King of Naples to judge his rebellious subjects according to the laws then prevalent, the fact that Nelson was subject to the British Ambassador, and that England was an ally of the Neapolitan monarchy; that the rebels had surrendered without conditions, or to one who had no power to grant conditions, (this is the disputed point,) and the fact of Nelson's ill-health (real or false) may go to show that we ought not to make haste in our condemnation.

Alonzo and Melissa.

New York Times Book Review:

The recent allusions in your columns to the book "Alonzo and Melissa" come to me like news from a long-lost friend. During the years from 1860 to 1868, as nearly as I can remember, it was my custom to make a short visit every Summer at the house of a great-aunt who lived alone up among the hills of Warren, Conn. The book under discussion was the only work of fiction in the house, and occupied a place of honor on the top of a chest of drawers. Although full of horrors, it had a great fascination for me, and I read it again and again. In telling my own children of my childhood experiences, this book was often referred to, but I never found any one else who had ever heard of it.

My great-aunt's death put an end to my visits there years ago, and the house itself is gone; but I drive by the place occasionally, and, among all other recollections, none stands out more clearly than that of the old book. Its horrors have faded, and only "a fragrance of dried rose leaves fills the air."

A Needed Law Book.

New York Times Book Review:

Referring to the recent correspondence in THE BOOK REVIEW regarding "A Needed Law Book," may I call attention to the [illegible] Practice Commissioners of the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals have recently issued. We have not a copy of your editorial which is referred to; but we feel confident that Mr. Flander's book is just such a one as will fill the requirements of the layman. One fact which strengthens our opinion of the book is that it has been adopted at the United States Military Academy, and it is used by the schools for officers throughout the United States Army. The Army and Navy Journal in a recent review spoke in very high terms of the value of this book.

Titles and Their Rights.

New York Times Book Review:

The copyright of a book clearly covers its title. In 1881 the English Court of Appeal pronounced that, "In general," there can be no copyright in the title or name of a book. (Lord Justice Lush, one of three Judges sitting, "did not dissent"—this eminent jurist usually put a spoke in a wheel, if possible, by the way.) Of course, literal identity of the text would be plain piracy, but of the title it is of no consequence. A case in point: An English author had published a story called "Denise." The novelisation of Dumas, Junior's, play of "Denise" was announced under that title, but the former objected; reply as above, but as publisher's courtesy, the latter was issued as "The Story (of the play) of Denise." Yet in newspaper cases the title—held to be a chattel in England, on which money is lent, and the stationers' safes are full of them—cannot be used for any similar publication. (Lord Justice Wood, "The Sporting Life" case.)

An extra clamp can be affixed by securing the name—if the book belongs to a series continuing its sense—as "The Last of the Barons" might belong to a "Barons" Series, under the trade mark law. The writer always counseled this to his London house, and recently the example has been followed. See "The Chatterbox" case here.

Emerson's First Book.

New York Times Book Review:

In its issue of to-day THE BOOK REVIEW states that "the first pamphlet * * * of which Emerson was the sole author was a 'Letter to the Second Church and Society,' (of Boston,) resigning his charge as pastor of that congregation, Dec. 23, 1832."

About four years ago I bought a small book, reviewed shortly before in the columns of THE BOOK REVIEW. The title, unluckily, has escaped me, and the friend to whom I gave the book is not available to quote the needed data. At all events, the title was akin to "Valedictory, Delivered Before the Graduating Class of Dartmouth [?] College, * * * 1825." At the time of its publication in the form in which it was reissued it was said to be Emerson's first published book.

I do not recall the publishers of the edition of which my copy was one, but I fancy they were Ginn, Heath & Co. Other things being equal, is not that "Valedictory," of published separately originally, Emerson's first book, and so entitled to precedence over the "Letter"?

It is probable that some of your readers may supply details about this reissue. Surely it cannot have passed out of mind in four years or so.

"Poetry of the People."

New York Times Book Review:

Ginn & Co. have recently published a little book, "Poetry of the People," edited by Charles Miles Gayley and Martin C. Flaherty of the University of California. It is an attractively gotten-up work, but the carelessness with which it is edited is illustrated by the fact that "Marching Through Georgia" and "Wearing of the Green" are printed anonymously, and, "We Are Coming, Father Abraham," is attributed simply to "Gibbons." It surely would have required little trouble to ascertain that the former was written by Henry Clay Work and that the latter was a song in Dion Boucicault's "Arrah Na Pogue," while James Shaw Gibbons was well enough known as a financial writer to make his identification easy. Work's other songs, especially "Wake, Nicodemus" and "Kingdom Coming," used to be familiar enough, and there was a peculiar appropriateness in his writing negro songs if, as I think was the case, he was the son of one Alanson Work, who was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment in Missouri for an attempt to assist fugitive slaves, and actually served a term of over three and a half years.

The Use of "The."

New York Times Book Review:

I am not quite satisfied with Mr. Woodbridge Hall Birchmore's reply in the Book REVIEW of last Saturday to my letter of the week before. Having taken the "step further" that he advises, I have not yet arrived. Should not the expression "H. M. S." however used, carry along with it in the reader's mind its grammatical as well as euphonious extension? The form "H. M." is used as a synonym of "English." But in the same category is "U. S.," which admits of grammatical use either way. So I remain unconvinced by Mr. Birchmore's defense of the objectionable form, for he, at least, condones it. I do not remember having heard it as often as he has. The sailors of the older school would, I think, have said, "H. M. ship Pegdot."

"To Carry" for "To Lead."

New York Times Book Review:

Referring to the inquiry concerning the use of "carry" for "lead," may I say that I hardly think it can be common in New England or other Northern States. I have often heard "take" so used, but never "carry." From my own experience I should say that a New Englander might appear somewhat mixed as to the means of conveyance, but there would need to be some visible means to justify the use of "carry."

A Book for Girls.

JOSEPHINE. By Ellen Douglas Deland. Illustrated. 12mo. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

Girls will be sure to like Ellen Douglas Deland's story of "Josephine." Josephine is such a nice girl, without being "preachy," and little Georgiana is very well mannered, too. They were sisters whose father died, leaving them and six other sisters to the care of a stepmother. The stepmother treated the girls well enough, but she had no money and less business sense, so that there was nothing to do but distribute the family among various relatives. Josephine and Georgiana fell to the lot of Dr. William Hale of Stockton, whose own family comprised four motherless boys. Dr. Hale had not kept much in touch with his brother before the latter's death, so that when belated word reached him that "Jo and Georgie" would arrive within a few hours it was quite natural that the family expected a visitation of "boys."

It took tact on Josephine and Georgie's part to eradicate the deep-seated aversion to their sex that the boys of the doctor's household entertained. Also Mrs. Sparks, a most formidable lady who ever since the death of Mrs. Hale had reigned supreme as housekeeper, was not easily subdued. It was all very strange and not so pleasant at first, for the two girls, but in the end their cheery disposition and sunny tempers triumph, and the entire Hale quartet end by voting the girl cousins "the right sort." There is also a romance worked out in the house next door—all through Josephine, who succeeds in reuniting a divided family and bringing two lovers to each other's arms.

It is a nice, wholesome story, and we recommend it as interesting reading for girls of thirteen or fourteen.

J. J. Bell's New Story.

JESS & CO. By J. J. Bell. 16mo. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

The nominal heroine of Mr. J. J. Bell's latest story is a city-bred girl who talks quite like the rest of us and is, moreover, a gentle, sweet-mannered little woman very much in love with her big, happy-go-lucky Scotch husband. The real heroine, however, is Aunt Wallace, another Mrs. McLerie, only a trifle more peppery of temper, but just as large of heart. David Houston, the big husband, though a joiner by trade, nevertheless loved his garden far more than his shop; so much so, in fact, that had not Jess, in her tactful, gentle way, taken hold of matters at the shop David might have lost both his shop and his garden. As it was, under the tactful guidance of Jess, who never let her husband know what she was doing, things turned out happily and in the end she was able to help David to exchange his carpenter tools for a gardener's outfit by buying out the village nursery.

This, briefly, is the story. The rest of the book concerns itself with philosophy of the aforementioned Mrs. Wallace, Mr. Ogilvy, the village grocer who could keep a secret like a "tinned tongue," David, gentle and unpractical, and a few others. Opening the book at random one finds passages of undoubted truth and interest. Mrs. Wallace is discussing the virtues of men in general and the late Mr. Wallace in particular.

Ye see, he aye paid a compliment just afore he made a complaint, so I wis aye ready fur the complaint an' I jist never heedit. There's naithing cures a man's complaints quicker than peyin' nae attention to them. Your uncle never complained twice aboot the same thing. He aye had something new, an' that kep' him frae gettin' tiresome. 'Deed, ay; he wisna bad fur a man. * * * I mind yinst he slep' the mornin' an' cam' in late to his breakfast. "Whit kep' ye?" says I. * * * "Oh," says he, smilin' that sweetlike, "I cudna help turnin' ower an' ha'ein' anither wee bit dream aboot ye, ma' dear." * * * That wis the compliment, Jess, an' I kent fine there wis nair to come. * * * "This ham's hauf cauld," he says, lukin' at me across the table. * * * That was the complaint, ye see! "Weel," says I, wi'oot loasin' ma temper, "if ye dinna' eat it quick it'll be quite cauld." * * * A saft answer's worth tryin noo an' then.

Once Mr. Ogilvy, whose natural disposition was "melancholical," undertook to break bad news:

I'm no the yin to break bad news, (he admitted afterward.) I canna dae it in a cheery enough style. Ma disposeetion is ower melancholical, an' I mak' the bad news seem waur than it really is. I mind when John Cameron's wife ran awa'—eloped, as it were * * * an' I was deputit to inform John o' the distreasin' occurrence. I wis near chokit wi' emotion, an' it was wi' a supreme effort that I produced the unseasonable information. An' when I had feenished, John Cameron just drew a lang breith an' a' he said was: "An' what are ye groanin' aboot, Ogilvy?"

Prof. Dole's Poem.

Nathan Haskell Dole has arranged to bring out shortly his two poems, "The Building of the Organ" and "Onward." They will be in time for the St. Louis Peace Congress. The volume containing them will be called "Peace and Progress." The first poem consists of a prologue and four symphonic movements describing in varying rhythms the building of the Cathedral and the dedication of the organ, a wedding festival, the obsequies of a national hero, and the end of a great war for freedom. "Onward" was Mr. Dole's Phi Beta Kappa poem. It depicts in nine symphonic movements the progress of civilization among cave dwellers, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, men of the Renaissance and of our own day, with a hint of what may come when war is abolished.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Views of Experts at Home and Abroad on Matters of Interest in the World of Books.

WILLIAM VAUGHN MOODY'S "THE FIRE BRINGER."—To be satisfied with revamping the Prometheus myth argues inability to construct.

"After all, good poet," we ask, "why try to compose variations on Aeschylus's masterpiece, any more than on the Book of Job or on 'Paradise Lost'? If you have a cosmic interpretation, give it an original and appropriate symbol. Do not delude yourself by supposing, because Shakespeare revamped an old tale into 'Hamlet,' and Goethe magnified a mediaeval legend into 'Faust,' that you can revamp Aeschylus. They took something mediocre and transmuted it by their genius into something supremely good; you would begin by taking something supremely good and would transmute it—into what? Certainly not into something better."

On the score of his theme, then, we regret that Mr. Moody has revealed his limitations. With such a theme, it does not surprise us that the puppets through whom he ventriloquises have no trace of nature about them. We are bored by the supernal creatures who shiver in Black Night on the slope of Caucasus. Shelley pre-empted once for all in "Prometheus Unbound" the entire dramatis personæ and stage thunder, the Voices, the Spirits, the Shapes, required for this sort of drama. Many persons, unable or too lazy to visualise their thoughts, like to associate with such flimsy spectres—they even mistake this for a sense of the sublime; but whatever excellences "Prometheus Unbound" possesses, they do not really spring from such insanity. They exist in spite of it. And the same is true of Mr. Moody's "Fire Bringer," which is rich in poetic raw material, in metrical skill, in ideas, in many a vivid word, phrase or picturesque epithet. But all these cannot galvanize into life or make interesting the cold carcass of Mr. Moody's theme. One longs to urge him to jettison all his cargo of spurious classicism, and to address men today with the modern thoughts that are in him. Let him take warning by Bayard Taylor with his "Prince Deucalion"; let him remember Hengist Horne with his "Orion." Who reads, or would be paid to read, those very admirable tours de force?

The Greek drama petrifies the work of all moderns who attempt to imitate it. Shelley's "Prometheus" is "classical" neither in form nor spirit. Swinburne's "Atalanta in Calydon," which has a wider reputation than any other recent mongrel "classical" drama, is quite un-Greek, and could not help being so; for Swinburne, with his verbosity, his cheap metrical tricks, his readiness to sacrifice everything to rhyme, his intellectual immaturity, his moral slackness, is the antithesis of Aeschylus and Sophocles. You never mistake their passion for neurotic outbursts, nor feel that, for the sake of tickling your ear with a rhythmic straw, they will string together words which have no substance of thought behind them. The Greek dramatists had, in the first place, always something to say; Swinburne often reminds us of the boy who whistled as he went—for lack of thought; for him the tune is everything.

And so, although we have high respect for Mr. Moody's devotion to his theme—a devotion which has withdrawn him too long from giving free utterance to his genuine talent, and which threatens to absorb another year or two of his time until he has completed his trilogy—we hope that he will reconsider his determination, and let the proposed third drama go. "The Masque of Judgment" and "The Fire Bringer" will more than serve as witnesses to his earnest endeavor to compel an impossible medium to obey him. Let him adopt a medium through which his modern message can reach modern ears. A lover to-day does not write his love letters in Assyrian on bricks; no more should poets to-day revert to antique themes, which the ancients themselves exhausted, or try to bind new meanings on old symbols. A Prometheus who discourses in post-Darwinian terms on man and the cosmos is an anachronism if he be not a fraud. Mr. Moody's poetic craftsmanship is now so well trained that it needs only to be set to work in a proper field in order to produce results which shall be in a high sense popular and shall lift him out of the theory of academic experimenters in verse into the circle of true poets.—Harvard Graduates' Magazine.

SIZES OF BOOKS.—The sizes oftenest found in this case are between the medium 12mo of 5 by 7½ inches, and the super-royal octavo of 7 by 11 inches. Essays, poems, novels, biographies, histories, books of instruction as well as those of amusement, are more salable and most acceptable when made within the measurements here specified. Dr. Johnson has wisely said that the books of most service are those that can be held in the hand.

Yet there always have been and always will be smaller and larger sizes. There must be "pocket editions" of the Bible, of prayer and hymn books, of school dictionaries, guide books, advertising pamphlets, society by-laws, interest and measurement tables, and other compact manuals intended for frequent reference. There must be maps and prints of great width that can be conveniently examined only when outspread upon a broad table. Some of the smaller sizes may be the caprice or of penuriousness, some of the larger of needless ostentation, but in most instances the manner in which the book must be used determines its size and shape, and the size will vary accordingly from a leaf 1 by 1½ inches to 25 by 38 inches.

The projector of the new book has the right to make it of any size. Neither law nor custom forbids. If he is economical he selects a size that will not waste paper unduly; if he wants to show his independence of accepted forms he orders a leaf of peculiar shape. This accepted size or shape he says is too narrow and tall; that is too short and squatty. If his book is unlike any other in dimension it is an exhibit of his superior taste. It follows that a collection of miscellaneous books on the shelf presents a sorry sight to the lover of order and proportion. One so-called octavo will be 9⅝ by 6 inches, another of the same name 8¾ by 6¼ inches. Between the catalogued 18mos and post 8vos and the 16mos and 12mos is no accepted line of distinction. Variations of an inch in height are common in books labeled by the same name.

The names that are used to define sizes are absurdly indescriptive. In the infancy of printing publishers tried to define sizes by giving to each size a numerical name intended to show the proportion that the leaf bore to the full sheet on which the leaf had been printed. A sheet folded to two leaves of equal size made a folio leaf; to four leaves a quarto; to eight leaves an octavo; to twelve leaves a duodecimo. If all books then and afterward had been printed on sheets of the same size, and had been folded in a uniform way, the numerical names would have been descriptive; but sheets were of many sizes and folding was done in many different ways even before printing was invented.

The sheets most acceptable to printers of the early period were pot, about 12 by 16 inches, and intermediate sizes to large demy or post, about 17 by 22 inches, but the sizes provided by papermakers were irregular. Each one had his own standards.

Names of book sizes were misleading. The folio of pot paper (or foolscap) was about 12 by 7½ inches, and that of demy (large size) about 17 by 11 inches, but the trade names of the papers were rarely added to the word folio, even when the number of square inches in the leaf of demy was twice as much as that of the pot paper. * * * This enlargement of paper and presses has destroyed the significance of the numerical names that were based upon a real or supposed proportion between the sheet and the number of leaves in that sheet. The so-called 8vo, when printed from a sixteen-page form, is really a 32mo of the size; the 12mo on double paper is a 48mo, and on quadruple paper a 96mo. Sheets so printed are usually cut up in sections of sixteen pages, and separately folded. When a sheet has to be subdivided in two or more sections, it is seriously misleading to give to the folded leaves so produced numerical names that imply a proportion that does not exist between the leaves and the full sheet. It is the number of leaves in the section, and not the number of leaves to the sheet, that should justify the application of numerical names. The proper definition of the word octavo should be not sixteen pages to the sheet, but sixteen pages to the section of sixteen leaves that are folded and sewed together in a signature.—Theodore L. De Vinne in Printing Art.

AN ENGLISH MEMORIAL TO SHAKESPEARE.—Mr. Beerbohm Tree considers that it will be a great discredit to the nation if a little later on in this twentieth century we do not see a worthy national memorial to Shakespeare.

Mr. Richard Badger's generous offer brings the scheme into the region of the practicable and Mr. Tree is strongly of opinion that the time is ripe for it.

Mr. Tree's idea is that first of all a representative committee should be formed, consisting of well-known personages in literary, dramatic, artistic, and public life. He announced that he would be most happy to give His Majesty's Theatre for a meeting of such worthies, who would take steps to advance the project.

The idea of a national memorial to Shakespeare greatly appeals to Mr. Tree, and though the present scheme is not his, and he offers no suggestion as to the form the memorial should take, he is keenly desirous that it should be taken up and the opportunity made the most of.

Mr. Badger is now eighty-five. He was educated at Stratford-on-Avon, he is an enthusiast in things Shakespearean, and the dream of his life has been to see a fitting memorial to the great dramatist.

Last year he made a suggestion that the nation should erect a statue to Shakespeare's memory, and he offered to pay £500 towards the expenses. He wrote recently to The Times to say that the London County Council approved fully of the scheme and would provide a site, but to his disappointment the Council could not take part in collecting the necessary funds.

He confirmed his previous offer of £500 down, and added that he would give an additional sum of £2,000, provided the result of an appeal for funds to the nation were such as to make it certain that a memorial commensurate with Shakespeare's greatness and fame in every way worthy of him could be raised. Nothing more was heard of the scheme till yesterday.

Mr. Tree declared that it would be a great pity if the matter were allowed to drop. He did not think that there would be any real difficulty in raising the requisite funds once the necessary representative committee were got together.

He himself would be delighted to contribute, and he was sure that the members of the theatrical profession generally would be inclined to respond generously. As he wittily remarked, they are not paying author's fees to Shakespeare—Mr. Tree yesterday was busy with a rehearsal of "The Tempest"—and some there were who would look on their offerings to the fund as a kind of conscience money.

It has been suggested by many since Ben Jonson's day that Shakespeare needs no monument beyond his works. Few people are more enthusiastic than Mr. Tree in regard to the works, but he thinks that the nation should give visible proof of its gratitude for Shakespeare's magic in a great memorial. It would be a graceful and striking tribute of the twentieth century.

As to the nature of the memorial, Mr. Tree does not care to put forward his own views. He would like to see the whole matter taken up as a national scheme. Lord Rosebery was incidentally suggested as chairman. He wants to see all the great departments of national life represented in the committee.

Mr. Tree has expressed the wish that Mr. Swinburne would identify himself with the memorial, and, of course, as a Shakespearean student of learning and insight a great force would be given to the movement if he could be induced to take an active part therein.

But there seems little hope, our representative says, of interesting him in the subject. He has more than once expressed his dislike, that is to say, to fitting on the statues of all sorts and conditions of the greatest of all men, could by any chance or fortune be designed.

If it should happen that a statue to Shakespeare is decided on, it may be pointed out that Mr. Swinburne has no belief in any portrait of Shakespeare except the Droeshout copper engraving on the title page of the First Folio. He thinks that he sees in it the suggestion of the power and character of the man. Of the once famous Chandos portrait, which cannot be traced earlier than Betterton, he, Mr. Swinburne, has a positive dislike.

It does not seem, by the way, to be so well known in England as in America that the series of essays on Shakespeare which Mr. Watts-Dunton is editing (in some cases writing) for Harper's is enriched by some of Mr. Swinburne's finest criticisms on Shakespeare. Essays on "Lear," "Richard II.," and "Othello" in this (in American) noted series are his. Mr. Watts-Dunton, himself a profound Shakespearean critic, contributes the studies of "Hamlet" and "Macbeth."

Mr. Watts-Dunton's view of the memorial idea is not unlike that of Mr. Beerbohm. He thinks, however, that if it were at all possible to get a really adequate monument, like one of the best monuments on the Continent, nothing would enrich London so much.—London Daily Chronicle.

BOOK FORGING.—"Book forging is my business," said an elderly man on a roof garden. He had been drinking, and this made him more communicative than wise.

"Yes, Sir, I am a book forger," he continued. "I make good money at it, too. Last year I made $7,500."

"What, may I ask, is book forgery?" said the man's companion.

"I'll tell you. It is the binding of old books in such a way that people think old masters bound them. I can take an old book worth, say, $5, and I can put on it a Grolier binding that will make it worth $200. That will only be about two days' work—$185 earned in two days.

"I used to bind books legitimately at a bindery and my salary was $35 a week. I couldn't live on that, you know, with my expensive tastes.

"Well, one day a rich patron brought a Grolier to the shop to be repaired, and I, just for fun, copied the binding. Then I got hold of an old French pamphlet and I covered it with the forged Grolier binding I had made. Afterward I took the volume to a dealer in old books and he bought it like a shot for $108.

"'Why,' he said, 'this is a genuine Grolier.'

"That started me in the business. I made a study of the finest old bindings that exist. These are the bindings that were made for the Valois Kings. Grolier and Maioli were the great artists of the time, and their bindings in the libraries of Francis I., Henry II., and Charles IX. were the most splendid that the world has ever seen.

"The simpler examples of Grolier and Maioli are the ones I forge. I sell my forgeries to millionaires. In seven years I haven't had a complaint."—Chicago Chronicle.

PROVERBS, MAXIMS, AND SAYINGS.—This book, [Lean's "Collectanea," in four volumes,] like a dictionary, is intended for reference rather than for reading. Its compilation was the work of a life, devoted from early manhood to that one purpose. The late Mr. Vincent Stuckey Lean, a native of Bristol, was fortunate in possessing means ample enough to enable him to devote his whole time to his favorite study, both at home and abroad. He was called to the bar, but did not practice; he never married or settled down in a house; he divided his days, when in England, between the reading room of the British Museum and his club, frequently dining in the Middle Temple Hall. A lover of flowers and children as well as books, he was, though anything but a miser, personally frugal, and largely increased his inherited property. At his death he left his manuscript collection and £50,000 to the British Museum Library, the same sum for libraries in Bristol, and liberal bequests to its University College, Müller's Orphanages, and sundry hospitals. For these five volumes, which contain only a portion of Mr. Lean's manuscripts, we are indebted to some of the beneficiaries under his will, who desire to make them more easily accessible to all interested in proverbs and folk-lore. The book also tells us how others see us, and their remarks sometimes are a little incomprehensible. It may be that two and a half centuries ago England was a paradise for women; but what made it a purgatory for servants and a hell for horses? These pages, of course, declare what England expects and Britannia rules; what are our best bulwarks, and when we know that we are beaten; that we have only samples of climate; and, if Voltaire spoke truth, we possess sixty different religious sects and only one sauce. Spain, instead of looking at home, says, "Three English—two robbers and one rebel." Napoleon called us a nation of shopkeepers, but failed to take our measure. We must, however, admit that the Englishman is seldom long content, indeed, is never happy except when he is miserable, as a Scotchman is never at home but when abroad, and an Irishman only at peace when fighting; that he loves a lord, and the Peerage is his Bible; that we make the best masters and the worst servants; are lynxes abroad and moles at home; that the flour of England is fine enough, (the gentry,) but the bran (the commonalty) very coarse. However, each nation is fully conscious of its neighbor's infirmities. An Italian traveler ventures to declare that the Portuguese seems a fool and is so, the Spaniard seems wise and is a fool, the Frenchman seems a fool and is wise, the Englishman is wise and cannot show it, the Dutchman would be wise but for the pot—we need not add that an Italian both is wise and seems so. But we give as good as we get, saying of the Frenchman, "Moitié singe, moitié tigre"; of the Spaniard, "A bad servant and a worse master"; of the Dutchman that he drinks pure wine in the morning, at noon wine without water, and in the evening as it comes from the butt; a German quarrel is when three are fighting, each against the other two; scratch the Russian and you find the Tartar, and where the Great Turk's horse once treads the grass will never grow.

Weather proverbs on the model of the Lucerne one, "When Pilatus wears his hat," are rather frequent, with great variations and imitation. One engineer of the church bells, "The heavens promise not: Cars particularly well, and the bigger the town, the less complimentary, as a general rule, the sayings about it. London covers about a dozen pages with stories sufficiently varied. Thus, Cobbett's "wen" and Dr. Johnson's "common sewer of Paris and Rome," which might now be extended to other undesirable aliens, to the statement that it is the best place in England to live in for eight months in the year, and as good as any other for the rest. It was Mr. W. Windham who, in 1800, called the parks the lungs of London. The following we suspect are new: "Cheese: An old one Cheshire-Cross; as dead as Chelsea; to ride backwards up Holborn Hill, (on the way to Tyburn;)" "Pancrastion Fair" would not now recall that place of execution, or wallflowers its reminiscent of Newgate; we cannot dine with Duke Humphry in St. Paul's, and a Smithfield bargain would puzzle most people; but to set the Thames on fire is still current.

Though the collection of proverbs ranges over many lands, those of Italy and England are the most numerous—the former country pondering some left-handed compliments, even in its own tongue. "A chaste man nursed in Italy is as great a rarity as an English wolf or an Irish toad. In the Maremma you make your fortune in a year and die in six months. Bologna gold redeems fer modesty—being only imitation. Calabria is noted for tarantulas and brigands; Florentine loves are made in the evening and torn up in the morning; to be like Milan's Cathedral is to remain unfinished; Naples is a paradise peopled with devils; and the proverbs about Rome are too many to quote. The hardest thing is, however, said of Genoa—"Hills without trees, a sea without fish, men without honor, women without virtue." Our English proverbs tell us what to do, eat, drink, and avoid. On Sunday we must neither shave, nor cut our nails; nor make love, which is hard on servant maids. Rain on Friday means the same on Sunday, and if it fall that day before mass the week will be wet. On Monday and Friday it is unlucky to sneeze; on the other days, more or less ed. When a sheet has to be subdivided in two or more sections, it is seriously misleading to give to the folded leaves so produced numerical names that imply a proportion that does not exist between the leaves and the full sheet. It is the number of leaves in the section, and not the number of leaves to the sheet, that should justify the application of numerical names. The proper definition of the word octavo should be not sixteen pages to the sheet, but sixteen pages to the section of sixteen leaves that are folded and sewed together in a signature.—Theodore L. De Vinne in Printing Art.

AN ENGLISH MEMORIAL TO SHAKESPEARE.—Mr. Beerbohm Tree considers that it will be a great discredit to the nation if a little later on in this twentieth century we do not see a worthy national memorial to Shakespeare.

Mr. Richard Badger's generous offer brings the scheme into the region of the practicable and Mr. Tree is strongly of opinion that the time is ripe for it.

Mr. Tree's idea is that first of all a representative committee should be formed, consisting of well-known personages in literary, dramatic, artistic, and public life. He announced that he would be most happy to give His Majesty's Theatre for a meeting of such worthies, who would take steps to advance the project.

The idea of a national memorial to Shakespeare greatly appeals to Mr. Tree, and though the present scheme is not his, and he offers no suggestion as to the form the memorial should take, he is keenly desirous that it should be taken up and the opportunity made the most of.

Mr. Badger is now eighty-five. He was educated at Stratford-on-Avon, he is an enthusiast in things Shakespearean, and the dream of his life has been to see a fitting memorial to the great dramatist.

Last year he made a suggestion that the nation should erect a statue to Shakespeare's memory, and he offered to pay £500 towards the expenses. He wrote recently to The Times to say that the London County Council approved fully of the scheme and would provide a site, but to his disappointment the Council could not take part in collecting the necessary funds.

He confirmed his previous offer of £500 down, and added that he would give an additional sum of £2,000, provided the result of an appeal for funds to the nation were such as to make it certain that a memorial commensurate with Shakespeare's greatness and fame in every way worthy of him could be raised. Nothing more was heard of the scheme till yesterday.

Mr. Tree declared that it would be a great pity if the matter were allowed to drop. He did not think that there would be any real difficulty in raising the requisite funds once the necessary representative committee were got together.

He himself would be delighted to contribute, and he was sure that the members of the theatrical profession generally would be inclined to respond generously. As he wittily remarked, they are not paying author's fees to Shakespeare—Mr. Tree yesterday was busy with a rehearsal of "The Tempest"—and some there were who would look on their offerings to the fund as a kind of conscience money.

It has been suggested by many since Ben Jonson's day that Shakespeare needs no monument beyond his works. Few people are more enthusiastic than Mr. Tree in regard to the works, but he thinks that the nation should give visible proof of its gratitude for Shakespeare's magic in a great memorial. It would be a graceful and striking tribute of the twentieth century.

As to the nature of the memorial, Mr. Tree does not care to put forward his own views. He would like to see the whole matter taken up as a national scheme. Lord Rosebery was incidentally suggested as chairman. He wants to see all the great departments of national life represented in the committee.

Mr. Tree has expressed the wish that Mr. Swinburne would identify himself with the memorial, and, of course, as a Shakespearean student of learning and insight a great force would be given to the movement if he could be induced to take an active part therein.

expressing an opinion about Tuesday, for the consequence is kissing a stranger. Common as are weather prognostics, such as that about the evening red and the morning gray, we did not expect the Italian warning, "Sconata l'Ave Maria: sceo il mal tempo," to have donned an English dress. Each month, also, has its weather lore. In January, if sun appear, March and April pay full dear; or, in another version, "January commits the fault, and May bears the blame." February is properly fill dyke, and "All the months in the year Curse a fair Februeer." A peck of March dust is worth a King's ransom, and its winds and April showers bring forth May flowers. That month is kindly when cold, but so treacherous that we are warned not to change a clout till May be out, and "Who weds in May throws all away." A wet May brings plenty of both corn and hay, a May swarm of bees is worth a load of the latter. In it to eat butter and red sage secures long life. Proverbs differ about June weather, but July brings the momentous day of St. Swithin, and a clear Aug. 24 promises a prosperous Autumn. September brings in oysters; in October not even a cat (would this were true!) is to be found in London; with November comes St. Martin's little Summer, but if "ducks do slide at Hollandtide, (Nov. 1,) at Christmas they shall swim," and a green Yule, as every one knows, makes a fat churchyard. Saints' days and special seasons have also their luck and omens. Each domestic animal figures in sundry homely sayings—dog and cat abundantly—and so do most kinds of fish. This diet, we are told, is plentiful when fleas are; but in many countries the latter can be true without the former. "Better sma' fish than nae fish" is a sound proverb; so, too, is "He has a slid grip who has an eel by the tail." He was not far wrong who said, "Of all the fish in the sea the herring is king," only it must be cooked soon after it has been taken from the net, and "when they are in the land, the doctor's at a stand." One remark of an equine expert sets us thinking: "Yo' never seen a gray foal nor a bad-tempered young ooman; it's deapert odd wheear all the scoldin' wives and white 'orses come from!"—London Standard.

TENNYSON AND LEIGH HUNT.—The little happenings in the life of a man of letters are often of more interest to the discerning few than any great thing he may have wrought, bringing him the bent knee and hero worship of the multitude. Silently moving beginnings, subtle preparations, sometimes reveal the man in a more interesting light than any crowning result ever does or by any possibility can do. Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," for instance, appeals in its completed beauty to an extended reading public; while the student of literature happens with satisfaction upon anything having reference to its author's studies of the Arthurian legends, from those youthful days when, first chancing upon a copy of Malory's "King Arthur," he became fired with an enthusiastic vision of a great poem, and straightway formulated schemes for its treatment, down to 1832, with the first version of "The Lady of Shalott," which ripened into "Elaine"; and again on through the ten years which bore fruit in the "Morte d'Arthur," "Sir Galahad," "Sir Lancelot," and "Queen Guinevere," down to 1859, with its "Idylls of the King"; and through the years following, which brought with them the poems that completed the work he had set himself in his boyhood. Thus the general reader and the student. A third delights to deal in dreams with those early days spent in imagination by the late Laureate at King Arthur's Court.

Actual information as to Tennyson's life and doings during his preparatory years is scant. The repeated inquiry by Edward FitzGerald was, "Where is Alfred?" Horne says: "Avoiding general society, he would prefer to sit up all night with a friend, or else to sit and think alone. Beyond a very small circle he is never met." Landor craved his presence in lines beginning:

I entreat you, Alfred Tennyson,
Come and share my haunch of venison.

For the picture of the wandering poet we must, however, go to William Howitt. "It is very possible," he says, "you may come across him in a country inn, with a foot on each hob of the fireplace, a volume of

Greek in one hand, his meerschaum in the other—so far advanced toward the seventh heaven that he would not thank you to call him back into this nether world.'

But it was not always "a volume of Greek" that he dreamed over. His companion in those days was often a copy of the little pocket edition of "The History of the Renowned Prince Arthur and His Knights of the Round Table," published in two volumes by Walker of Paternoster Row in 1816, which had been lent him by Leigh Hunt.

In 1835 Hunt wrote to Tennyson: "The 'Prince Arthur' which I should have brought with me I will send to-morrow or next day by a messenger." As a footnote to this letter, the present Lord Tennyson writes in the "Memoir" of his father: "This copy of Malory I have still in my possession, a small book for the pocket, published, 1816, by Walker & Edwards, and much used by my father."

Here in my library rests the copy Leigh Hunt obtained to replace the one thus sent to Tennyson. It bears the same date and publisher's imprint, and carries on the title page the signature of Leigh Hunt, who has written on the last leaf: "Finished my second regular reading of this work. 8th July, 1842, my first copy of it, with all its marks, having been lost by that heedless fine poet, Alfred Tennyson. It is upon the whole a dull and slovenly compilation, with admirable passages (especially the third part) from, I have no doubt, far better originals.—Leigh Hunt."

Some of Hunt's marginal notes are very characteristic. On Page 314 he writes: "Eating and drinking! Oh, gross monk and celibataise author of some of Sir Launcelot du Lake; for I cannot think you wrote it all." Against the mention of Sir Mellagraunce he sets down, "What a rascal this fellow is!" and, again, "Enormous beast!" In the chapter which tells of Sir Gawaine's death Hunt has scored the lines: "And then sir Gawaine wept, and also king Arthur wept, and then they swooned both; and when they awaked both, the king made sir Gawaine to receive his Savicur. And then sir Gawaine prayed the king to send for sir Launcelot, and to cherish him above all other knights. And so, at the hour of noon, sir Gawaine betook his soul into the hands of our Lord God." Against this Hunt has written: "And the tears came into the eyes of me, the reader, Leigh Hunt, at this passage of this most impossible story, in the fifty-seventh year of my age, July the 8th, 1842!!! So strong is 'one touch of nature' and generous mortality."

Surely Hunt was not far wrong when he wrote of himself in the "Tatler" as "sentimentalized," and acknowledged that his highest poetical triumph was "to move a tear with a verse."—John Rogers in London Academy.

FRANKLIN'S BICENTENARY.—The two hundredth anniversary of Benjamin Franklin's birth is, it seems, to be celebrated by a new edition of his complete works. Prof. Albert Smyth, the editor, has come to Europe in search of new material. He is just in time to visit the locality, on the new Strand-Holborn route, of Franklin's early London life as a journeyman printer. The latter lodged in Duke (now Sardinia) Street, paying 3s. 6d. a week for his room. He was then employed at Watts's printing office, in Wildcourt. Earlier than this he had lodged in Little Britain, working at Palmer's, in Bartholomew Close. By this time the book trade of Little Britain had begun to decline, but at Wilcox's book shop young Franklin soon made one of his prudent arrangements by which the shop became his lending library.

The peculiarity of Franklin's works, which, as edited by John Bigelow in 1886, fill ten volumes, is that they consist almost entirely of letters addressed to friends, acquaintances, and strangers. Even his discoveries on science went through the post. Can the world now want all that Franklin wrote? Bigelow's edition was big, in all conscience. Even he had "tried to condense everything Franklin left behind him that any one not pursuing special investigations now cares to read of the most eminent journalist, philosopher, diplomatist, and statesman of his time."—London Globe.

COLERIDGE'S CHARACTER AND HIS GENIUS.—The lives of our great poets of creative artists are seldom, perhaps, of that altogether exemplary character which we are so anxious in England to set before young men about to marry. Men of strong passions, impetuous energy, and overmastering artistic preoccupation, they rarely have patience for the humdrum requirements of our middle-class code. At the same time, however, the record of their lives is seldom other than profoundly stimulating, as showing the enormous combustion that goes to the production of a work of genius, the stupendous exertion of will power, the devoted application, the rushing impetuous force with which alien and minor occupations are borne down and life subordinated at one point after another to the consummation of the magnum opus.

Now Coleridge, by general consent, wrote some of the finest poems in English, the magical charm of which it is as difficult to define, and would be as dangerous to ignore, as in the case of Edmund Spenser. Yet his life presents the puzzling anomaly that we can discern in it no prodigious expenditure of will power. (far from it.) no rare spectacle of concentration, continuity, or independence of mind; no infinite capacity for taking pains, not a single one, in short, of the recognized birthmarks of genius. He spent much of his time in demonstrating (with the aid of German materials) that Shakespeare could not possibly have been that strange, irregular lusus naturæ which Voltaire and a large school of critics represented him to be. Yet lusus naturæ seems to be the exact term to describe his own erratic display of genius—a lamp in the grasp of a little child, the best simile to indicate the wayward gleams of the extraordinary intellect with which he was endowed. We have the further anomaly that Coleridge, whose type of mind was the most feminine (always clinging to, assimilating and polishing other people's ideas, and often boxing the Compass in the process), should have produced some of the most masculine and original poetry in existence. * * *

The temptation to sensitive, at large was Coleridge's curse; has proved a stumbling block to the English critic. That he post suffered both physically and mentally is manifest. For relief he took to opium of the tyranny of which he became conscious (in 1800) as early as 1796, and the first sprightly runnings of the drug through his nervous system conspired with the spirit of emulation in 1797 to produce some gems of poetry of an unsurpassable istre, such as "Christabel" and "Kubla Khan," to which should probably be added that mystic masterpiece (which Mrs. Barbauld pronounced both improbable and unmoral.) "The Ancient Mariner." But his intoxicating period of initiation was but too cruelly brief, and afterward the drug both enervated and relaxed the fibres of the poet, while it intensified the sloth and other characteristic weaknesses of the man, whose sense of moral obligation it profoundly dulled.

"Sloth jaundiced all, and from my grasp-less hand
Drop friendship's precious pearls like hourglass sand."

Eventually, however, his system reacted, and Coleridge recovered a period of comparative serenity, during which the worst symptoms were abated and some fragments of his intellectual life were gathered up. If his health had been better and his will stronger we should have had more "Religious Musings" and more doggerel of the "Three Graves" order. But should we have had another "Christabel"? We are strongly inclined to think that the muse which opium lulled was no great loss, and the grievance of the world against the incidence of such losses must be left to more eloquent pens. The voice of Nature and of Poetry seldom speaks through such good apprentices in every sense of the word as Wordsworth and Tennyson; and regarding Nature's methods as a whole we can scarcely regard such gems of the first water as "Kubla Khan" too dearly purchased at the expense of self-indulgence followed by self-disapprobation and much acute suffering. For it is remarkable in the case of Coleridge that, in spite of the seeming chariatany and shuffling of so many of his letters, he never became callous to the degradation which his resort to narcotics involved. His exuberance of metaphor and his facility in explanations of the past and projects for the future recall now a Meercraft, now a Costigan, but more often that inimitable and flamboyant creature, Richmond Roy. His copious plausibility in discourse, we know, suggested such caricatures as Peacock's Mr. Flosky. But Coleridge always retained a latent sensitiveness of self-respect, there was nothing sordid or mean in the baser sense about his abandonment of responsibility, and so he was able to the last to retain the devotion of some of the best men of his time. That of the Lambs was unfaltering, that of the Wordsworths strong and clear, De Quincey and Tom Poole and many more bespeak friendships never wholly wrecked, and a sense of shame which, although it may at times have been attenuated, was never wholly atrophied. After the small string of pearls of price written in 1797-8, the careless rapture of which period he never recovered, we are inclined to value Coleridge's "Letters" and "Table Talk" more even than his critical work—that to a large extent reflects the gradually evolved Shakespearean and aesthetic theories of Lessing and Kant and Schlegel and Schelling, with some at least of their characteristic faults and extravagances—but the letters and journalistic fragments represent more nearly to us the man himself, the "monarch of monologue," engaged in the congenial labor of monologising "from mount to mount in Cloudland" and "lifting philosophy to heaven." They represent, moreover, the wonderful richness of almost miraculous promise which threw such a spell over all the associates of Coleridge's marvelous youth. The fulfilment was marred, it is true, but the larger and more Boswellian the scale on which we can survey a life so strangely and rarely compounded, the more it is certain we shall find to forgive, the more inclined shall we be to regard that life less with indignation and censure than with wonder and compassion.—Thomas Seccombe in The Bookman, (London.)

A BOOK OF SCANDALS.—M. Xavier de Ricard's "Histoire Mondaine du Second Empire," of which the first volume is just published, is a very difficult book for an Englishman to appreciate. It professes to be written from the notes of a lady of the Imperial Court, a demoiselle of the famous convent of St. Denis, who, before the marriage of Napoleon III., lived in the family of King Jerome. To persuade us of this we have long-winded and tedious descriptions of dresses and furniture which convey nothing to the masculine mind, together with much indirect praise of the lady's own fascinations and some feline amenities. Yet the result leaves one doubtful whether the scenes depicted have been really "lived:" or whether the whole thing is not a hash-up of the scandalous chronicle of the time, over which the concocter has contrived to spread a glaze of superannuated and spiteful femininity. In this volume there are certainly no revelations—or, rather, none which anybody but a malevolent lady's maid would think of importance—and there are many things which should never have been said in the lifetime of a lady whom all must honor for the courage and dignity with which she has borne her undeserved misfortunes. On the other hand, it certainly gives a picture of the social life of the time, if not exactly true to nature, at any rate true to literary tradition, and the result should be pleasing to those who love to hear scandal about Queen Elizabeth. Almost the only pregnant saying in it is the remark that the Orleanists were borne down in 1848 less by their vices than by their bourgeois and Tartuffe-like virtues.—Pall Mall Gazette.

HENRY JAMES AND YOUNG READERS.—From most of the fiction of the present day, always excepting that of Mr. Meredith and Mr. Hardy, I gain the impression that it is written for the young and by the young. I gain the impression that its authors have been aleaised at a certain point in their intellectual development by the abundance of the satisfactions their immature sympathies and absorptive [illegible] a large number of [illegible] tion without luring them to further inquiry. And the result is an atmosphere in which it is difficult for those who have "grown old and crafty and wise," and for those who have "grown old and godly and grave," to breathe. Yet to fiction surely we should turn as we grow older, to find that enlarged field of subtle and poignant interests demanded by our initiated minds. Nowhere else can we move in such varied and such stimulating society; nowhere else can we learn the jealously guarded secrets of the mind and heart that become important to us in proportion as our fellow beings render them inaccessible. In the novels of Henry James we drink deep of this peculiar satisfaction. Here, at least, there is no shirking of the exactions upon the mind by increasing years. The enlightened and fortified intelligence has kept pace indefatigably with its task of investigation and record. There has been neither impatience nor weariness shown in the arduous study of character constantly rendered more complicated by wider and richer opportunities. Rightly to estimate the contribution thus made by Mr. James to the small body of what we may call our mature fiction demands an ability in analysis equal to his own; but there are in his work a few salient qualities that leap to the notice of the reader, and that, brought together, form in themselves a sufficiently coherent picture of the more obvious side of his performance.—Elisabeth Luther Cary in the October Scribner's.

BROWNING'S LIFE AND WORK.—Of Browning abeve all poets, with the possible exception of Byron, it is necessary to take the life and the work in a piece, to connect the inspiration with the incident. Browning's poems were his viaticum. The vivacity of his hopefulness, which led him for example to run off with his wife to Italy to the salvation of her life, and later to face London society when she was dead, is the burden of his best work from "Prospice" to the epilogue. His conversation, some one said in effect, was like his poems, only clearer. You need the man to know the poems, or at least you do not grow fully to love the poems till you find the man in them. And more than this, the incidents often are necessary to the interpretation. Shelley's elevation, Wordsworth's serenity, Tennyson's art produced things whose permanence is independent of the triviality of their occasions. "Adonais" and "In Memoriam" in their different degrees do not miss meaning and beauty though we forget Keats and Hallam; and Wordsworth's "light that never was on sea or land" needs no acquaintance with Beaumont's picture. But what a gleam is added to "The Ring and the Book" by the knowledge of the "square old yellow book," part print, part manuscript, of the price of "eightpence English just"; and of the perambulatory way in which he "fused his spirit and that inert stuff." Even "James Lee's Wife," the finest succession of dramatic lyrics in the language however we look at it, grows wonderfully in splendor from acquaintance with Ste. Marie the "wild little place in Brittany," with "such a soft sea and such a mournful wind!

And some midsummer morning, at the lull
Just about daybreak, as he looks across
A sparkling foreign country, wonderful
To the sea's edge for gloom and gloss,
Next minute must annul.

* * * * * * * *

Then, when the wind begins among the vines,

So low, so low, what shall it say but this?
It said in fact very many hard things; but it is perhaps the common experience of those who most enjoy Browning that of a sudden, from some new bit of knowledge or accidental coincidence of mood, some change in the angle of refraction, the opaque becomes clear, the baffling shimmer of the opal an essential color. And here is the secret of Browning's cardinal distinction. He was always hunting the Protean, and with his rare energy of thought would not let it go, however baffling its tricks of evasion.

With thee, O Lord, I mean to stay
And wrestle till the break of day, says Wesley in a beautiful hymn; and this was Browning's religion of life, to drag its meaning from the little likenesses and contrasts such as we all get glimpses of, but all let go as mood or occupation or mere idleness order. He was often baffled, as in "Childe Roland," but what enlightenment we gather from the vain hunt. If outside Malory and his predecessors the spirit of the quest, the reach for the impossible is better given we have yet to read it; and there is nowhere a finer paean to the courage of faith than the conclusion to that triumph of grotesque description—

And yet
Dauntless the slug-horn to my lips I set,
And blew—Childe Roland to the Dark
Tower came.

This spirit of divine curiosity brought Browning nearer than others to the philosophies of things the heated evasive doubts and queries, and if he consciously missed the ultimate solutions, he discovered a foundation of faith in love and religion which made him with the help of his creative courage the most hopeful of our poets.—London Saturday Review.

Mr. Saleeby's Essays.

C. W. Saleeby, an Englishman, known as a writer on scientific subjects for Harper's Magazine and The Academy of London, has a book coming from the Harpers' press Sept. 22. The title is "The Cycle of Life," and the subjects dealt with may be inferred from the following chapter headings: "The Verdict of Science upon Alcohol," "Japan and Christianity," "Suggestion and Hypnotism," "The Evidence for Telepathy," "Marriage, Multiplication, and Morals," and "Some Urgent Points in Pedagogy."

The President
A NOVEL
By ALFRED HENRY LEWIS
Author of "The Boss."
Uniform Edition.

Illustrated in color by JAY HAMBIDGE. Price $1.50

A story full of dramatic incidents, absorbing in its interest, extraordinary in its inner glimpses of the great game of national politics. "The President" is more thoroughly a novel than "The Boss" in the development of love interest and intrigue. It will be heard from everywhere. "The President" and "The Boss" are novels that compel a reading.

QUERIES.

To secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

H. E. TOGLESON, 10 Auburn Street, Plainfield, N. J.: "Can you tell me the author of 'McCready Sloan'?"

"McCready Sloan" was written by Mrs. Emma Garrison Jones, the Poetivist, is dead. What is the real name of Ruth Ashmore?

Mrs. Isabel Allardice Mallon, (1862-96), a popular writer on deportment, used this pen-name.

JAMES D. PERKINS, 128 Woodland Avenue, Newark, N. J.: "Can you give me Mr. Howells's opinion of Harper's Magazine for 1840, Page 481, there is a poem, 'The Ballad of Four Ways,' by E. Smith, Vineyard Haven, Mass., in Appeals to Readers of Sept. 1."

C. F. LAWRENCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: "Who is the author of the following lines:

"'There is a plain for every man,
But what's the dream of youth departs,
It seems the plain's the hardest.'"

These lines are misquoted from "The Flight of Youth," by Richard Henry Stoddard, which appeared in "The Poets and Poetry of America," (Hurd & Houghton, Riverside Press, Cambridge, Mass., 1878), and in Stoddard's collected poems, (Charles Scribner's Sons.)

"C. D. K.," Nantucket, Mass.: "I want to thank Queries Contributor, and also Mary N. Franklin, for information regarding Mallock's 'New Republic.' I have since had the title likewise to Edith S. Hardy, who kindly forwarded me the books."

"W. L.," Niagara Falls, N. Y.: "Can you tell me anything about a poem, written by Daniel Webster, at one time, but cannot find it now, and am anxious to secure it. Did Webster write poetry? I have seen a few lines of verse, which thought of as a poet, but I have read something of his, years ago, and the first of verse. The poem, as I remember it, begins as follows:

"'My son, thou wast my heart's delight,
My morning hope, my evening light;'

A few poems, published posthumously in his collected works, are all that I can find. The only examples of verse extant from Webster's pen. The poem referred to by our correspondent is entitled "On the Death of My Son Edward," and is on page 28 of Stedman's "American Anthology."

WILLIAM H. POWELL, 1945 Edmondson Avenue, Baltimore, Md.: "In Appeals to Readers for Sept. 1, Mrs. Mary Worsley Montagu, of New York City, asked for the source of the lines:

"'I can take care of my enemies, God save me from my friends.'

Marshal Villiers, this aphorism when taking leave of Louis XIV., 'God save me from my friends; I can defend myself from my enemies.' The saying (1710-1827) expresses the idea in verse in his 'New Morality,' as follows:

"'Give me the avowed, the direct, the manly foe,
Bold I will meet every input blow;
But of all plagues, good Heaven, thy wrath can send,
Save, save, oh save me from the candid friend.'"

"P. D.," St. Paul, Minn.: "I am familiar with the words in which James Bryce sings 'The American Commonwealth,' 1888. Please name the books written or edited by him before that time."

Mr. Bryce, however, are but a paraphrase of a portion of A. Wilde, written in 1776, and published in London, and reissued in the Tower one hundred years before Lady Mary's marriage. This poem, which is one hundred and twenty years old and long a popular work,) contains this passage:

"'In part to blame is she
Which hath without consent bin only bride:
But that she doth with her own will consent
To what she cannot do by force and might,
The blame that she obtains is thine and mine.'"

"T.," Park Row Building, New York City: "Was Bret Harte's play, 'Two Men of Sandy Bar,' written with a collaborator?"

It was issued in book form in Boston in 1876, and is now published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. at $1.

H. MYERS, Passaic, N. J.: "Several months ago I asked for the name of the author who wrote the following bit of sentiment: 'Do not keep the alabaster boxes of your love and sympathy sealed until all are dead. Fill their lives with sweetness, speak approving words while their ears can hear and their hearts can be made happier by them; the kind deed can be done while their hands are strong to help and bless. Kindly repeat the information."

This sentiment occurs in the chapter on "Week-Day Religion," written by the Rev. Dr. James Russell Miller, a Presbyterian clergyman of Philadelphia. This book is published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.

"G. P.," Trenton, N. J.: "In 1867 a volume was published in Trenton bearing the title: 'Village Tales' or, Recollections of By-Paulines. By Mrs. Mary Ann Denman.' Can you tell me the name of the author of this book? I can find nothing concerning her."

This book was written by Stacey Gardner Potts, (1788-1865) a jurist who was born in Pennsylvania but passed most of his life in New Jersey. Supreme Court of New Jersey.

"LETTY," 226 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York City: "I have a sonnet, entitled 'Letty's Glove,' and would like to have it published. Can you tell me how I can do it?"

And while she hid all England with a Bright eyes Europe fell her golden hair.

"What is the rest?"

It was written by Charles Tennyson, Tennyson brothers, Frederick, Charles and Alfred, published a volume of poems in 1827, jointly published "Poems by Two Brothers." (actually by three brothers, for Frederick Tennyson contributed several poems.) He was Vicar of Grasby, 1835-70. In 1868 he went to Italy, and resided there for the succeeding 10 years. In 1880 he published a volume of "Songs and Fugitive Pieces," his "Sonnets," appearing in 1884, and his "Sonnets, Old and New," was published in 1889, the year following his death.

"F. F.," Annapolis, Md.: "Were we to secure the words and music of Ossian's Hall-mora Waltz?" Please give publisher's name and address."

"Ana," $1.25; "For the Major," $1; "East Angels," $1.25; "Jupiter Lights," $1.25; Bodman the Keeper; Southern Soldier Stories," $1; "Tiverton; Tales of Country Banks," $1; "Dukesborough Tales and Other Italian Stories," $1.25, and "Dorothy and Other Italian Stories," $1.25, all published by Harper & Brothers.

"W. A.," Quincy Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Who is Hudson, the American Shakespeare scholar?"

Henry Norman Hudson, (1814-86) was an Episcopal clergyman. Who was also a Shakespearean scholar of considerable note, writing the civil war he served as Chaplain in the Federal Army. In his later years he was Professor of Shakespeare Study in Boston University. He published many volumes on Shakespeare, including "Shakespeare: His Life and Characters," "Studies in Words-worth," "Essays on Education," "A Chaplain's Campaign with Gen. Butler," &c. His son, Prof. Arthur Hudson, of the University editions of Shakespeare. His Shakespeare criticisms have been called "helpful, but somewhat dogmatic in tone."

L. DEAN, Norfolk, Va.: "Who publishes the Letters of Wilkie Collins? What were the titles of the volumes?"

(1.) G. P. Putnam's Sons, in three volumes, $4.50. (2.) They seem to have been actual letters, written to the Marquis of Lorne, and to Mrs. Bronson Howard, after a visit of Wilkie Collins to France in the Portuguese campaign in 1808-04. We do not know the date of the original French edition. There have been several English editions. The most recent is that published by Chatto & Windus, at 6 cents. This edition, translated by "R. H." bears the following title: "The Love Letters of a Portuguese Nun. Being the Letters of Marianna Alcoforado to Noël Bouton de Chamilly, Afterwards Marquis de Chamilly, in the Year 1668."

"S. M. C.," Biloxeck, N. Y.: "Which was the first publication of Tennyson's 'Locksley Hall,' Macmillan's series? What were the 'eight sorrowful years' mentioned in the poem?"

(1.) The most popular novel in the Rouget-Macquart series, and the most popular of all Zola's novels, is "L'Assommoir," of which 151,000 copies were sold in the French edition in the first year, 1877, when the novel first appeared in book form. Translations and a large number of copies were probably circulated in the several English editions issued in the United States and Great Britain. (2.) The eight sorrowful years were those spent in the desert, the capture of the Ark of the Covenant, the Babylonian captivity, the robbery of the Temple by Antiochus, the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and the dispersion of the Jews.

Appeals to Readers.

"A. S. R.," 18 Proctor Street, New York City: "Who wrote the poem, 'Bingen on the Rhine,' quoted by Dr. Brady's 'Sir Henry Morgan, Bucaneer,' on page 70?"

Well be damnably moldy one hundred years hence.

"I am told Mr. Brady is the author, but have a faint recollection of a very old similar line, which I read ages ago to me by a British naval man."

W. C. FARMER, 163 Seventh Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Can any one supply the balance of the following poem?"

Cord by cord our lives are loosened,
One by one our hopes are slain;
Throb by throb we feel the pain.

"Who wrote these lines:

Flowing and flowing ever,
And on one side silent pave
Pitiful hearts never sleeping,
And the voice of ceaseless weeping,
Never lulling, never sleeping,
All the pauses of the knell."

A letter will be forwarded to "M. E. S." New-port, R. I., who asked in Queries of Aug. 6 for the author of the following lines, and to "W. C. F." who asked in Queries of Sept. 1 for the author and address.

JANE MARSH PARKER, 25 Winthrop Street, Rochester, N. Y.: "Can any one tell me who wrote the following:

'As the ponderous bulwark of vapor is blown by
So work without Him is for nothing: He giveth
Whatever is strong in His purpose—lo'humble-ness worth and pure.
In sight of the Lord eternal—He toucheth it;
saying 'Endure.'"

MAY LLOYD HAYWARD, 2,700 Eighth Avenue, Seattle, Wash.: "Can you tell me the author of a recitation on open caskets, 'The Soul of a Lie'? It begins: 'I stand at the head of my love story.'"

"S. I. F.," Waycross, Ga.: "I wish to find an old poem, translation of 'Jean Paul Richter's Campaign.'"

J. V. HEIM, 20 East Twenty-ninth Street, New York City: "Can you tell me the name of the author of the following lines, and will thank you for the entire poem if you can find it? There are five verses, the first of which is as follows:

'It seems in my life to go whistles blow,
Nor stocks don't strike, nor songs sound,
Nor bells ring, nor hearts bound.'

"The poem has been credited to Eugene Field, and also to Miss Helen Pitkin. The latter denies the authorship, and says that Eugene Field says it is not by the late humorist."

CAROLINE W. HOTCHKISS, Seal Harbor, Me.: "Can you tell me the following hymn used to be sung in the neighborhood of Middletown, Conn., and Cromwell, (then called Upper Middletown):

"'Oh, Calvary, 'tis a mountain high,
'Tis a task too difficult for thee;
Fly to the Lamb for refuge,
There are lions in the way.
And deep lurk on the mountain Calvary.

Youth is the best time, sa-ys you see.
For when old age comes on,
And blooming youth is gone,
Then 'tis a task indeed to 'Stop Calvary!'

"The tune was a quaint minor melody resembling Hebrew music. Can any reader tell me the name of the author of the hymn, and where are two other hymns, probably from the same collection which I would like to find, viz:

"'Mercy, oh thou Son of David,
Thou poor Bartimeus cried.'

"The other begins:

'When Joseph, his brethren beheld.'"

"A. T.," Avon, N. Y.: "I am making a collection of Bibles, and would like to know if the Bible which I have is of any value. It has sheepskin backs and corners, and is about the size of a newspaper, and where the name can be found."

Sir Isaac Pitman, (1813-97,) the inventor of Pitman's system of shorthand writing, published the Bible in shorthand. It is published at 33 Bible House, Pitman & Sons, 31 Union Square, this city.

"F. X. S.," East Norwich, L. I., N. Y.: "Can you tell me something about the Old Man Eloquent?"

"D. M.," Philadelphia, Penn., asked in Queries of Aug. 27 for the lines upon Mr. E. L. Godkin which appeared some time since in Plans of Some of Them—Forthcoming New Books.

"DIVINE FIRE," by May Sinclair, which Henry Holt & Co. will issue next week, has a cockney protagonist, son of a cockney, and yet a genuine poet. The action is laid in London and at various English country houses, where the cockney as a poet meets a woman of sincerity, humor, tolerance, and penetration.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. report that a third edition has just been ordered of Prof. George H. Palmer's latest book, "The Nature of Goodness."

The October Century's war articles will be "The Cossacks," by David B. Macgowan, and an essay by a Japanese author and publicist, called "Togo: The Man and the Admiral." The writer of it is Adachi Kinnosuke.

A new volume of stories and sketches from the pen of Charles Battell Loomis will make its appearance next week from the press of Henry Holt & Co. under the title "More Cheerful Americans." Written in the vein of Mr. Loomis's "Cheerful Americans," there are eighteen tales with a dozen humorous pictures, six by Florence Scovel Shinn and others by F. R. Gruger, Fanny Y. Cory, and May Wilson Watkins. At the end there is what is intended to be an ironical paper on "How to Write a Novel for the Masses." Among the others are "Poe's Raven in an Elevator," "Why the Delegate Walked," "Nature Study," "The Education of the Butterfly," and "The Song That Sold."

A. S. Barnes & Co. have the following titles for young readers on their Autumn list: "The Island Camp; or, The Young Hunters of Lakeport," by Capt. Ralph Bonehill; "The Three Prisoners; A Story of Adventure in the Civil War," by William Henry Shelton, with illustrations by Jay Hambidge, and "The Search; A Story of the Old Frontier," by E. P. Weaver. Capt. Bonehill's book will be the first volume in his new Outdoor Series.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. are publishing to-day "The Affair at the Inn," by Kate Douglas Wiggin and others; a new Riverside Edition of the Works of Tennyson in seven volumes; "A Book of Little Boys," by Helen Dawes Brown; essays entitled "Journalism and Literature," by H. W. Boynton; "The Words of Koheleth," by Prof. John F. Genung; a translation of Dante's "De Monarchia," by Aurelia Henry, and "The Elements of English Grammar," by W. F. Webster.

The first of a number of juveniles to be issued this Fall by Henry Holt & Co. will appear next week. It is Bruneck's "Prince Henry's Sailor Boy," translated by Miss Mary J. Stafford.

Henry James's new international novel of American characters and European background will be presented by Charles Scribner's Sons about Oct. 1. Its title, "The Golden Bowl," suggests a dramatic story, and its pathos is believed to constitute an element of emphasis and of relief. Apropos of Mr. James, Miss Cary's article concerning his literary mission will appear in the October Scribner's Magazine.

The J. B. Lippincott Company is to publish immediately "A Conspiracy Under the Terror," by Paul Gaulot, author of "Love and Lovers of the Past." The tale deals with the plans of escape and the romantic attempts made to rescue Marie Antoinette and the royal family. The narrative is drawn from the chronicles of the times and illustrated with fac similes and contemporaneous prints.

A reprint of classic fairy tales will be printed Sept. 22 by McClure-Phillips. The original is possessed by Frances Hodgson Burnett, who has furnished an introduction for the reprint. This introduction is called a "truly" fairy story, and relates how the books came into her possession, disappeared, and magically turned up again many years later. The reprint will be illustrated with pictures in colors.

This year The Century Company will add to its Thumb-Nail Series "As You Like It," "Romeo and Juliet," and "An Old English Christmas." The Shakespeare plays will follow the Cambridge text, and will have interesting frontispiece portraits of the author. "An Old English Christmas" will also have for frontispiece a portrait of Washington Irving. The designs of the full-leather covers have been made by Mrs. Blanche McManus Mansfield.

The J. B. Lippincott Company is publishing this week the works of Francois Rabelais translated into English by Sir Thomas Urquhart and Peter Antony Motteaux. The illustrations are by Louis Chalon.

This month's addition to the Scribners' Literary Lives critical studies will include W. Hale White's "John Bunyan." Edmund Gosse's "Coventry Patmore" will not be published until later in the season.

The Century Magazine, without success, has been attempting the experiment of omitting the index from the last number of the volume. Beginning with the October number the index will be restored.

Persons fond of those beautifully illustrated articles on Italian villas that Edith Wharton has been writing for The Century will be glad to learn that the [illegible]

Parrish printed on special plate paper. There will be fifty illustrations in color and in black and white, and, what did not appear in the serial publication of the articles, a number of reproductions of photographs.

"Misrepresentative Men" is a book of American humor by an Englishman, Capt. Harry Graham, Aide de Camp of the former Governor General of Canada, Lord Minto. The author is known to his brother officers as "Col. D. Streamer," which appears on the title page.

The postponed volume by Abbé Loisy, "The Gospel and the Church," is now down for immediate publication by Charles Scribner's Sons. The work, which, in its original form, created so much heated controversy in France, is divided into six sections: "The Source of Gospel," "The Kingdom of Heaven," "The Son of God," "The Church," "Christian Dogma," and "Catholic Worship."

Fox, Duffield & Co. announce a volume by the well-known Harvard philosopher, Josiah Royce. It is about Herbert Spencer, and embodies Prof. Royce's views of his great British colleague. A personal reminiscence written by James Collier forms the introduction.

"The Church's Lessons for the Christian Year," by the Rev. Dr. Alfred G. Mortimer, is shortly to be published by Thomas Whittaker in two volumes. The same work will be published serially during the coming year beginning with Advent.

Fox, Duffield & Co., the firm of publishers which began its career about eighteen months ago with the publication of the old morality play "Everyman," now announces the text of the nativity play, "The Star of Bethlehem," arranged from about thirty old plays by Prof. C. M. Gayley of the University of California.

The Hobart Company will have ready Sept. 26 Gen. Charles King's new tale of two hemispheres, entitled "Comrades in Arms." The story begins with a strange complication at a frontier post in the Black Hills of Dakota shortly before the outbreak of the Spanish war.

McClure-Phillips are to publish Sept. 22 Marion Ames Taggart's new story for young folks, called "The Little Grey House." The story deals with the adventures of a crowd of children who inhabit the house in question.

D. Appleton & Co. are publishing twelve juvenile books this week, two by Ralph Henry Barbour entitled "On Your Mark" and "The Arrival of Jimpson," "The Fight for the Valley," by W. O. Stoddard; "Old Put, the Patriot," by Frederick A. Ober; "The Land Hero of 1812," by Chauncey C. Hotchkiss; "The Vinland Champions," by Ottilie A. Liljencrantz; "The Deadwood Trail," by Gilbert Patten; "The Boy Anglers," by Charles F. Holden; "Three College Graces," by Gabrielle E. Jackson; "Everyday Girls," by Julie M. Lippmann; "In the Reign of Queen Dick," by Carolyn Wells, and "Teddy Baird's Luck," by Kate D. Sweetser.

The J. B. Lippincott Company has a new novel by Rosa N. Carey, "At the Moorings," which it will publish next week.

A significant sign of the times is the announcement by McClure-Phillips of "The Complete Motorist," by A. B. Filson Young, one of England's well known automobile experts. It gives an account of the evolution and construction of the modern motor car, and a history of it from its very beginning, in an awkward steam vehicle, to its modern manifestation in the noiseless, mile-a-minute, eighty horsepower machine. One chapter has been contributed by Rudyard Kipling, and another by one of the authors of "The Lightning Conductor." The volume is believed by the publishers to be sufficiently technical and practical, yet so full of incident as to interest the layman.

Still another color-illustrated edition of Richard Harding Davis's well-known dog story "The Bar Sinister" is announced for early publication by the Scribners.

"The Missions of the Moravian Church Among the Heathen" is the title of a little pamphlet by the Rev. Dr. J. T. Hamilton, American member of the Moravian Mission Board. Any one may secure a copy by inclosing a postage stamp to the Rev. Paul de Schweinitz, 20 Church Street, Bethlehem, Penn.

It is announced by Messrs. Harper & Brothers that the publication of Mr. Joseph Conrad's "Nostromo" recently set by them for the week just completed, has been postponed till later in the month.

In Harper's Magazine for October will appear Edwin A. Abbey's pictures for "Othello," with critical comment on the play by Algernon Charles Swinburne. Other features are "The First Transcontinental Railroad," by Frank H. Spearman; a group of short stories by James Branch Cabell, Robert W. Chambers, Mary E. Wilkins, and Frances Willing Wharton, and further developments in Mrs. Humphry Ward's story, "The Marriage of William Ashe."

"The Lady of Loyalty House" is the name of a new story by Justin Huntly McCarthy which Messrs. Harper & Brothers will publish on Sept. 22. The days are those of Roundheads and Cavaliers, and Lady Brittiana Harby is a king's woman who flies the royal flag on her castle keep.

To their attractive "Wayside Series" in small format, the Harpers will add next week uniform with the others "The Story of the Candlesticks," from Hugo's "Les Miserables." Other books in this series are [illegible]

HARNESS HORSES.

Hamilton Busbey's Book About the Trotting and the Pacing Horse in America.*

A RUNNING STORY, based on the dry figures of the American Trotting Register, is what Mr. Busbey has written for this volume of the American Sportsman's Library. In this form the statistics are much less dry reading, and from this book the novice can most easily learn of the progress of horse breeding and horse training that has brought about the typical American light harness horse, the fastest, gamest, and sturdiest horse of his type in the world, even if beauty of conformation has been lost sight of in the desire to attain the highest in the way of speed.

Mr. Busbey thinks trotting contests "the dominant out-door sport of the United States," which is probably excusable in a man who "for thirty-eight consecutive years was a visitor to breeding farms and a close observer of horses at speed on the trotting tracks of the country." "The evolution of the trotter took place during the active period of my life," he writes, and it is to the trotter almost exclusively that the book is devoted, for Mr. Busbey in his long career as a journalist never had a kind word for the pacer, whom he describes as "a malformed horse," "narrow behind," and "the product of lazy trainers and hopples." So the fastest harness horse of the world, and the one that now furnishes about 50 per cent. of the sport at the so-called "trotting" tracks, is dismissed with a very superficial review in twenty-one pages, though this horse, too, had his evolution during the active career of Mr. Busbey. But the pacer and the hackney never were popular with the hide-bound trotting man, no matter how speedy the former, nor how showy and sturdy the latter.

The evolution of the trotter has been aided by trainers, drivers, sulky builders, harness makers, and track builders. The successful trainers of to-day are thoughtful, hard-working men, with a larger store of information than those of former decades. They understand balancing through shoeing better than their predecessors, and respect the rules drawn up for the preservation of discipline. The material that they handle is far better than that of twenty or thirty years ago, and quicker results are obtained. The tracks and vehicles are seconds faster than when Dexter was heralded as the invincible trotter of the world.

Which is practically all that he has to say of the men who developed and showed the speed of the trotter. And of the great breeding problem, the value of the thoroughbred blood in the trotter, and that sort of thing, only these conclusions, with which no horse man could quarrel.

In breeding for harness speed we must keep track of the live lines, just as men of judgment and experience do in breeding for speed under the saddle. Sir Archy, who was called the Godolphin of America, has made his influence felt in trotting evolution through his sons, Kosciusko, Stockholder, and Timoleon, the latter the sire of Boston, the sire of Lexington.

After you have laid your foundation broad and strong, then breed stout-lunged trotter to trotter, always avoiding weak individuals, and you will find yourself on the way to championship honors.

It took from 1818 to 1903 to reduce the trotting record from 3:00 to the mile to 2:00, and it was not until 1845 that the present standard record (2:30) was reached and passed by the gray mare Lady Suffolk, 2:29½. Now there are recorded more than 30,000 trotters and pacers of standard speed rank. Through all this march of improvement in speed Mr. Busbey follows the trotting horse, giving his personal impressions of many of the record makers as he happened to see them, with plenty of stress laid on the fact that this or that millionaire owned the animal, and very scant recognition to the men who trained the horses and made them fit to perform their record-breaking feats. To him the greatest of all the records was that made by Maud S. to a high-wheeled sulky, (2:08¾, in 1885,) and the special brief he has always held for the mare and her owner, the late Robert Bonner, crops up at intervals throughout the book, the fact that Sunol in 1891 performed a half second faster, also dragging a high-wheeled sulky, being practically ignored, save for the mention in the records, because it was made over a kite-shaped track. Sunol's was the fastest record up to the time the bicycle sulky was introduced, the following year, 1892, when Nancy Hanks clipped 4½ seconds from the previous fastest mile. Since that time the record has been descending until Lou Dillon, at Memphis, in October of 1903, put it at 1:58¼, a record that, while undoubtedly made, is not admitted as a technical record because the horse had a pacemaker protected by a dirt shield in front of her, at the time of her performance. Mr. Busbey also denies that her record of 2:05 to a high-wheeled sulky is as good as Maud S.'s 2:08¾, because her sulky was rigged with ball-bearing hubs. Lou Dillon's miles in 2:00—at Readville, Mass., to sulky in August, and to wagon in Memphis in October—he does not protest against as records. But after reciting these and the other fast performances that have startled every one else among horse lovers, Mr. Busbey says, harking back to his favorite, Maud S.: "All things considered, I doubt if we have ever seen her equal." (Page 69.) That there are others equally opinionated Mr. Busbey shows by quoting W. L. Simmons of Kentucky, owner of the famous trotting sire George Wilkes, of whom Simmons, after claiming that he had timed the stallion a quarter in 29 seconds, while drawing an eighty-five-pound sulky, and a half in 1:04 while dragging a 120-pound wagon, says:

> If alive and fit to-day, George Wilkes would defeat every horse in the world easily. Compare grounds, 10 seconds; shoeing and training, 3 or 4 seconds, and the bike from 4 to 20 seconds, according to the horse, and we must conclude that the equal of George Wilkes in speed has not yet appeared. As a sire he will never be approached.

Nine of the 33 chapters into which the book is divided suffice to tell the story of what the trotting horse has done in his efforts against Father Time, and the remainder is devoted to brief histories of the foundation horses of the trotting families, what their descendants have done as producers of speed and how daughters of the families have become members of that family of "great brood mares" which Wallace created and gave a place to in the Trotting Register he established.

"Messenger," says this author, "above all horses, taught us the value of thoroughbred foundation." And in the voluminous records of the sires and dams of speed the blood of Messenger is almost always in evidence in proof of his assertion. To Justin Morgan he gives credit, but he cannot agree with the worshippers at the shrine of that great horse, that "the Morgans are the only distinct breed of trotters now extant." Says Mr. Busbey: "I have always conceded the wonderful prepotency of Justin Morgan. The racial characteristics of his family are nearly as fixed as those of the Jews; his blood resembles that of the Arab in the way it has established types, but I cannot bring my mind to the thought that the Morgan family is the only distinct breed of trotters. The Hambletonian family far surpasses it." Of the founder of that family he has this to tell:

> Amazonia, a snappy chestnut mare, * * * was bred to Mambrino, and the outcome was Abdallah, whose registered number is 1. * * * In 1830 he * * * died of starvation and neglect on a Long Island beach and was buried in the sand. It is sad to think of a horse through whom was directly transmitted the charmed blood of Messenger ending his days in an atmosphere of cold unappreciation. (Page 144.) * * * The Charles Kent mare * * * found a happy nick in Abdallah. The fruit of this union was a bay colt foaled May 5, 1849, at Sugar Loaf, near Orange County, N. Y. This colt when five years old was purchased from the breeder, Jonas Seely, by a plain farmer with a lean pocketbook. The price named for mare and colt was $125, and the farmer, William M. Rysdyk, sat on the top rail of a fence and pondered for some time the vital question. The outlay would embarrass him if the mare or colt should die. He finally said "Yes," and mother and son were taken to Chester. The bay colt, with star and hind ankles white, grew into a powerful horse of 15.2, and was named Hambletonian. His head was large and expressive, his neck rather short, his shoulders and quarters massive, and his legs broad and flat. He traces him to thoroughbred Messenger, over the substance-imparting cross of Bellfounder, gave us the greatest progenitor of harness speed that the world has yet seen. Experience shows that for stock purposes you want a horse with masculine head and neck.

From 1851 to 1873 Hambletonian was in the stud, being the sire in that time of 1,287 foals, and bringing to his owner $185,715 in fees. "In all Hambletonian has 150 sires of speed and 80 dams of speed. Without question he was the greatest trotting progenitor that ever lived."

Dexter, George Wilkes and Jay Gould all helped to make Hambletonian famous, and his numerous descendants to the third and fourth generations have continued his fame. Of Electioneer, Mr. Busbey says: "As a direct transmitter of the trotting gait, and as a factor in the problem of extreme speed, Electioneer stands in a class by himself. His equal has not yet appeared. He died Dec. 3, 1890. The championship laurel was worn by many of his 158 trotters, and one of the jewels in his crown is that he sired but two pacers." He had 96 producing sons and 88 of his daughters are dams of speed.

George Wilkes is another of the great sons of Hambletonian, having sired 72 trotters and 11 pacers that are in the speed list. He left 102 speed-begetting sons and 99 speed-producing dams. "In all directions the blood breeds on, and the family will survive coming generations."

A Story of Paul of Tarsus.

THE WHITE SHIELD. By Caroline Atwater Mason. 12mo. Philadelphia: The Griffith & Rowland Press.

Caroline Atwater Mason has taken as the subject of her story the old legend of Paul of Tarsus and Thekla, the beautiful maid of Iconium. Thekla was the betrothed of one Thamyris, a noble Prince, but one day she heard from her window the voice of Paul in the garden of the neighboring silversmith, and as he spoke Thekla became more and more interested until only the words of Christ's message delivered from the lips of Paul sang in her ears and she was deaf to the pleadings of her lover and her mother.

The story, as Mrs. Mason tells it, depicts the sufferings and tortures that Thekla undergoes for her faith. Cast from her mother's home and out of the city gates she wandered to Antioch. There she arrived during the progress of the celebration of the feast of Caesar. Alexander, Caesar's own high priest, seeing her, honored her with his caresses, but in a frenzy of madness at his touch the girl struck him on the cheek. For this sacrilegious act in daring to lift her hand against an ordained priest Thekla was condemned to death in the arena, a prey to wild beasts.

But those were the days of miracle, and the tiger, hungry as it was, refused to devour her. Thekla's faith was strong and abiding, and in the end she triumphed, and helped spread the doctrines which had cost her so dear.

DEMOCRATS ARRIVING AT SARATOGA SPRINGS

Feeling Prevails That Shepard Will Be the Nominee.

ROD IN PICKLE FOR McCARREN

Foes Plan to Make Him a Caucus Bolter —Tammany for Shepard, Palmer, Gaynor, or Herrick.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Sept. 17.—Democrats are piling into town on every train, and all is in readiness for the State Convention, which will be called to order on Tuesday at noon. Apparently Saratoga entirely has changed its political complexion since Thursday, for to-night nothing but Parker and Davis banners, lithographs, and signs are to be seen where earlier in the week were testimonials to the merits of Roosevelt and Fairbanks.

Since early morning decorators have been at work, and as a result the hotels show far more in the line of decoration than was to be found when the Republicans were in town. The Grand Union, where the various headquarters are to be located, presents a gala day appearance, bunting being draped around the big columns at the front of the hotel, while fully fifty big pictures of Judge Parker, four by ten feet in dimensions, were hung at various points.

Even the United States Hotel, where the Republicans always have headquarters, is fairly well plastered with Parker pictures and with bunting.

Among the leaders and delegates who have arrived so far there is a feeling that Edward M. Shepard will be the candidate, although both the Grout and Stanchfield booms have arrived in town and apparently are thriving. At the same time, practically everybody declares frankly that no candidate for any office as yet has been definitely settled upon, and that an open convention is in sight.

James Shevlin of Brooklyn, who has been here for two days, said:

"So far, at least, this looks like an open convention. It would be folly for anybody to think that David B. Hill cannot go ahead and put through any programme that suits him. Most of the convincing to be done will be in conference with Senator Hill. In the preparation of the slate the backers of each candidate will have to demonstrate the strength of their man to Hill, who then will decide.

"It seems to me that an agreement can and will be reached by the various leaders in conference, so that we shall be able to go into convention with a good slate that will suit everybody."

SHEPARD WANTS NO HEADQUARTERS.

Mr. Shepard came to Saratoga this afternoon, but did not get off the train, going right through the town to his Lake George Summer home, where he said he would remain during the convention. On the train that brought him up from New York was John B. McDonald. The two spent some time together on the train, but neither had anything to say for publication.

Mr. Shepard declined to discuss politics while his train was at the station here, and he also refused to allow Herman A. Metz of Brooklyn to open Shepard headquarters here at any of the hotels. Mr. Metz came to town Thursday night and met Mr. Shepard at the station this afternoon, accompanying him to Lake George to remain over Sunday.

Mr. Metz, who is the President of the old Shepard Democracy organization in Brooklyn, the Brooklyn Democratic Club, and who also is President of the newly formed Kings County Democratic Club, in which Controller Grout and Senator McCarren are prominent, is to be the active manager of the Shepard boom while the convention lasts.

Ex-Senator Michael J. Coffey of Brooklyn, the Red Hook statesman, who has successfully fought McCarren in the Ninth Brooklyn District at the last two primaries, just as he has for years successfully fought the old Willoughby Street organization there, arrived this evening and registered at the United States Hotel. He spent much time with James Shevlin. During the old days when Coffey was fighting McLaughlin and the auction-room contingent he and Shevlin were bitter enemies, but now Coffey and Shevlin are together fighting McCarren.

After Shevlin and Coffey had spent some time together this evening it became known positively that Senator McCarren would not get the fifteen anti-McCarren delegates to the convention into any caucus of the Kings County delegation. It also became known that a clever scheme had been concocted to put the forty-eight Brooklyn delegates controlled by McCarren into the position of bolting a caucus, instead of placing the fifteen Doyle-Coffey-Shevlin delegates in such a position.

At the Aug. 30 primaries McCarren carried sixteen districts with forty-eight State Convention delegates, while the anti-McCarren men carried five districts with fifteen delegates. Their districts are the Second, Seventh, Ninth, Eleventh, and Twelfth.

Now the plan is to have a caucus of the Greater New York delegates called by Tammany Hall for Monday night. Into such a caucus the fifteen anti-McCarren delegates would go, and they would stand by the caucus action.

PLAN AGAINST McCARREN.

Into any caucus of the Kings County contingent alone they would refuse to go on the ground that the caucus should be by the city delegates as a whole and not by counties or boroughs. Of course, Tammany absolutely would control any Greater New York caucus, having of itself 105 delegates, while a Greater New York caucus, counting in the entire County of Westchester, would have 189 delegates.

The nine votes of Queens, the nine votes of Westchester, and the three votes of Richmond, as well as the fifteen anti-McCarren votes in Brooklyn, all would be with Charles F. Murphy and Tammany Hall, making a total of 141 votes in such a caucus. In such a gathering the forty-eight votes controlled by McCarren would be absolutely lost.

Tammanyites, of course, do not expect that the McCarren men would go into such a caucus, but they have decided upon this plan to place the burden of bolting a caucus, if any such burden is to be placed, on the shoulders of the McCarren men instead of on the shoulders of the fifteen Doyle delegates from Brooklyn. Neither Shevlin nor Coffey would actually admit the existence of this plan to-night, although neither would deny it.

"Our delegates certainly would decline to go into a caucus where McCarren would unfairly muzzle us," said Senator Coffey. "The Greater New York caucus is the cau-

JAPAN BOWS TO THE PRESS.

Oyama Is Instructed to Treat Attaches and Correspondents Better.

TOKIO, Sept. 17—8 P. M.—Owing to the friction between the military authorities and field attaches and correspondents, Field Marshal Yamagata, Chief of the General Staff, to-day telegraphed to Field Marshal Oyama, commander in chief of the Japanese forces in the field, as follows:

"The imperial declaration of war as proclaimed to the people is universally recognized as being based on the broad principles of justice. It makes no distinction of race, religion, or national manners orcustoms.

"The sole object of the war is to insure the safety of this empire, guarantee the peace of the Orient, spread the blessings of civilization, and promote the general interests of all nations.

"It is therefore hoped that these principles will also find expression in the treatment of foreign officers and correspondents attached to our armies, and that, so long as the rule of military secrecy is not infringed, a frank and candid consideration be extended to them, so that the spirit of sincerity, which animates this empire, be fully demonstrated to the whole world."

GIRL STUCK IN CAR TRACK.

Traffic Held Up Until Policeman Got Her Shoe Heel Free from Slot.

A daintily gowned young woman stood directly in the path of a south-bound Broadway car at Thirty-fourth Street about 7:30 o'clock last evening. The rush to the theatres was on, and several more cars were held up.

"Get out of the way, Miss!" bawled the first motorman. "I ain't got no time to be bothering with youse."

But the young woman only waved her left hand and made no reply. Just then Policeman Walsh, the Beau Brummel of the Broadway squad, came up.

"What's the matter?" he queried.

"I'm stuck here; I can't move," said the young woman. "If you'll look at my feet I guess you'll see why. Oh, I never was in such a fix."

Walsh, getting down on one knee, soon saw what the trouble was. The tapering heel of her shoe had become wedged in the slot and the wearer was held fast. Walsh unlaced the shoe and the girl withdrew her foot. Then Walsh wriggled the shoe free. She slipped it on again, thanked Walsh profusely, and hurried off in the direction of Fifth Avenue.

TOOK BAG CONTAINING $20,000.

Man Helped Himself in Bank—Money Recovered, but Thief Escaped.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 17.—Just at the close of banking hours to-day a man in the lobby of the First National Bank here, observing the cage door leading behind the counter ajar, pushed it open, walked in, and, helping himself to a bag containing $20,000 in gold coin, made a rapid exit.

He immediately slowed down his pace and walked into a side entrance of the Brooklyn Hotel, closely followed by C. K. MacIntosh, an employe of the bank, who had witnessed the theft.

Seeing he was pursued, the thief turned into the hotel office, where he was overtaken and seized by MacIntosh. When asked to turn over the money he said it was his own.

The bag was taken from him, however, and its contents were found to be undisturbed.

The daring robber, who is about thirty-five years old and was well dressed, then asked the people in the hotel office to see if he had not told the truth by accompanying him to the bank, only a few feet away. He walked to the corner undisturbed, boarded a street car which was passing, and soon was out of sight. He is now being searched for by the police.

WOMEN'S COLLEGE CRUSADE.

Greek Letter Societies Unite to Protect Girl Students.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—Professing alarm at the moral dangers said to surround young women in American colleges, nine National Greek-letter societies have started a crusade in Chicago, aimed at conditions in every co-educational college in the United States.

Resolutions have been adopted declaring for co-operation with Faculties of colleges to improve social conditions and placing upon the Grand Presidents of the societies responsibility for prosecution of the reform movement.

Mrs. E. Jean Nelson Penfield of New York, wife of Judge William Warner Penfield, as representative of the Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority, was the moving spirit at the inter-sorority conference, which decided upon a reform movement.

The women, with the societies they represent, who decided upon the movement to improve the morals and social conditions of American colleges, are Mrs. Laura H. Norton, Chicago, Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority; Miss Elizabeth Gamble, Detroit, Pi Beta Phi Sorority; Miss Lillian W. Thompson, Chicago, Gamma Phi Beta Sorority; Mrs. T. C. Kimble, Abingdon, Ill., Alpha Pi Delta; Miss Bessie M. Krape, Freeport, Ill., Chi Omega; Miss Grace E. PASSED SCHOONER ON FIRE.

Steamer Chatham Saw No One on Board the Emily F. Northam.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 17.—The steamer Chatham, from Savannah to-day, reports that last Thursday night, off the South Carolina coast, the three-masted schooner Emily F. Northam of Philadelphia was seen ablaze amidships.

A strong wind carried showers of sparks from the burning vessel. Her decks were awash, her masts standing, and her burgee still flying, but all her gaffs and booms were gone with the exception of the main gaff, and her yawl boat was missing.

Capt. Hudgins of the Chatham got as close as safety would permit, but could discover no signs of life aboard, and he believes the crew got away in their yawl. The schooner was lumber laden, and may have become water logged in the cyclone Thursday night, the crew setting fire to her before leaving.

TWO HARRISONS' TOMB WRECKED BY VANDALS

New Rochelle Boatman Makes Discovery—No Motive Suggested.

CASKETS WERE BROKEN OPEN

Remains of David Harrison, Formerly Large Property Owner, and Son Found on Floor.

NEW ROCHELLE, Sept. 17.—The police of this place were notified late this afternoon that vandals had desecrated the private tomb of the Harrison family, on a small island in Echo Bay, back of Harrison Island, which was formerly the home of the Harrison family, for many years residents of Westchester County. An investigation showed that the culprits had broken open the tomb, smashed portions of the caskets, and scattered the contents about the tomb.

The desecration was discovered by Louis Pagan, who is employed by the New Rochelle Yacht Club. He was rowing along the shore, when he noticed that the door of the vault was open. Going ashore, he looked in and found everything in the tomb in confusion. He went back to New Rochelle and reported the matter to Police Sergeant Cody. Patrolman Bender was at once sent to investigate and found the remains of the two Harrison members that had been buried there scattered about the floor of the vault.

An iron pipe five feet long and three inches in diameter was near the entrance to the tomb. This had evidently been used to gain admission. Inside was found a shovel. The large stone slab used as a door was smashed into small pieces, and the two stones used to form the base on which the caskets rested was pulled out of place.

The catacomb was broken, and the brickwork was also demolished. The slab that was behind the caskets had also been pulled from its position. None of the ornaments on the caskets, however, had been disturbed.

The vault was built by David Harrison, Sr., many years ago. Mr. Harrison died in 1878 and his body was placed in the vault. His son David Harrison, Jr., died in 1882 and his body was laid beside that of his father.

The elder Harrison was at one time the largest property owner in Westchester County. He lived in a mansion on Harrison Island, where the New Rochelle Yacht Club has its home.

The police say they were in communication to-night with Frank Harrison, a Brooklyn lawyer, who is a son of the late David Harrison, Jr., but so far as known no light has been thrown on the motive for the desecration. That the culprits were not simply seeking plunder appears to be shown by the fact that they did not carry off the heavy silver handles and plates on the caskets.

NORDICA ON AUTO DASH.

Races from Late Liner's Pier to Dinner at Ardsley.

The American Line steamship New York got in from Southampton at 9 o'clock last evening with a heavy load of passengers, many of whom are notables. The boat was twelve hours late, and none of those aboard bemoaned that fact more than Mme. Nordica.

Just before she sailed for this side Mme. Nordica received an invitation to sing at a private gathering at Ardsley. She cabled that she would gladly sing. She then thought that the steamship would arrive here early in the day, and she would be able to make the trip to Ardsley at her leisure.

For two days the New York battled with storms that beat up the sea into mountainous high waves, while an unfavorable gale constantly cut down the ship's days runs. She passed in Sandy Hook shortly after 6 o'clock. Allowing for stops at Quarantine and for the time it takes to turn the ship in, Mme. Nordica figured that she would reach the pier at about 8 o'clock. She determined to reach her destination if such a thing were possible, and she sent a telegram from Quarentine to those excepting her that she would be there. She also sent a telegram to a local automobile stable to have their fastest machine at the American Line pier as soon as the vessel should dock.

The gangways had scarcely touched the pier when the prima donna, in an evening gown, with a great cloak thrown over it, rushed past the gang of longshoremen, past the customs officials, and through the crowd down into the street unaccompanied. A big, red racing machine was waiting for her. She was in it in a second, and like a shot the machine was off at wonderful speed. Cabmen, policemen, and pedestrians stood open-mouthed looking at the fast-disappearing machine as it whirled up West Street, flying across car tracks and bad spots, and making probably nearly the fastest time ever made in down-town New York.

Mme. Nordica's chauffeur escaped the vigilance of New York policemen and the constables on the road to the club. The automobile went past in a cloud of dust at such a rate that if any guardian of the highway saw it he failed to catch it.

The engagement which Mme. Nordica had was to sing at a dinner given by Charles S. Eldridge at the Ardsley Club in honor of the prima donna. She kept it all right.

Covers were laid for twelve, and after the dinner there was an entertainment at which Mme. Nordica sang to the members of the club.

PUSHES CHAIR TO STUDY MEN.

Beloit College Professor's Self-Imposed Task at World's Fair.

Special to The New York Times.

BELOIT, Wis., Sept. 17.—Last year a psychological department was established in Beloit College and Prof. Guy A. Tawney, head of the department, became so deeply interested in his experiments that this Summer he decided to sacrifice his rest and pleasure to original work. The exposition at St Louis, with its wealth of people from all countries and all classes, was his opportunity.

Since college closed Prof. Tawney has been pushing a wheeled chair up hill and down, over the large grounds of the World's Fair. From this favorable viewpoint he has studied the actions of the crowds of people and of individuals of many types and all sorts and conditions.

Not in fifty years will another Exposition equal to that now at St. Louis be seen in this country. The way to reach it is by the West Shore or New York Central. See our ticket agents.—Adv.

"NO PERSONAL ATTACKS ON PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT," SAYS JUDGE PARKER.

THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FORBIDS ANY REJOINDER IN KIND TO THE PERSONALITIES OF THE REPUBLICAN TEXT BOOK.

ROSEMOUNT,
ESOPUS, NEW YORK.

August 17th, 1904.

My dear Mr. Parker:-

The Times of this morning says that the party text book is about prepared, and that it will go to the printer in a few days. Therefore I hasten to beg you to see to it that there is no word in it that reflects upon the personal honor and integrity of President Roosevelt.

An Evening Post editorial indicates but little care was taken in that direction toward myself by the compiler of the Republican text book, but let there be no rejoinder in kind or otherwise.

I feel confident that you need no reminder, still my anxiety impels me to send this caution.

Very truly yours,

Alton B. Parker

WILL MAKE MANILA A BRAND NEW CITY

We Are to Transform and Beautify the Philippine Town.

AND ADD A SUMMER CAPITAL

Latter Is to be in Mountains—Secretary Taft Sends an Architect to Prepare Plans.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—The National Government has plans under way for the transformation of the City of Manila into a modern capital after the manner of the scheme proposed, but not carried out, for the City of Washington, and the changes already in process of execution at Cleveland.

It also is intended to found a Summer capital—a Philippine Simla—in the mountains 100 miles north of Manila.

The Manila project has progressed so far that the task of working out the detailed plans of the undertaking has been committed within the last week by Secretary of War Taft to Daniel H. Burnham of Chicago.

The news was received in this city from Washington to-day, and was confirmed to-night by Mr. Burnham. The Chicago architect will leave next week for San Francisco, and will sail next month for Manila by way of Japan. He will be accompanied only by a professional assistant, and expects to be gone five months.

Secretary Taft has had in view not only the scheme for the reconstruction of Manila but the man who he believed would be best fitted for the undertaking. At the time the Washington commission of architects, of which Mr. Burnham was President, made its tour of Europe to gather ideas for the design of a reconstructed capital, Gov. Taft of the Philippines cabled to Secretary Root suggesting that the party be permitted to return by way of the Philippines in order to study the problem of rehabilitating Manila.

The suggestion was not acted on, but Gov. Taft kept his scheme in mind, and when he returned to become Secretary of War he seized the first opportunity to consult Mr. Burnham. The result of the conference was the appointment of the Chicago man to the staff of Government architects and engineers connected with the work of the War Department.

Mr. Burnham's plans and his report on the problems with which he finds himself confronted in the reconstruction of Manila will be submitted to the Philippine Commission and then forwarded to the War Department. The estimates of the cost of the entire project will then be made and submitted to Congress in a bill providing for the expenditure of the necessary money.

Mr. Burnham said to-night that he would not venture to discuss the extent of the reconstruction of the capital until he has made a thorough study of the city. He never has been in the Far East and his knowledge of the Philippine capital he has obtained only from books and conversations with Secretary Taft. Other Government experts already have submitted plans for the reform of the sanitation, the street car, and lighting systems of the capital, and it will be the province of Mr. Burnham to design the most effective grouping of public buildings and the laying out of parks and boulevards.

The problem before the Chicago architect is to plan a new city which will conflict as little as possible with the present arrangement. The elements of this puzzle consist of the old or "walled" city, in which are situated the cathedral and the palace, and the outer or modern city, which is divided between the Europeans, Chinese, and Filipinos.

Through the city runs the Pasig River, filled with shipping and arched with numerous bridges. Beyond is the Luneta, the fashionable driveway and park, which constitutes the only attempt at landscape architecture in the city. These elements Mr. Burnham will seek to preserve so far as possible.

The central idea of the whole plan will be found in a series of administration buildings for the department, which now are scattered all over the city in temporary and often miserable quarters. There will be a residence for the Governor, a public library, museum, public baths, and a large park to be designed.

Mr. Burnham said his greatest interest is wrapped up in the possibilities of the plans for the Summer capital. This Philippine Simla, to which the entire American administrative colony will migrate in the heated term, will be located at Begulo, in the Province of Benguet, 100 miles north of Manila.

It is a great mountain meadow, twenty miles from the sea, and 4,500 feet above its level. The climate there is cool and equable all the year, and is free from the diseases of malarial character which make life at a sea level a menace in the Summer.

"The Manila problem is one of suiting new plans as far as possible to existing conditions," said Mr. Burnham this evening. "I am, therefore, more deeply interested in the Summer capital project. There I shall be able to formulate my plans untrammeled by any but natural conditions.

"I shall make an extended study of the buildings best suited to the climate and other demands of Philippine life, and then go ahead with the creation of a brand-new city.

"This dream of a Summer capital has come down from the days of the Spanish Governors. They always were going to build a retreat in the mountains where they might administer the Government in the disease-ridden season. But it was always mañana with the Spanish rulers, and they never got around to actual work in realizing the dream."

Mr. Burnham said he could not tell just how many millions of dollars it will take to carry out the plans. He is going ahead regardless of expense, and Congress will look after that.

LOU DILLON'S RECORD TROT.

Champion Goes Half Mile in 58¾ Seconds.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Sept. 17.—Three new world's records were made this afternoon during the fourteenth matinée of the Gentleman's Driving Club, at the Glenville track. All the record-breaking performances were made by horses owned by C. K. G. Billings, and were especially pleasing to him, as they celebrated his forty-third birthday. The first record to go was that for a half mile, trotting. Lou Dillon, driven by Millard Sanders, with a runner on the outside driven by "Doc" Tanner, made the half in 0:58¾, slipping a quarter of a second off the mark made by the trotting queen at Memphis last Fall, when she set the trotting record at 1:58¾. At that time the first half was made in 0:59 and the last half in 0:59¾. To-day, owing to the recent illness of the champion mare, Mr. Billings would not let her trot more than a half mile at top speed.

To the horsemen present this was the most impressive performance of the afternoon, but to the matinée crowd of 2,000 in the grand stand the performance of Prince Direct and Hontas Crook, Mr. Billings's crack pacing team, driven to wagon, was the most interesting. The heavy wind made it impossible to attempt a mile record, and it was announced that the team would be driven a fast half. How fast they went is best shown in the time, which was 0:29½ for the first quarter, while the half mile was finished in 1.00¼, making another world's record.

The third race that went to Mr. Billings's credit during the afternoon was when he rode Charlie Mac in an effort to beat the world's record of 2:14¾ trotting to saddle. A good track made it possible for Charlie Mac, despite the wind on the first quarter and in the stretch, to clip a second off his former mark, placing it at 2:13¾.

CAT TURNED ON THE GAS.

Young Man Killed—Father Found Unconscious and May Die.

NEWARK, Sept. 17.—Edward Whalen, Jr., twenty-two years old, was found dead in bed in his home, at 421 Third Street, East Newark, to-day. He had been suffocated by gas. His father, sixty years old, was found unconscious in the same room. He is in a critical condition and may die.

Two valves of a gas range in the kitchen adjoining were open. It is supposed that the cat, playing about the range, opened them.

OUTLOOK IN ITALY IS VERY SERIOUS

Agitation in Some Places Has Character of Rebellion.

STRIKE IN ROME IS BEGUN

To Begin in Naples To-morrow—Another Fight Between Strikers and Police in Genoa.

ROME, Sept. 17.—The strike here has begun, but is not yet general.

The Socialist agitation is on the increase, especially in the northern part of Italy. In some places it is assuming the character of a rebellion.

At Naples it has been decided to strike on Monday.

In other towns troops are kept in readiness, and the police everywhere have been reinforced.

Another fight has occurred at Genoa between the strikers and police. The whole night was passed in darkness there, owing to the strike.

The Mayor and other municipal officers of Milan came to Rome to-day to present to the Government an expression of the indignation of the population of Milan as a result of what they term the slaughter of the people.

The real cause of the whole agitation is an attempt on the part of the Extreme Party to overthrow the Cabinet, as, in spite of the fact that it is a Liberal Ministry, it energetically keeps the Extremists in hand.

AUTO GOES OVER PRECIPICE.

New Yorker Killed and the Other Occupants Injured.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 17.—Racing along Manchester Road, near Ballwin, St. Louis County, early this morning, a merry automobile party of four plunged over the edge of a steep declivity to the rockbed of a creek. The heavy machine crushed and almost instantly killed the chauffeur, Jack Killeen, or Kolleen, or Cullen, aged twenty-one, a telegraph operator from New York City. Miss Lulu Marquitz of St. Louis received dangerous injuries. Miss Nellie Marquitz, her sister, and Edward Parkhurst, son of a Ballwin, Mo., dentist, were less seriously injured.

With another automobile party, also of four members, the four had left the city early in the evening. Both machines, $7,000 French importations, were taken out by the chauffeurs without consulting the owners, it appears.

According to Parkhurst, the lights of the machine driven by Killeen went out on the return trip, but Killeen did not slow down. He steered his machine to destruction in dodging a farmer's wagon.

William Sauer, aged eleven, of Manchester, was watching the removal of the wrecked automobile late this afternoon, when he was run over by its hind wheel and probably fatally injured.

A GAIN FOR JEROME.

De Witt Boom for Controller Gives Votes to District Attorney.

Special to The New York Times.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Sept. 17.—The boom of Jerome De Witt for State Controller on the Democratic ticket was formally launched at the Democratic Assembly and County Conventions here to-day, when resolutions were passed instructing the delegates for Jerome De Witt and empowering him to choose the men who are to represent the County in Saratoga. Mr. De Witt has been in the field for several months.

He is an ex-Mayor, who was twice elected in a Republican city by overwhelming majorities, and is credited with being the strongest candidate in the Southern tier.

His candidacy makes the support of John B. Stanchfield by the Broome delegation impracticable, and they will vote for Jerome or Shepard.

FORBADE ANY ATTACK ON PRESIDENT'S HONOR

Parker Cautioned Compilers of the Campaign Book.

"NO REJOINDER IN KIND"

Letter Made Public with Advance Sheets of Book, Which Discuss Tariff and Reciprocity at Length.

Although several pages of the Republican campaign book are given over to an attack on the character of Judge Parker, particularly in regard to his motives in sending the famous gold telegram, "no rejoinder in kind or otherwise," and no attack on the honor or integrity of President Roosevelt appear in the advance proofs of the Democratic Campaign Textbook.

In making the first installment of the advance sheets public yesterday, George F. Parker, chief of the Literary Department of the National Committee, gave out for publication this letter from Judge Parker:

Rosemount, Esopus, N. Y., Aug. 17, 1904.

My Dear Mr. Parker:

THE TIMES of this morning says that the party textbook is about prepared, and that it will go to the printer in a few days. Therefore I hasten to beg you to see to it that there is no word in it that reflects upon the personal honor and integrity of President Roosevelt.

An Evening Post editorial indicates that but little care was taken in that direction toward myself by the compiler of the Republication textbook, but let there be no rejoinder in kind or otherwise.

I feel confident that you need no reminder; still my anxiety impels me to send this caution. Very truly yours,

ALTON B. PARKER.

Mr. George F. Parker.

The book, which will be issued in a few days by the Democratic National Committee, was prepared under the direction of a committee consisting of ex-Mayor Josiah Quincy of Boston, William S. Cowherd, Chairman of the Democratic Congressional Committee, and George F. Parker.

The Constitution, a Preface.

By way of emphasizing the Democratic contention that the "return to the Constitution" is one of the principal issues in this campaign, the book will be prefaced with a full copy of the Constitution of the United States. The subject discussed at greatest length is the tariff. Considerable attention is also devoted to the record of the Republican Party on reciprocity.

Discussing the tariff and the trusts, the authors of the book assert that Americans are forced to pay from 5 per cent. to 200 per cent. more for the products of their own country than the same products are sold for abroad. The authority for this statement is to be found in the export trade journals of the trusts containing full lists of export prices, several copies of which have recently been obtained by the National Democratic Committee. These journals circulate only in foreign countries, and the trusts are said to use every means in their power to prevent their falling into the hands of American buyers, lest the latter may learn the truth concerning this feature of the manufacturers' business. It is asserted that the committee has employed an expert familiar with all the ins and outs of the export business who has visited the offices of exporters and received from them, in their own handwriting, many of the prices quoted in the book.

During the year ended June 30, 1904, the sale of American-manufactured products to foreigners amounted to $462,000,000, of which fully 85 per cent., according to estimates of well-informed exporters, was sold at cheaper prices than are charged for precisely the same goods when sold to Americans. The average price of these goods in the foreign market is 20 per cent. less than the selling price in the home market. On some goods, such as paints and varnishes, the difference between the price to foreigners and to Americans is only 5 per cent., but on agricultural implements, tools, machines, and hardware the difference in the price to the foreigner and to the American varies from 10 to 50 per cent. On wire, cartridges, playing cards, &c., the difference is more than 100 per cent., and on such articles as wire rope and borax the difference exceeds 200 per cent.

Were there nothing else to condemn the Republican policy of high tariff taxes, this one fact ought to be sufficient to cause the American people to repudiate it, for surely nothing can be more unjust than for the American Government to tax its own people to the end that American steel rails, plows, shoes, and other articles of prime necessity may be sold cheaper to the people of Japan, Europe, and foreign countries generally than they are sold at home to Americans.

It is absurd to speak of "infant industries" like the Steel Trust, which is able to compete with the so-called pauper labor of foreign countries, and which makes enough profit on its export sales, even at prices far below its domestic prices, to enable it to pay dividends upon millions of dollars of watered capital.

When the voters of America—the farmers, mechanics, clerks, and professional men—realize the extent of the difference between export and home prices they will speedily withdraw "protection" from such "infants" as the Steel and other giant trusts of this country.

Some Prices.

In a table giving the domestic and foreign prices of articles in daily use are to be found, for example, the following:

Barbed wire, per 100 pounds, foreign price, $2; domestic price, $3.
Typewriters, foreign price, $60; domestic price, $100.
Sewing machines, fine, foreign price, $30.75; domestic price, $27.50.
Sewing machines, medium, foreign price, $17.50; domestic price, $22.
Sewing machines, cheap, foreign price, $12; domestic price, $18.

Long tables obtained from export trade periodicals of the trusts and published in this country are given to show the differences in discounts from price lists for foreign and home consumers, and also the percentage of difference between export and home prices. This percentage is found to range from 10 to 72 per cent. on such articles as bells, bolts, chains, augurs, locks, saws, and so on.

The difference between the domestic and export prices of implements, tools, utensils, and other wares and goods is shown by percentages varying from 5 per cent. to 66 per cent., and the difference between the prices of a long list of miscellaneous articles by percentages varying from 10 per cent. to 50 per cent.

"While," it is stated, "the accuracy of the export prices may be challenged by Republican politicians, it is not probable that they will be questioned by the manufacturers whose names are mentioned in the list."

Under the head of "Export Values versus Home Values," it is asserted that an accurate estimate of the value of the cargo of a steamship which sailed for South Africa not long ago showed that the cargo cost its foreign buyers $212,564, whereas it could not have been bought in New York for less than $246,045.

South Africa Versus New York.

"Thus," it is added, "on the cargo of this one small steamer a rebate of $33,481 was made in favor of buyers in South Africa. These facts are known to the customs officials, and should be known to the Secretary of the Treasury, yet Secretary Shaw repeats statements that have not only often been disproved, but are refuted by numerous official reports of his own department."

Concerning the statement of Secretary Shaw in the Republican campaign book of 1904 that the value of our exports sold at a lower price abroad than at home had been estimated by Senator Gallinger at $4,000,000, and the Secretary's further assertion that the substantial correctness of this estimate had not to his knowledge been questioned "by the opposition," the book says:

So far from the correctness of this estimate not being even questioned, its falsity has been absolutely proved, as was conclusively shown in the Democratic campaign book of 1902. It is not only false, but is based upon so many misstatements of facts that its repeated use after full exposure would seem to evidence an intention on the part of Republicans to deceive voters, if possible. The total wholesale value of manufactured goods sold at home is not less than $6,000,000,000. The value of these same goods for export is only about $4,800,000,000, and the difference between these two amounts, in round numbers, $1,200,000,000, affords an approximate measure of the staggering price which the American people pay for so-called protection.

The conclusions of the Industrial Commission appointed by Congress are cited to show that 20 per cent. of our exports are sold abroad at cheaper prices than are charged here. "But," the book says, "Secretary Shaw must know, as does every ex-member of the commission, that the pretended investigation which that partisan body made of export prices was a farce. The schedules of inquiry were sent to only 2,000 of the 600,000 manufacturing establishments of this country—that is, to only 1 in every 300, and only 416 replies were received. The guilty ones did not volunteer information which would incriminate them before the American public.

"At a conservative estimate, twenty times $4,000,000 of manufactured goods can be found in the iron and steel schedules alone which are sold abroad at reduced prices."

The chapter on the tariff and trusts concludes with statistics and extracts from various well-known trade journals and addresses by men of prominence.

Reciprocity Treaties.

The book outlines and criticises severely the policy of the Republican Party in the way of reciprocity treaties, paying special attention to the present Administration's "indifference" to the commercial possibilities of Canada and the United States. It says:

The President favors "reciprocity with foreign nations"—at least he says so. "It is a singular fact," says he, "that the only great reciprocity treaty recently adopted—that with Cuba—was finally opposed almost alone by the representatives of the very party which now states that it favors reciprocity."

It is also a singular fact—or it would be if there were anything "singular" about the violation of Republican promises—that it is the "only great reciprocity treaty" negotiated by Republicans, though their promises to inaugurate a magnificent system of reciprocity treaties that would give us control of the trade of the world have been standing unfulfilled for seven years.

So far from the Cuban reciprocity bill being a step in the direction of reciprocity, it was a final compromise between the friends and the enemies of reciprocity within the Republican Party. It was agreed between them that that should be the end of reciprocity. The authors of the Dingley bill in the House had made sugar the chief article to be used as a basis for reciprocity treaties with other countries, just as it has been the basis for all reciprocity arrangements perfected by Mr. Blaine. After the Cuban treaty had been ratified by Cuba, the Republican Party inserted into the body of the treaty an amendment which Cuba had never asked for, which provided that no treaty should be made with other nations which involved a reduction on sugar duties. This amendment destroyed at one blow all but one of the reciprocity treaties then pending in the Senate, and made it impossible to negotiate any advantageous treaties with the sugar-growing countries of the world.

In connection with this a portion of a speech in the Senate by Senator Dolliver (Rep.) of Iowa, is quoted thus:

It is a reproach to the Government of the United States to-day that there is hardly a line of the wisdom of James G. Blaine remaining upon the statute books of our country, and that not one step has been taken to give reality to the magnificent vision which illuminated the last days of poor McKinley's earthly career.

"The Republican Party," declares the Democratic National Committee, "has made the deed square with the word" by giving to protection the duties that were levied for reciprocity. The passage of the Cuban treaty was secured only by inserting the provision which destroyed all the reciprocity treaties McKinley had negotiated, and made it impossible to put back upon the statute books any part of the Blaine reciprocity policy."

Attitude Toward Canada.

Referring to reciprocity with Canada, the book quotes this clause from the Democratic platform, declaring it to be in line with the business principles which the Democratic Party seeks to apply to the conditions of international commerce:

We favor liberal trade arrangements with Canada and with peoples of other countries where these can be entered into with benefit to American agriculture, manufactures, mining, or commerce.

The attitude of the Republicans is described as follows:

The fixed policy of the Republican Party in its treatment of the Dominion of Canada has been to wring from her such profits as might be gathered without giving anything in return, or so to impoverish her that she must of necessity apply for admission to the sisterhood of States for self-preservation. This deliberately selfish policy has cost the United States the respect, almost the friendship, of the growing nation of the North, and the people of the United States are turning hopefully toward the Democratic Party for a correction of the great mistake.

Further on the operation of the Elgin reciprocity treaty with Canada, in force from 1855 to 1866, is discussed at length, as is also the fish reciprocity arrangement with that country from 1871 to 1885. The book says that one of the most important effects of the discouragement of purchases from Canada has been to cause the Canadians to develop their market in Great Britain, although the natural tendency of Canadian traffic was through the United States.

"The question of reciprocity with Canada," the book adds, "is one of the largest, most important, and most delicate questions with which the Administration will be called upon to deal. It must be treated broadly and with foresight, not used as a political football. It must be studied as an epoch-making problem instead of dismissed in the spirit of petty selfishness which has characterized the utterances of Republican monopolists and politicians regarding it since the abrogation of the Elgin treaty."

The Republican Party, by its repudiation of the principle of genuine reciprocity, has lost the confidence of the business men of the country and invited a policy of retaliation among the best foreign customers of the American producer of whatever class. It has played with the name of reciprocity and refused anything of the substance. Its traditions and its practices are wholly opposed to fairness in trade. It refuses to apply business principles to the problems of international commerce.

The Republican idea of reciprocity is and always has been to impose a tariff upon articles not produced in this country and then to trade that tariff down for the purpose of forcing the export of goods desired by foreign customers. The Republican Party does not and can not stand for commercial interchange upon fair terms.

The treatise on reciprocity closes with a charge of falsehood against a declaration in the Republican campaign textbook that the Republican platform of 1900 contained a reciprocity plank identical with that quoted from the Democratic platform, and reading, "We favor liberal trade arrangements with Canada," &c.

"This declaration," says the Democratic textbook, "is not to be found in the platform adopted by the Republican Party this year at Chicago. The Republican platform, as a matter of fact, makes only incidental reference to the subject of reciprocity, which a majority of the voters of the country, without doubt, regard as one of the most important now before the American people."

HOTEL CLERK TRIES SUICIDE.

Out of Work, Rejected by Family, Hasbrouck Shoots Himself.

George W. Hasbrouck, who was discharged from his position as a clerk in the Hotel Belmont, 115 West Forty-fifth Street, and who lives in a furnished room at 1,293 Amsterdam Avenue, made an unsuccessful attempt to kill himself last night on the steps of 236 West One Hundred and Twenty-third Street. Hasbrouck was under the influence of liquor at the time. He has been separated from his wife and daughter, who were boarding in the house with Dr. J. T. Joseph Bird.

Hasbrouck called and insisted on seeing his family, but Dr. Bird would not let him enter. Hasbrouck then turned to go back down the steps, and shot himself through the left breast. At the J. Hood Wright Hospital he said that he regretted his poor shooting, as he had thought that he knew how to kill himself. He is in a serious condition, but may live.

JAPANESE ADVANCE ON RUSSIAN FLANKS

Mukden Threatened from East, Southeast, and Southwest.

A GREAT BATTLE EXPECTED

Kuropatkin May Try to Hold the Manchurian Capital for Political Reasons.

MUKDEN, Sept. 17.—The Japanese are reported to be advancing on both flanks, from the east, southeast, and southwest.

The outposts are closely engaged twenty miles southeastward, there being almost constant skirmishing.

Indications point to another great battle in the vicinity of Mukden. Russian troops occupy all the surrounding villages.

Refugees are flocking into the city. Chinese among them complain of severity on the part of the Japanese.

GEN. KUROKI'S HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, Sept. 14, via Fu-San, Sept. 17.—The Japanese front is now some miles north of Liao-Yang, almost half way to Mukden, and confronting Gen. Kuropatkin's outpost lines.

Gen. Kuropatkin, it is believed, is removing his headquarters to Harbin.

Both armies are satisfied to suspend hostilities for a time. They are apparently exhausted after the battle of Liao-Yang.

TOKIO, Sept. 17.—Field Marshal Oyama reports that Russian cavalry outposts, with bases at Pan-chia-Gao, Han-lin-Pao, and Tasan-chia-Tzu, are daily scouting southward in the vicinity of Wuli-tai-Tse and Men-fu-lu-Tai, over a twelve-mile front, and to Jin-Tang, three miles from Tatang-shan-Pao.

The Russian cavalry are changing their clothing to gray and black, their Winter uniform.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 17.—There has been an entire absence of official news from the front to-day.

The War Office is displaying no especial concern as yet over the continual skirmishing on the flanks of the Russian Army, regarding it as a result of the natural desire of the Japanese to keep in touch with the Russian forces rather than as a premonitory symptom of a forward movement by Oyama's army, which the authorities are not inclined to believe can begin within a fortnight unless large reinforcements have been received and the work of getting up supplies has been done more quickly than was supposed to be possible.

The Japanese having been unable to follow up their victory at Liao-Yang when the time was ripe, the War Office sees no reason for feverish haste on their part to come in touch with Gen. Kuropatkin now that his forces have had time to recuperate.

The question whether a big battle will be fought in the vicinity of Mukden is considered here to depend chiefly upon Gen. Kuropatkin, as it is not believed that the Japanese will be able to force him to fight at Mukden unless he so elects. The general idea is that when the advance really comes the Japanese will simply outflank Mukden and go direct against Tie Pass.

The movements of the Japanese land forces and the appearance of a large flotilla in the Liao River are believed to support this view.

While military circles here realize the strategic weakness of Mukden, there are political and sentimental reasons why Gen. Kuropatkin may desire to hold as long as possible the ancient home of the Manchu dynasty.

KUROPATKIN THANKS THE CZAR.

Army Grateful for the Emperor's Appreciation of Its Deeds.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 17.—Under date of Sept. 16, Gen. Kuropatkin telegraphed to the Emperor as follows:

"The entire Manchurian army rejoices inexpressibly at your Majesty's appreciation of its labors and military deeds. We are all animated by the one desire to beat the enemy, and justify the confidence reposed in us by the Supreme Chief of the Russian Army, who may feel perfectly assured of the army's future self-denial and devotion.

"Our departure from Liao-Yang was unavoidable and was accomplished under conditions fraught with great difficulty. Even our adversaries upon this occasion were very modest, their report not mentioning the capture of prisoners, guns, or other trophies.

"Gen. Kuroki's official report confirms the statement that on the morning of Sept. 4 his entire force, which is the strongest of the three Japanese armies, was on the right bank of the Tai-Tse River, and could, if conditions had been favorable, have cut off the troops occupying Liao-Yang from the Russian troops operating on the right bank of the Tai-Tse River."

The Emperor's congratulatory message to Gen. Kuropatkin is regarded as effectually putting an end to the stories of imperial displeasure with Kuropatkin's Generalship at the battle of Liao-Yang.

TO ENFORCE OUR NEUTRALITY.

One Warship to Stay Near San Francisco and Another at Bremerton.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Instructions were sent to Rear Admiral Goodrich at San Francisco to-day directing him to detach one ship from his squadron when he leaves for Magdalena Bay to hold the Autumn target practice. The vessel detached will remain in the vicinity of San Francisco, prepared to enforce neutrality should Russian or Japanese war vessels put in at the Golden Gate.

The Wyoming has been ordered to remain at Bremerton in readiness for the same duty.

The department has no official information that there are other Russian cruisers bound for the Pacific Coast, but there is talk to that effect at San Francisco, and it is thought advisable to be ready for any emergency.

VALLEJO, Cal., Sept. 17.—The dismantlement of the Russian transport Lena began to-day at the Mare Island Navy Yard. The work is being done under the supervision of Capt. Drake of the Ordnance Department, assisted by Gunner Shuttleworth.

The officers and crew are anxiously awaiting a final decision regarding their disposition.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 17.—The negotiations between the United States and Russia relative to the disposition of the crew of the Lena have not yet been completed.

The request of the United States that the crew be interned at Mare Island until the end of the war has been transmitted through the Russian Embassy at Washington and is being considered by the Admiralty, where it is desired that the crew be allowed to return home under an agreement that the officers and men are not to fight again during the war.

The same situation exists in regard to the crews of the protected cruiser Askold and the torpedo boat destroyer Grozovoi at Shanghai.

The Almiralty has no confirmation of the reports that the Lena was engaged in a fight in the Pacific.

READY TO ATTACK FORTRESS.

Japanese Siege Works at Port Arthur Completed—Terrific Bombardment.

PARIS, Sunday, Sept. 18.—The correspondent of the Matin at Che-Foo says he learns, from an official source that the Japanese are preparing for a decisive attack upon Port Arthur and that troops are daily being landed at Dalny, together with powerful cannon.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 17.—A Japanese who arrived here to-day reports that the citizens of Dalny on Sept. 15 expected that the general attack upon Port Arthur would be renewed upon the following day. He has reliable information that the Japanese siege works at Rih-lung-Shan and Hik-wan-Shan were completed on Sept. 15.

Recent Chinese and Japanese arrivals agree that the bombardment of Port Arthur became terrific at dawn of Sept. 15 and continued until the forenoon of Sept. 16. The Japanese fired from Shu-shi-Yen, Pa-lung-Shan, and Pigeon Bay, where heavy guns from Japan have been placed in position lately.

The shells fell with great frequency in the Chinese new town.

Yan-kia-Tung, a village at Pigeon Bay which was occupied by the Russians, has been evacuated by them secretly. The Japanese have not occupied the village.

Five hundred cavalrymen who attempted to drive the Japanese from Pa-lung-Shan have not returned, and it is believed that the fortress there has been captured.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 17.—As far as the public is concerned, interest in the war seems again to be gravitating toward Port Arthur, where the gallant fight of Lieut. Stoessel's garrison is being watched with intense interest.

The report that the garrison has been forced to fall back on the use of home-made powder, which is proving defective, is considered a discouraging factor. It would be a national grief should the defense of the fortress fail through lack of ammunition.

More importance, however, is attached in military circles to the reports that the Japanese have abandoned the idea of a direct assault and are tunneling the fortifications, and it is believed possible that the end may come as at Sevastopol, with a repetition of the dreadful carnage at the Malakoff Tower.

THE YELLOW PERIL AGAIN.

Japan's Victories Evoke the Spectre—China Becoming Bolder.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—Another wave of popular agitation against the "yellow peril" has resulted here from Japan's recent remarkable display of force.

This apprehension is shared to a considerable extent in official circles where it was suggested to-day that the danger might compel the European powers to consider the necessity of effecting a coalition for self-defense against the peril.

The newspapers and political leaders also emphasize the growth of the peril. Henri Rochefort says it behooves Europe to take warning in time. He asserts that France will be one of the first to suffer, through Japan's designs on Indo-China.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 17.—Important developments regarding China's attitude toward the belligerents are anticipated here in well-informed quarters. There are rumors of looser relations between China and Japan, of the possibility of the Japanese turning over Port Arthur, when captured, to China, of their restoring Manchuria to the Chinese, &c.

Although these reports are no confirmed they lead to quite a general belief that negotiations of some sort are going on behind the scenes of which the outside world has little cognizance.

The Russ says it believes the Japanese successes are emboldening the Chinese Government more and more, and that they are prompting such diplomatic steps as China never dreamed of before. Since the Japanese occupation of Niu-Chwang and direct contact between the Chinese and Japanese they have seemed quickly to have reached an understanding, the occupation of neutral territory evoking no protest.

The Russ expects the war to take on a phase, as Chinese neutrality vanishes, which the powers in their agreement to preserve China's neutrality can not ignore. Moreover, the Russ believes the situation will call for deeds and not words. It concludes:

"We need not be unduly alarmed, however. The interference of China will scarcely be to our disadvantage."

CZAR WANTS NO STRONG MEN.

This Is the Reason, It Is Said, of M. Witte's Continued Retirement.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—One of the highest diplomatic officers here has received an interesting report concerning Court intrigues going on at St. Petersburg.

The report says the Emperor has definitely declared his opposition to having any strong man, like M. Witte, exercise authority to the practical exclusion of himself. This, it is added, is the chief cause of M. Witte's continued retirement and of his Majesty's resentment against the late M. de Plehve's autocratic power. The Emperor has let it be fully understood that there will not be another strong man other than himself.

The report expresses doubt concerning the wisdom of the Emperor's action, owing to his inability to play a strong role in statesmanship.

HORSES REMAIN CONTRABAND.

Russia Also Declines to Put Railroad Material in Conditional Class.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 17.—Foreign Minister Lamsdorff's reply to the British Ambassador, Sir Charles Hardinge, yesterday on the subject of Great Britain's representations as to contraband of war, admitted the conditional character of all articles mentioned in Section 10 of Article VI. of the Russian Regulations, except horses and other beasts of burden, which, Russia insists, must remain in the category of absolute contraband.

In reply to the representations of Ambassador McCormick on behalf of the United States, cotton will be classed as conditional contraband, but, as stated yesterday, railroad material, certain classes of machinery, and boilers to be used on warships continue to be absolute contraband.

Negro Invents a Safety Switch.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, Sept. 17.—Frank Bayliss, a poor negro of this city, who has worked for years as a mechanic, has invented and patented a device that will probably make his fortune. It is an automatic switch designed to prevent open-switch accidents. Letters have been received him and his backer from twenty-six railroads. Engineers from various cities of this country and Canada will be here on Sept. 27 to test the device.

CHINESE THREATENING THE RAILWAY TO PEKING

Outbreak in Pe-chi-Li Reported to French Foreign Office.

NATIVES ANGRY AT TRICKERY

Found That the Concession Given to Belgians Was Really Acquired by French and Russians.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—A dispatch to the Foreign Office from Peking announces that disturbances have occurred throughout Pe-chi-Li Province threatening the security of the railway from Peking to Han-Kow, which is a French-Belgian concession.

Accordingly, the French Minister, M. Dubaile, protested and asked that Chinese troops be ordered to re-establish order.

The Minister does not expect the disorder to have serious results.

In the absence of detailed news as to the nature of the disturbances which threaten the railway from Peking to Han-Kow it cannot be known how serious the outbreak is, but it is certain that the Chinese are highly indignant over the manner in which they have been treated in connection with the construction of this railway.

The whole story of the intrigues connected with the Peking—Han-Kow Line and the complementary road from Han-Kow to Canton is a long and involved one, but in effect China has found herself outwitted by the French and Russians, and, after supposing that she had safeguarded herself by giving the concession for the line to Belgians, representatives of a country from which no complications were to be feared, discovered too late that these Belgians were acting on behalf of France and through France Russia.

The Belgians began by getting the concession for the half of the line nearest to the Russian sphere of influence, the Peking—Han-Kow section. The concession was ratified in August, 1898, and in March, 1899, the prospectus of the Société Belge pour l'Etude de Chemins de Fer en Chine informed the astonished Chinese that three-fifths of the funds of the undertaking were French, that the shareholders were French, and, in addition, that the society claimed the right not only to build the northern half of the line, but also the southern half, from Han-Kow to Canton, in case the contract with an American syndicate for constructing it, then under negotiation, should fall through.

China, in her agreement with the American syndicate, thereupon took precautions which she thought would absolutely prevent any such trickery as she had suffered in connection with the northern railway. She expressly provided that "the Americans cannot transfer the rights of these agreements to other nations or people of other nationality."

But the guileless Chinese were deceived again. The Belgians set about to get control of the American China Development Company, the concern which had obtained the concession, and it is said that two-thirds of the shares of the company were acquired by the Société Asiatique, which represented the Belgian-French-Russian group.

This fact did not become known publicly until last year, though it is said that control of the company was obtained in 1898. In 1903 Mr. Parsons was forced to resign as President of the American China Development Company and was replaced by Gen. Whittier, while most of the other Directors were forced out and replaced by Belgians. It is expected that the next move will be the formal amalgamation of the companies controlling the northern and southern sections of the great trunk line.

China, on her part, threatens to cancel the agreement with the concessionaires of the line from Han-Kow to Canton, but the Belgians declare that though the control of the American China Company has passed into their hands, the company itself remains American, and that it is therefore entitled to the protection of the United States in the enforcement of its agreement with China. So far as is known, the Washington Government has not at present made any decision regarding the case.

CHINESE-ITALIAN FIGHT.

Unprovoked Attack on Two Native Soldiers Causes Anger in Peking.

PEKING, Sept. 17.—An extraordinary fracas between Italian and Chinese soldiers occurred on Thursday afternoon. It appears that two Chinese soldiers were out walking unarmed along the public road bordering upon the Italian drill ground adjoining the Italian Legation. They stopped to watch the Italians drilling. The Italians ordered them away, and when they refused to go a fight ensued.

The two Chinese were beaten. One of them was then seized and taken into the Italian Legation, while the other ran to the residence of Gen. Chiang, who is Commander in Chief of the Chinese troops stationed here.

A dozen Italians followed him. They fired two shots into the General's residence, and one Italian soldier entered it. Chinese soldiers assembled and prepared to fight, but one of their officers prevented further disturbance.

Representations have been made by the Chinese authorities to the Italian Legation, but no answer has yet been received. Great indignation is felt and expressed upon all sides at the unprovoked and unwarranted attack. It is hoped, however, that the incident will be arranged without any complications.

"NOT GUILTY WITH THE AXE."

Prisoner at Pawtucket Says He Used Club to Slay a Woman.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., Sept. 17.—John Allingham was arraigned in the local police court to-day charged with murdering Mrs. Dennis Crowley on Thursday, Sept. 15.

The warrant upon which Allingham was arraigned named the weapons which were used in killing the woman as a club and an axe, and the prisoner, when asked to plead, said, "Not guilty with the axe." He was then ordered to appear for examination Monday morning.

While being led down stairs from the courtroom into the city jail, however, Allingham changed his mind about the plea he had entered and requested that he be taken back to the courtroom. This was done, and he made a second plea. "I did it with the club," he said, and the court adjudged him probably guilty and bound him over to the Grand Jury.

G. E. STILLINGS SURRENDERS.

President of Preferred Mercantile Company of Boston Held in Bail.

BOSTON, Sept. 17.—George E. Stillings, President of the Preferred Mercantile Company of this city, for whose arrest a warrant had been issued, surrendered to the United States authorities to-day, and on the charge of using the mails in the furtherance of an alleged lottery scheme was held in $2,000 bail by Commissioner Fiske for a hearing Sept. 26. Stillings had been in the West on a tour of the branch offices of the company.

The manager of the company in this city, J. Franklin Kinsley, and Treasurer Guy C. Stillings were arrested on the same charge a few days ago.

CAPTAIN BEATEN BY RUFFIANS.

Police Leader Big Mac Who Smashed the Rabbi's Hat.

Capt. McGlynn of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Police Station has a very black left eye and a face that is not comely because of its bruises. His nose is twisted to starboard, but McGlynn is not troubled by his appearance, because until he can look something like his normal self he will be pointed to with pride by the good people of Harlem.

At the same time, he will be dreaded by the bad people, who are aware that the Captain more than evened things up, because there are those of their number wearing two black eyes to his one and have teeth missing, where he suffered only lacerated lips. For his one swollen nose there are a dozen similarly twisted.

Capt. McGlynn received his glory and his wounds last night in a fight with rowdies at the corner of One Hundred and Sixteenth Street and Eighth Avenue. He had been notified by Jews who are celebrating their holidays in Purvis Hall, at that corner, that they were being molested by toughs. So the Captain went to the corner in civilian's clothing to watch. He found a crowd jeering at the Jews entering the hall. Pretty soon he saw a man who towered above the other rioters reach out and smash the silk hat of Rabbi Margolies of 49 Nassau Street. McGlynn interfered, and the big fellow struck the policeman a blow in the left eye that sent him spinning. Louis Linn of 176 Essex Street tried to help the Captain, but he was knocked down.

McGlynn recovered and returned to the attack with a "billy." He was getting the best of the tough when the man's friends came to his rescue and struck the Captain from every side until he and the giant went down together.

Policeman Sullivan, attracted by the shouting, sent in an alarm to the station house, and then with his night stick hewed a way to the centre of the crowd. He found the Captain with one hand clutching the tough's throat, while with the other he was trying to keep off his other assailants.

A moment later the patrol wagon arrived, and a dozen battered individuals, including the giant, were taken to the station house. The big man gave the name of John Krawford, and said that he lived at 155 West Sixty-sixth Street.

PLOT TO STEAL LEITER'S BODY.

But If Ghouls Carry It Out They Will Need Dynamite and Derrick.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Professional grave robbers have plotted to rob the tomb of L. Z. Leiter in Rock Creek Cemetery here. The scheme was discovered through a letter from the West received by Superintendent Howell of the local cemetery.

The plan, which implicates several professional grave robbers, was to remove the body of Mr. Leiter from the cemetery and hold it for a large ransom.

The details of the scheme were communicated to Superintendent Howell, along with the information that the ghouls had left Chicago. The letter advised that an extra guard be placed in the vicinity of the Leiter burying ground.

When the dispatch reached him Mr. Howell merely smiled. The reason was apparent later, when he explained that the body of Mr. Leiter was inclosed in a metallic coffin, with four feet of solid cement beneath it and as all sides of it. On the top of the coffin there is a layer of cement eight feet thick, interwoven with railroad iron.

Mr. Howell said the would-be robbers had better bring a carload of dynamite and a few derricks along if they had any hope of successfully carrying out their alleged plan.

SNATCHED FROM DEATH AT SEA.

Crew of Waterlogged Schooner Nathan Lawrence During Big Storm.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Sept. 17.—The third shipwrecked crew to be landed in Wilmington since the disastrous hurricane of Tuesday and Wednesday came up to the city yesterday. The rescued men were Capt. E. W. Barlow and seven men, who were taken from the wreck of the schooner Nathan Lawrence in the Gulf Stream, off Cape Romain.

The Nathan Lawrence sailed from Georgetown, S. C., last Monday. The hurricane struck the ship at 6 P. M. Tuesday and carried away every sail, though snugly furled around the booms. Huge seas boarded the ship, swept both lifeboats away, carried away the forward house, the midship house, and all the water tanks and belongings of the crew. In the midst of the awful sea Tuesday, at midnight, the ship sprang a leak, and filled in thirty minutes. Nothing was left above water but the after house, and on to this the crew lashed themselves and waited for daylight.

At the break of day Wednesday the schooner D. J. Sawyer sighted the wreck and bore down on it. The sea was too rough all day to allow a boat to be launched, but at 5:30 o'clock in the evening a boat was put over and all hands were saved.

The rescuing schooner herself had suffered from the storm, having lost her jib-boom, mainsail, and two headsails.

MAY REINSTATE GENER.

Cuban House Takes Up Removal of Havana's ex-Mayor by Gen. Wood.

HAVANA, Sept. 17.—The House of Representatives to-day resolved to request President Palma for a record of and the reasons for the removal by Governor General Wood of Miguel Gener from the Mayoralty of Havana and the appointment of Señor O'Farrill, the present incumbent.

This is considered as the first move on the part of the Moderates, who now have small majorities in Congress, to take the control of Havana from the Nationalists by reinstating Señor Gener.

In January, 1902, pending an investigation by Señor Nunes, the Civil Governor of Havana, Governor General Wood suspended Mayor Gener, twenty-three out of twenty-eight Councilmen of Havana having petitioned Gen. Wood for the Mayor's removal.

It was stated at the time that the Mayor's suspension was the result of an investigation into his conduct in relation to political affairs in Cuba in general and with the Presidential elections in particular.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

WATERLOO, N. Y., Sept. 17.—The Academy of Music block and the Windsor House and Sweets Hall, were destroyed by fire this morning with a total loss of nearly $50,000. The losses were all partially covered by insurance.

LAPORTE, Ind., Sept. 17.—Fire to-day destroyed five five-story buildings inside the State prison walls in Michigan City, causing a loss of over $100,000. The fire started from a dry kiln in the chair factory, according to a statement by the authorities, although rumors are in circulation that the convicts fired the buildings. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

COCKRAN'S WARNING BASED ON COLORADO

Result of Republican Policy, He Tells Big Brooklyn Crowd.

HARMONY SHOWN AT MEETING

McCarren Accepts Former Rival Doyle's Invitation to Attend—Hugh McLaughlin Present.

Harmony in the local Democracy was the watchword which signalized the opening of the Democratic campaign in South Brooklyn last night with a big ratification meeting in Prospect Hall, in Prospect Avenue, near Fifth, under the auspices of the Democratic Associations of the Seventh, Ninth, and Twelfth Assembly Districts.

W. Bourke Cockran was the orator of the evening, and men and women from every part of Brooklyn flocked to hear him. He laid emphasis upon the situation in Colorado, which, he asserted, was due largely to the policy of the Republican Administration.

Fire Commissioner Doyle, leader of the Seventh Assembly District, who won his district against Senator McCarren at the last primaries, had arranged for the gathering. Senator McCarren was personally invited by Mr. Doyle to attend, and he occupied a conspicuous place on the platform, beside him being District Leaders Dooley, Kehoe, and Farrell, together with several other men prominent in local political circles.

Hugh McLaughlin was also present, but instead of sitting on the platform he occupied a box in the balcony with Judge Walsh, James Byrne, and Superintendent Collins of the Building Department. Charles F. Murphy, Tammany Hall's leader, who it was said would be there, did not appear.

The hall, which seats 4,000 people, was crowded to its full capacity. Mr. Cockran was escorted to the platform amid cheers which lasted five minutes. John Green, a member of the Board of Education, presided.

Mr. McCarren reached the hall while the Chairman was in the middle of his introductory remarks, and it was necessary for him to stop talking for two minutes while the audience cheered.

Mr. Cockran began by expressing his pleasure at the get-together spirit shown at the meeting.

"I see here assembled in one hall and upon one stage," he said, "all the elements of the Democratic Party, determined that, whatever may be their differences on local matters, they are a unit upon the one great purpose which animates the hearts of the Democracy throughout the Union in this campaign."

He referred to the Republicans' attitude at the beginning of the campaign and to Mr. Roosevelt's recently issued letter of acceptance. This letter, he said, had dissolved the mystery as to what the Republicans intended to do, and had foreshadowed a policy which, if ratified by the American people, meant the development of "a system which, if allowed to grow and develop, must work the overthrow of the republican government." He continued:

THE COLORADO SITUATION.

"I don't suppose that anybody will deny that republican government has ceased to exist in the State of Colorado. Our Republican friends will not insist to-day that the government of Mr. Bell is a republican government, but they tell us that the conditions in Colorado are no worse than those that have existed for several years in the Southern States, and that that statement is justified by the lynchings which have occurred below the Mason and Dixon line.

"I would be the last to defend lynchings, but I don't think that the lynchings in the South have ever been shared by an Executive or by any department of the Government. But in Colorado the suppression of republican government was not in defiance of the State, but by the aid of the State authorities themselves. They participated in the suppression of constitutional government.

"If the statement of our Republican friends be true that similar conditions exist in the South, that merely shows that the evil has sunk deeper and spread wider than Democrats have charged. But no one can say that in Colorado the condition which exists at Cripple Creek is republican government, whatever else it may be. It may be better than republican government, but it is not republican.

"In this country Government can exist only by the consent of the governed, and it is upon the statements of those who justify the conditions in Colorado that I base the assertion that it is not constitutional government.

"Here we are presented with two conceptions of government—one the conception of government as seen in Warsaw, where all authority is centred in a single man. Do you suppose that government can be permitted to perish in Colorado and remain secure elsewhere in the Nation? Bear in mind, we are face to face with a condition on which we must act. Either the conditions in Colorado must govern the Union or the conditions existing throughout the Union must govern Colorado.

"Either the peace of Warsaw which has been established at Cripple Creek must be the basis of peace throughout the Union or the Constitution established at Washington must govern Cripple Creek and every other portion of the United States. The policy which Mr. Roosevelt has outlined can have no other result than we have seen in Colorado. It must lead to disorder and disaster and the ruin of democratic institutions. Democratic institutions cannot be used to administer the policy which he foreshadows."

Mr. Cockran said that he had no disposition to criticise Mr. Roosevelt's personal merits. "I don't criticise him because he lacks virtue," he said. "I fear him because he possesses it."

Mr. Cockran then ridiculed the Republican claims for protection, whose natural consequence, he said, was the rising of the trusts. Democrats, he said, believed that prosperity would come in only one way, "by establishing our political and our industrial systems not upon any pretense of superior wisdom on the part of any men or of any class or of any party or any country, but by obedience of all men to the wisdom which comes not from human experience, but which is revealed from heaven."

He concluded thus:

"It is said that if Judge Parker is elected the present system cannot be changed. That is quite true. But we can prevent this system from going any further.

"The choice now before the American people is not who shall administer Republican Government, but shall Republican Government be restored? Shall the partial ruin that has overtaken it be stamped out, or shall it be allowed to spread until the whole system is undermined?"

The mention of Judge Parker's name evoked prolonged cheers.

CRUISER "SUNK" BY A SUBMARINE BOAT

Squadron Was Warned, but She Made Successful Attack.

WAR HAS CHANGED PRACTICE

Asiatic Struggle Convinces Authorities That Future Wars May Be Fought at Night.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 17.—The submarine torpedo boat Shark, which left here for No Man's Land yesterday afternoon with the torpedo boats Tingey and Winslow, returned to this port to-day and reported that she made a successful attack on the cruiser Columbia of the North Atlantic training squadron.

The Columbia, together with the Minneapolis and Prairie, is engaged in target practice off No Man's Land, and the officers of the vessels had been apprised that an attack was to be made by the torpedo boats, but it was not known which of the warships would be made the target.

Just after nightfall, while the searchlights of the three warships were actively at work, the Shark, commanded by Lieut. Charles T. Nelson, succeeded in getting within fifty or sixty yards of the Columbia, and a victory was awarded her, she having, technically sunk the cruiser.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Remarkable results have already been obtained in the naval target practice now going on in Menemsha Bight. The vessels of the North Atlantic Squadron in last Spring's target practice broke all the world's records for rapidity and accuracy of

HORNBLOWER WILL BE TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN

Hill Wins His Old Enemy's Consent Through Sheehan.

SURPRISE TO POLITICIANS

Thought by Some That It Is Part of ex-Senator's Plan to Stop Nomination of Shepard.

William P. Hornblower has been selected for temporary Chairman of the Democratic Convention, to be held in Saratoga this week. The announcement was made by William F. Sheehan, who arranged the matter with Mr. Hornblower, at the instance of ex-Senator David B. Hill.

It was stated that while Mr. Hill was in the city last week he was too busy with other matters to see Mr. Hornblower, so asked Mr. Sheehan to perform the service for him. Mr. Hornblower was doubtful at first as to whether he could accept, on account of the press of legal matters, but in the interest of harmony finally acceded to Mr. Sheehan's request. Mr. Sheehan at once telephoned the news to Mr. Hill in Albany.

Mr. Hill's selection of Mr. Hornblower came as a great surprise to politicians. Although the rupture between Mr. Hill and Mr. Hornblower dates back twelve years, the peace pipe had not been smoked up to this time. In 1892 and thereafter these gentlemen were very active against each other. Mr. Hornblower, with Edward M. Shepard, the late E. Ellery Anderson, William C. Whitney, and Charles S. Fairchild, was one of the original anti-snappers of 1892, who opposed David B. Hill's candidacy for the Presidency. After that Mr. Hornblower was nominated for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States by President Cleveland, but he failed of confirmation in the Senate chiefly on account of the opposition of Senator Hill.

Friends of Mr. Hill thought that his selection of Mr. Hornblower had more behind it than the mere desire for harmony. They thought that it might be part of a plan to head off the nomination of Edward M. Shepard for Governor. Backing up this view they argued that having gone so far as to choose Mr. Hornblower in the interests of harmony, Mr. Hill could not be expected to countenance the nomination of Mr. Shepard.

In the meantime the talk of District Attorney Jerome will not down. The impression is growing that a lot of the talk about a serious row between Hill and Jerome is all in the game of politics and along the line of trying to dispel the impression that Hill is in supreme command.

There was also a story in circulation yesterday that the Grout boom had received an impetus on account of the alleged healing of the breach between Murphy and McCarren. The principals to this arrangement refused to discuss it, but the story was to the effect that McCarren had promised Murphy that he would retire with Senator Hill on Jan. 1 if Murphy would withdraw all opposition to the nomination of Grout. Murphy is said to have consented.

Elliot Danforth, who was in the city yesterday, said that he had made a trip through the State, and that the Murphy-McCarren difficulty was cutting little figure. He found lots of sentiment for Daniel S. Lamont.

Several politicians thought yesterday that Judge Gaynor would be a factor in the Governorship race. He was indorsed at a meeting of the Personal Liberty League, which is composed of liquor dealers. The name of Judge D. Cady Herrick of Albany was also prominently mentioned, and there were those who went so far as to say that his nomination had been decided upon. It was pointed out that the friction between Judge Herrick and Hill had been only spasmodic, and whatever remains of it, it is believed, could be quickly wiped out.

Controller Grout said yesterday that he would not go to Saratoga because he was too busy preparing his estimate for next year's budget for the Finance Department.

It was stated on authority yesterday that, although the various leaders had discussed the Gubernatorial situation with Judge Parker during his visit here and that he had listened to all that had been said, he had expressed no preferences and would not interfere in any way in the selection of a candidate.

WESTCHESTER FOR KEOGH.

Three Hundred Democrats to Go to Saratoga to Boom the Judge.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, Sept. 17.—It developed here to-day that the Westchester delegation expects to present the name of Supreme Court Justice Martin J. Keogh to the Democratic State Convention for the nomination for Governor. The delegates, together with 300 other Westchester Democrats, will leave for Saratoga on Monday on a special train. On their way up they will stop at Esopus to see Judge Parker.

It is reported here that ex-Senator Hill told Judge Keogh's friends the other day that the convention might look to him as the most available candidate. Judge Keogh has been away on a vacation in the White Mountains, and has just returned to New Rochelle. He says that he is not seeking the nomination and would be very well satisfied to remain on the bench. He recently requested his friends not to indorse him when he learned that another Westchester Democrat, ex-Congressman Pugsley of Peekskill, was being talked of for the nomination.

ILLINOIS CAMPAIGN OPENED.

Senator Foraker Eulogizes Roosevelt at Chicago Rally.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—The Republican Party of Chicago formally opened the political campaign to-night by a great rally at the Auditorium under the auspices of the Hamilton Club. Senator Foraker of Ohio was the principal speaker of the evening, and his address provoked great enthusiasm. His address was in part as follows:

"The day is not far distant when the story of our work in the Philippines will be accounted one of the most brilliant and most creditable chapters in all our history, both because of what it does for us and because of what we are doing for the Filipinos, who will be benefited in far greater degree than we can be.

"If there were no other questions involved in this campaign, President Roosevelt should be elected, for his strenuous insistence on the policy we have been there pursuing is based on a broad and aggressive Americanism, and a wise and enlightened statesmanship that is adding to the honor and good name of the American people.

"All know he is capable, patriotic, and absolutely without fear, except only that he may not do his whole duty. His Administration commenced under the most trying circumstances, but it has been full of honor and is replete with great achievements. He has well earned the reward of a second term, and the American people will discredit themselves if they do not give it to him."

Texas Electoral Candidate Ineligible.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 17.—The discovery has been made that several of the Democratic nominees for the eighteen Electors to which Texas is entitled in the National Electoral College are ineligible because of constitutional disqualifications. State Chairman Andrews has called a meeting of the Executive Committee, to be held at Dallas on Sept. 24, to make the necessary changes.

PARKER'S SECOND VISIT.

Candidate Expected Here Again Some Time This Week.

It was announced at Democratic headquarters yesterday that Judge Parker would make another visit to this city within a week, or before the publication of his letter of acceptance. He is desirous of conferring with the party managers as often as possible, and realizes that they cannot leave their work here to go to Esopus.

It was said yesterday that Judge Parker would probably make addresses in New Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, and even as far west as Wisconsin, besides his address in this city, which will be made some time in the early part of October in Madison Square Garden.

It was explained at headquarters yesterday why Chairman Taggart left the city on the eve of Mr. Parker's arrival. Mr. Fanning, who is Mr. Taggart's chief assistant, said that the Chairman had made his dates to meet prominent leaders in Indianapolis, French Lick Springs, and Chicago weeks ahead, and at a time when he had no idea that Judge Parker contemplated a visit to New York.

Just before Mr. Taggart went away he was called up on the telephone by Judge Parker, who spoke of his coming visit. Mr. Taggart explained the situation, and Judge Parker assured him that he understood the matter perfectly.

Timothy E. Ryan, member of the Democratic National Executive Committee from Wisconsin, was at headquarters yesterday. He said that Democrats in his State were more united than in a quarter of a century. He thought the prospects for the election of the Democratic State ticket bright.

LOSING BRYANITE VOTES.

Fassett's Speech Driving Bolters Back to the Democratic Party.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Sept. 17.—Coupled with the congratulations which J. Sloat Fassett received from the rank and file on his speech as temporary Chairman of the Republican State Convention, there was some sharp criticism from some of the big Republican leaders for what was considered the extremely injudicious reference which he made to Bryanism. Already notice has been served on the Republican leaders by some of the Bryanites who had intended to vote for Roosevelt that they have reconsidered their intention because of Mr. Fassett's speech, and will vote for Parker and Davis.

The part of Mr. Fassett's speech to which the Bryan men make objection is the following passage:

"I cannot help feeling that the Democratic candidate stands in this dilemma. Either he voted twice for Mr. Bryan against his own personal convictions, worshipping the fetish of party regularity, or twice voted for Bryan because, in his belief, Bryan and his platforms were better for the country than McKinley and his platforms. Neither reason would seem to indicate great fitness for a great office."

The Bryan men who have protested against Mr. Fassett's speech have said that if Judge Parker was to be condemned by the presiding officer of the Republican Convention because of the fact that he had voted twice for Bryan, it was foolish to expect Bryan men to vote for Roosevelt, or even to help toward his election by throwing their votes away on Watson. They said they regarded it as an insult to all Bryan men for Mr. Fassett to say that no man who preferred Mr. Bryan and his platforms to Mr. McKinley and his platforms was fit to hold a great office.

The Republican campaign managers have been making great efforts to get as much as possible of the Bryan vote in this State away from the support of Judge Parker, but Mr. Fassett's speech threatens to make their work in that direction futile.

THE PRESIDENT'S VISITORS.

George Ade, Editor Smith, and H. W. Taber Call on Him.

OYSTER BAY, Sept. 17.—Three visitors were received at Sagamore Hill to-day by President Roosevelt. They were Delavan Smith, editor of the Indianapolis News; H. W. Taber of New York, and George Ade, the author and playwright. The visits of all were of a purely personal nature. Mr. Taber, who is a friend of Mr. Roosevelt, introduced Mr. Ade to the President, whom he had never met.

In the early part of the day the President and Mrs. Roosevelt took a long horseback ride, passing in the course of the ride through the village of Oyster Bay. They were greeted cordially by many of their neighbors and townspeople.

GOLD AN ISSUE—FAIRBANKS.

Senator Appeals to West Virginians Not to Forget It.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Sept. 17.—A large audience heard Senator Fairbanks here to-day, when he spoke at the City Park, opening the Republican campaign in West Virginia. Excursions brought in many persons from the entire Western portion of the State.

Senator N. B. Scott presided. Senator Fairbanks insisted that the real issues of the campaign were the tariff and the gold standard, and appealed to the voters not to lose sight of them.

SHERMAN LIKES THE OUTLOOK.

People's Satisfaction with Things as They Are a Republican Asset.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Representative J. S. Sherman, who came to Washington to-day, said:

"If there is at any time in the campaign any criticism of Higgins, it will not be of his strength as a candidate, but it will be because some people may say that methods of which they do not approve were used in bringing about his nomination, and in my opinion that cannot be justly said.

"I believe the Republican vote of New York will be harmonized and that the full vote of the party will be cast. I am exceedingly optimistic on the general condition in New York State. I feel that President Roosevelt is as sure to carry New York State—almost, if not quite—as any State in the Union.

"Mr. Roosevelt's strength is first the strength of the Republican Party and the entire satisfaction of the people with things as they are. Secondly, the strength that comes to him by reason of his personality, which is by no means small or trivial."

EQUAL TAX FIGHT IN JERSEY.

Griggs Against Making It an Issue—Republicans Take It Up.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Sept. 17.—John W. Griggs, ex-Attorney General of the United States, declares in an interview that he does not see how the Democrats can make a State issue of equal taxation or why the Republican State Convention should be frightened into taking it up.

At the time Mr. Griggs was expressing these views the Passaic County Republican Convention, made up of Mr. Griggs's neighbors and home county friends, was adopting a resolution for "the equal taxation of all property, whether it belongs to individuals or corporations." The Republicans of Essex, Hudson, and Passaic, three of the most important counties of the State, have thus far demanded that the Republican State Convention next Tuesday take satisfactory cognizance of the subject. Major Lentz, who is recognized as the active manager of the Republican State campaign, offered the resolution adopted by the Essex County Republicans, and it is believed among the politicians that it embodies the platform which he will force on the State Convention.

JUDGE PARKER IN KINGSTON.

Acts as Honorary Pall Bearer at Funeral of an Old Friend.

Special to The New York Times.

ROSEMOUNT, ESOPUS, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Rosemount was without visitors to-day owing to the absence of the owner in Kingston to attend the funeral of Dr. Jacob Chambers, a personal and political friend of the candidate and for nearly a score of years his family physician.

Judge Parker was driven to Kingston in company with Charles S. Hamlin of Massachusetts, now much talked of for the Democratic nomination for Governor of the Bay State. He took luncheon at the Eagle Hotel, and, of course, his entry there resulted in a large crowd gathering, all eager for a look at their former fellow-townsman. The candidate acted as one of the honorary pallbearers.

While Rosemount is much interested in the Democratic State Convention to begin Tuesday at Saratoga Springs, and no doubt will be in the closest touch with all proceedings there, yet all attempts to have the candidate interfere will be met by the most diplomatic treatment.

It can be said at this time that Judge Parker has no more idea who the candidate for Governor will be than anybody else. It can be stated that he is without knowledge of any definite movement in favor of Justice William J. Gaynor; neither has he any knowledge that the Kings Justice would care for the nomination.

If, as some reports have it, Justice Gaynor has the inside track of the favorite of the State leaders, it is not known here, and it seems to be generally pretty well conceded all over the State that on such a proposition Rosemount would have what would no doubt pass for first-hand information.

Congressman Francis Burton Harrison of the Thirteenth New York District and Mrs. Harrison are visiting at William F. Sheehan's country home, Atwood.

Hundreds of letters touching upon State politics and suggesting men for the Governorship nomination have been received at Rosemount in the last two days.

CULLEN IN PARKER'S PLACE.

Brooklyn Justice Sworn In as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Sept. 17.—Judge Edgar M. Cullen of Brooklyn, who vacates the office of Supreme Court Justice in the Second District to-day to take the oath of office as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, as successor to Judge Alton B. Parker, under appointment by Gov. Odell, said that he hadn't been officially informed of his nomination for Chief Judge by the Republican Party, and added: "I do not propose to meet the situation until it arises."

"You are a Democrat, are you not?" was asked.

"Why, yes, there never has been any question of that," responded the Chief Judge, laughingly.

"Then in the event of the Democratic Party not nominating you for Chief Judge next Wednesday, what action will you take?"

"I will not meet the situation until it arises."

"You have been mentioned as a Democratic Gubernatorial possibility. Would you accept the Democratic nomination?"

"This morning I qualified as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals. I therefore am not to be considered for the nomination for Governor."

While in Albany Judge Cullen did not call on any of the Democratic leaders. He stopped at the Ten Eyck, and went from there to the office of the Secretary of State, where he took the oath of office, administered by Deputy Secretary Horace G. Tennant. Judge Cullen then hastened to the Union Station, where he took the train for New York.

Asked how he viewed the politics situation, he said he believed things were very favorable for Democracy. Judge Cullen said that he had not talked with Judge Parker on the subject of politics since his resignation from the Court of Appeals.

His retirement from the Supreme Court bench gives Gov. Odell the power to appoint his successor, who, by reason of the lateness of the resignation, will hold office until the end of the calendar year 1905.

WARREN COUNTY FOR SHEPARD.

George Foster Peabody to Head Delegation in State Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 17.—The Democrats of Warren County to-day held their convention and selected a delegation favoring the nomination of Edward M. Shepard for Governor. George Foster Peabody, who votes at Lake George, where he has a Summer home, was chosen Chairman of the delegation.

A fellow-townsman of the National Committee Chairman endeavored to stampede the convention for Mr. Peabody for Governor, but the attempt was unsuccessful.

Jerome in Good Humor, but Mum.

District Attorney Jerome, who was kept from going to Lakeville by the illness of a member of his family, appeared as usual in the Criminal Courts Building yesterday. He displayed the same cheerful spirit as has been observed in him ever since David B. Hill's visit, but declined to discuss politics. Mr. Jerome said he had not seen any of the political leaders since his talk with Mr. Hill and did not expect to see any one.

Defeated Candidate a Bankrupt.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 17.—William R. Pattangall of Machias, who was the Democratic nominee against Congressman Llewellyn Powers of the Fourth District in the election Monday, filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court to-day. Liabilities were placed at $10,454 and assets at $7,500, including $1,000 personal property, and the remainder insurance.

Perry Belmont Presides at Rally.

BAY SHORE, L. I., Sept. 17.—A well-attended Democratic mass meeting, at which Perry Belmont presided, was held in the Carleton Opera House here this evening. Two thousand persons were in the building and many were unable to gain admittance. Charles W. Dayton, former Postmaster of New York, delivered the principal address, while speeches were made by W. Coleman Hughes, State Senator Bailey of this district, and others.

Republicans Renominate Ramapo Man.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Sept. 17.—The Republicans of the First Assembly District of Dutchess County this afternoon renominated John T. Smith of Fishkill Landing for the seventh time. Assemblyman Smith was the father of the Smith Water bill, dubbed the Ramapo measure, in the last Legislature.

Want Judge Herrick Nominated.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, Sept. 17.—Justice D. Cady Herrick of the Supreme Court was this afternoon indorsed by the Democratic members of the Schenectady County bar for Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals. The recommendation adopted to-day will be presented at the State Democratic Convention in Saratoga.

New Jersey's Bank Delegates Named.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 17.—Three delegates appointed by President Roosevelt and ten by the President of the State Bar Association will represent New Jersey at the meeting of the American Bar Association, which opens in St. Louis on Sept. 28. The President's appointees are Cortlandt Parker, Sr., and E. Q. Keasbey of Newark and ex-Gov. John W. Griggs of Paterson. Those appointed by the President of the State Bar Association are ex-Supreme Court Justice Gilbert Collins, Judge Garret D. Vroom, James J. Bergen, Richard Wayne Parker, J. Kearny Rice, Charles G. Black, Norman Gray, Clarence L. Cole, James [illegible] Howell, and John R. Hardin.

cus which should be held, and we would go into such a gathering."

Senator Victor J. Dowling, probably the closest friend of Charles F. Murphy in the Tammany organization, arrived at 9 o'clock to-night, coming straight through from New York. Senator Dowling denied the report that he had stopped off at Esopus to see Judge Parker.

"I expect that Mr. Murphy will be up there to-morrow," said the Senator. "He did expect to come to-night, but was delayed. He surely will be here to-morrow, and he expects to bring his automobile with him so that he can have some riding around here.

"He will be quartered at the Grand Union, where I shall be also, and where the entire Tammany contingent will be. The special trains bearing our delegation will leave New York Monday morning and get here in the afternoon in ample time for the conferences, which will be held Monday evening for the most part."

Mr. Dowling said that the reports circulated to the effect that Tammany would oppose the nomination of Edward M. Shepard, and which were printed in two New York papers, were all wrong.

"Tammany has no candidate for Governor, or any other place on the ticket," he said. "Likewise we are not opposing Mr. Shepard. He would be entirely acceptable to us if nominated, and would make a very strong canvass. The same thing can be said of George M. Palmer of Scoharie, of Judge Gaynor of Brooklyn, and of Judge D. Cary Herrick of Albany.

"Tammany would loyally support any one of these four candidates should it be shown in the preliminary conferences that there is a general sentiment up the State for them. Should the nomination come to Greater New York, I believe either Mr. Shepard or Judge Gaynor will be named.

"Should it go up the State, I believe either Mr. Palmer or Judge Herrick will be named. The Gaynor movement gained considerable headway to-day, although I do not think it is as strong as the sentiment for Mr. Shepard."

On the trip here Senator Dowling was accompanied by Thomas F. Conway of Plattsburg, one of the anti-Hill leaders of Northern New York and a candidate for Attorney General. Both Senator Dowling and Mr. Murphy have at various times had many pleasant things to say of Mr. Conway, and Tammany would be glad of an opportunity to vote for him in this convention. Mr. Conway is at the Union with Senator Dowling.

On the same train also, but not with Senator Dowling and Mr. Conway, were David P. Canavan and Assemblyman John F. Curry of the Seventeenth New York District. They are here to contest the seats of Daniel F. McMahon's delegation from the district and will charge gross frauds at the Aug. 30 primaries.

Curry was the anti-McMahon candidate for district leader, backed by Canavan, the contractor. McMahon won out by a little more than 100 votes in a total of 2,500 cast and a free fight resulted in the district when the votes were counted that night.

Knives and pistols were used by both sides, and the charge was made there and in the courts afterward that the McMahon people had stuffed the ballot boxes with something like 250 fraudulent votes. Ex-Assemblyman James Fitzgerald is here as counsel for Curry.

THE GROUT BOOM ARRIVES.

The Grout boom got here to-night in the care of Deputy Controller James Stevenson and John W. McDonald, one of the trusted men in Mr. Grout's Finance Department. To-morrow Deputy Controller N. Taylor Phillips, another Grouter, will be here to carry the boom along.

Delegates are being importuned as fast as they arrive, and the Grout guard have made arrangements to put lithographs all over town on Monday morning. Mr. Stevenson said to-night that the situation looked exceptionally rosy for Mr. Grout.

"Shepard cannot be nominated," he said, "because McCarren is opposed to such a move, and Mr. Grout is the strongest man who could be nominated. I am confident he will be named."

Mr. Stevenson's attention was called to the fact that Tammany is as much opposed to the nomination of Grout as McCarren is opposed to the nomination of Shepard, and it was suggested to him that Tammany's opposition to Grout might have as much effect as he seemed to think the McCarren opposition would have on Mr. Shepard's candidacy. To such questioning, however, Mr. Stevenson showed fine scorn and made no answer.

Mr. Martin is being reinforced by ex-Mayor William B. Kirk of Syracuse, who has declared himself for Stanchfield and who is working up Stanchfield sentiment with all comers. Mr. Kirk has been here for three days.

He did say, however, that the Controller would not attend the convention, and also that he did not want to have any regular quarters opened at the Grand Union for him. However, Mr. Stevenson has a suite of rooms for himself and will look out for the Grout interests from there.

The Stanchfield boom has been here since Friday night in charge of John H. Martin of Elmira. Mr. Martin has opened headquarters in the Grand Union and is busily receiving people there as fast as he can get hold of arrivals.

Mr. Martin said to-night that Mr. Stanchfield would not be here until late Sunday or early Monday. A delegation of some 600 Elmira people will get here Monday to help along the Stanchfield boom, and Mr. Martin is confident that unless an agreement is made on a single candidate before the convention opens Mr. Stanchfield will have by long odds more delegates than any other candidate.

Herman Ridder arrived from New York to-night with his bottled-up opposition to Jerome as a Gubernatorial candidate should the Jerome boom develop. He had prepared to have his paper, the Staats-Zeitung, come out editorially against Jerome and to show why Germans should oppose him.

It also had been arranged to have a translation of this article distributed widely among the delegates. To-day, however, Mr. Ridder was informed on an authority he seemed to regard as unexceptionable that there no longer was anything to the Jerome talk, and so his campaign of opposition has ceased.

"Jerome is a dead one, and that's all there is to it," said Mr. Ridder with conviction, as he turned away from politics to take an automobile ride.

John B. McDonald had nothing to say on the political situation to-night except that he was looking for information himself. He circulated among the hotel crowd, in which were to be seen Michael J. Kennedy of Brooklyn, ex-Assemblyman Patrick H. Roche of New York, Judge Daniel E. Finn, who leads the First District Tammanyites; ex-Senator John Fox, President of the Democratic Club, and ex-Deputy Bridge Commissioner Gottfried Westernacher of Brooklyn.

David B. Hill, William F. Sheehan, and August Belmont will not arrive until Monday morning, and Senator McCarren is expected at the same time. George M. Palmer, a Gubernatorial candidate, left yesterday for his home in Schoharie County, but will be back to-morrow with his delegation, which he heads.

The names of Mr. Conway, Charles N. Bulger of Oswego, and Congressman Townsend Scudder of Suffolk are mentioned in connection with the nomination for Attorney General. Frank H. Mott is being boomed for Secretary of State.

HILL STILL UNDECIDED.

Finds Strong Opposition to Both Jerome and Grout.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Sept. 17.—Despite the talk of some of his followers against Edward M. Shepard's availability, ex-Senator Hill avers that Mr. Shepard's candidacy is receiving as serious and as fair consideration from him as that of any man who has been mentioned. Mr. Hill has told some of his friends that the only object he has to subserve in the making up of the State ticket is to get a ticket which will be conducive to the success of Parker and Davis.

"Any candidate upon whom the Democratic press of Greater New York could agree Mr. Hill would accept," said a close friend of Mr. Hill to-day. The trouble is that while Mr. Hill is receiving lots of advice, it is so widely different in character as to serve no purpose except to perplex.

Judge Parker realizes the difficult situation which Mr. Hill has to face. He understands, also, that Mr. Hill sincerely desires to have the Saratoga convention do that which will be most helpful to the National ticket.

There has not been a suggestion, or even an intimation, from Judge Parker to Mr. Hill about what he would like to have done. Judge Parker, of course, realizes fully that the most hurtful things he could do, so far as his own candidacy is concerned, would be to take sides in the Gubernatorial contest. There are at least six or seven men who are anxious for the nomination and whose friends would resent any dictation on the part of Judge Parker or anybody else.

It was learned here to-day on excellent authority that despite all that Daniel S. Lamont has said with respect to his own attitude toward the Gubernatorial nomination there is still a chance that he may be made the Democratic candidate for Governor. Mr. Lamont, it is learned, is displaying the greatest interest in the outcome of the coming election, and is doing everything in his power for Democratic success.

LAMONT MIGHT YIELD.

There are those high in the councils of the party who still believe that if Lamont should be convinced that his candidacy offered the best foundation for complete Democratic harmony, he would give his consent to the presentation of his name to the convention. Mr. Hill refused to-day to discuss what had taken place between him and Mr. Jerome at their meeting in New York, but while he asserts that Mr. Jerome is as much in favor as he ever was, the impression has gained ground that Mr. Hill would not counsel in favor of Mr. Jerome's nomination unless Mr. Jerome would give some assurances to the State Committee that he would make the sort of campaign that the committee thought best.

If Tammany could be induced to consent to the nomination of Controller Grout there is little doubt that he would be the nominee, but the belief here is that Tammany will place the ban on Mr. Grout's candidacy.

Hill would like to make the State campaign on the issue of "anti-Odellism." He believes that would be a winning issue. In Jerome and Grout he recognizes the two men best fitted to carry on a campaign of that kind.

He is afraid that Jerome might go too far for the sober-minded up-State people unless he would submit to direction, and that, it is said, Mr. Jerome absolutely refuses to do. Grout, Mr. Hill believes, would be quite as effective as Jerome and much safer. It is therefore regarded by Mr Hill as exceedingly unfortunate that Tammany has what appears to be an irreconcilable quarrel with Mr. Grout.

Another difficulty in the way of the nomination of Mr. Jerome besides his unwillingness to accept any sort of direction is said to be the opposition to his candidacy of that part of the German element represented by Herman Ridder. It was said here to-day on good authority that Mr. Ridder, in a recent visit which he made to Esopus, protested to Judge Parker against Mr. Jerome being made the Democratic candidate.

MAY PLACE HARRISON.

In view of the attitude that Mr. Jerome has taken on the question of Sunday opening, Mr. Ridder's reported opposition to Mr. Jerome's candidacy has come as a surprise to the State leaders.

While nothing is sure in politics, the safest forecast that can be made about the Democratic State Convention is that it will nominate Francis Burton Harrison for Lieutenant Governor if an up-State man is named for Governor. Mr. Harrison is now the Representative of the Thirteenth New York District in Congress.

Normally the district has a Republican majority of over 3,000. Mr. Harrison was elected in the Coler year. His re-election in a Presidential year would be a matter of grave doubt.

Mr. Murphy is so anxious to have him run again that he has even gone so far as to offer him a nomination in a comparatively safe Democratic district. Mr. Harrison, it is understood, would prefer the nomination for Lieutenant Governor, and the friends of Judge Parker are quite willing that he should have it.

When the Tammany delegation went to St. Louis to do whatever lay in its power to injure Judge Parker's candidacy, Mr. Harrison stood out against that dictation of Murphy. He openly and boldly declared himself to be favorable to the nomination of Judge Parker. Mr. Murphy did not hold Mr. Harrison's independence against him in the least, and the up-State Democracy was much attracted to him. It looks, therefore, very much as if all factions would be for Mr. Harrison for second place on the State ticket.

Mr. Hill said to-day that while he expected that some of the up-State leaders would call on him here to-morrow, there would be no conferences of any import until he got to Saratoga. He will start for Saratoga Monday morning.

JUDGE BULGER A CANDIDATE.

Would Like to be Nominated for Attorney General.

Special to The New York Times.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Charles N. Bulger, Municipal Court Judge of this city and First Deputy Attorney General, to-day announced his candidacy for the nomination for Attorney General on the Democratic State ticket. Although it has been known to many of Judge Bulger's political friends for several weeks that he desired the nomination, it was decided for political reasons to make no mention of his candidacy. When the County Convention was held at Pulaski two weeks ago Judge Bulger suppressed a resolution indorsing him for the office and expressed the desire that the announcement of his candidacy be withheld until the Democratic situation was clarified.

Two years ago Judge Bulger was slated for the nomination, but was induced by ex-Senator Hill to accept the nomination for Lieutenant Governor. Judge Bulger will have the unanimous support of the Oswego County delegation, and is considered favorably by other leaders in this section of the State for the nomination.

SHAW SPEAKS IN ST. LOUIS.

Secretary Looks to See McKinley's Majority Outdone by Roosevelt.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 17.—Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw to-night addressed a mass meeting of Republicans in Festival Hall, at the World's Fair. Discussing political conditions, Mr. Shaw said he had no doubt that the Republican ticket would be successful in the coming election.

"No good reason has been advanced why the Republican Party should not be retained in power," he said. "No good reason can be advanced. The people are prosperous, and that tells the story of the success of the Roosevelt Administration.

"I expect to see the Republicans win by a larger majority than four years ago."

Secretary Shaw addressed the members of the Merchants' Exchange at noon. He praised the Roosevelt Administration, mentioning the Panama Canal as certain to work wonders for American commerce. Deep water from St. Louis to the gulf was declared to be a "near probability."

"The financial sky is clear," said Mr. Shaw. "A happy medium has been reached betwen the optimism which expresses itself in plunging and the pessimism which leads to contraction."

In praising the Administration's Philippine policy, he said that 80 per cent. of the trade of the Pacific would in future belong to the United States, and particularly to the West.

Murphy to Leave for Saratoga To-day.

Charles F. Murphy will leave for Saratoga to-day to attend the Democratic Convention. Senator Victor J. Dowling left yesterday, and the rank and file of Tammany will go to-morrow. There will be six trains, two over the West Shore, leaving Weehawken at 9:40 o'clock in the morning, and three over the New York Central at 8:50. The remaining train for the Jewish delegation will not leave until 7 o'clock in the evening on account of the Jewish holiday.

Convention Awaits Candidate's Answer.

Special to The New York Times.

CAPE MAY, N. J., Sept. 17.—The Second District Democratic Congressional Convention met here this afternoon and nominated Capt. Samuel E. Perry, a former District Attorney, of Atlantic County. He informed the convention that he would not accept then, but would take the matter under advisement. The convention adjourned to await Capt. Perry's answer.

Higgins Expects No Trouble in Kings.

Frank W. Higgins, the Republican candidate for Governor, said yesterday at the Albemarle Hotel that there would be no opposition to him in Kings County, as ex-Lieut. Gov. Woodruff had visited him since the convention and assured him of his loyal support. Mr. Higgins will not make a lengthy stumping tour.

Mrs. Butler Entertains Children.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Sept. 17.—One hundred children made merry to-day at the Summer residence of Mrs. James Butler at East View, where the closing exercises and presentation of prizes to the pupils of the Summer Sewing School connected with the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Irvington took place. All sorts of outdoor amusements had been provided, which were heartily enjoyed by the children.

A Cure for Asthma

The worst cases of Asthma in the world succumb readily to the one great cure that never fails. Dr. Randolph Schiffmann's Asthma Cure almost performs miracles.

Mr. R. M. Spencer, 2,380 Vermont Avenue, Toledo, O., says: "Asthma has been growing on me for 3 years, until last Summer the attacks became so severe that many nights I spent half the time gasping for breath. Doctors seemed to give no relief whatever, and I felt there was no hope for me, when a drug clerk recommended your Asthma Cure. Its effect is truly magical and gives complete relief in from 2 to 5 minutes."

Sold by all druggists at 50c. and $1.00. Send 2c. stamp to Dr. R. Schiffmann, Box 893, St. Paul, Minn., for a free sample package.

JAPAN DRIVING IN WEDGE AT PORT ARTHUR WITH HEAVY BLOWS

Situation at the Fortress Described by a Military Expert—How the Mikado's Little Soldiers Worst Their Big Muscovite Foes in Fights with the Bayonet.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—The Times to-day publishes the following from an occasional military correspondent:

The siege of Port Arthur has now arrived at that stage when the besiegers, elated by their first triumphs, see the walls of the fortress before them. It is the moment which at Sevastopol the Allies failed to seize. The assaulting troops, flushed with the victory at the Alma, arrived on the high plateau before Sevastopol and allowed Todleben's genius the opportunity of rendering the place almost impregnable.

We committed several serious errors that the Japanese in the present campaign have carefully avoided. Landing in an unknown country the topography of which was only faintly indicated by the naval charts in their possession, the Allies commenced a task the magnitude of which they were also ignorant. Moreover, their forces were insufficient to invest, or completely surround, the fortress. The north side, which the Russians connected by a bridge to the dockyard or south shore, was left open. So the besieged were spared the inconvenience of attending to their sick, who were sent by this route away to Simpheropol. Reinforcements constantly arrived from Northern Russia.

It is almost superfluous to point out that at Port Arthur the Russians enjoy none of these advantages. Before the war the Japanese swarmed in the place. In banks, shops, as coolies, small dealers, the clever islanders found employment. They kept their eyes and ears open. They were practically free to come and go as they pleased. Among the workmen who carried the stone and materials to the heights of Keewan and Sungshu to build the forts that now hold them at bay they were well represented.

THEIR PRESENCE SUBJECT OF JOKES.

Indeed, their presence was a regular subject of jokes among the Russian officers, who, when they were going to be shaved at the barber's shop on the quay near the Saratoff Restaurant, used to say to strangers in the language that many of them talk perhaps better than their native Russ, "Allons à l'Etât Major Japonais!"

"With a perfect knowledge of the business before them—of Port Arthur, its garrison, sea and land defenses, armament, provisions, water supply, civilian population—the Japanese Headquarters Staff at Tokio drew up its plan of campaign. Accidents, which in war are as much the rule as the exception, may hinder its development, even mar its success. But hitherto, at least, the plan, as far as we can follow its working out, seems to have been fairly well fulfilled.

The attacks of the Japanese have been directed at the centre and flanks of the whole system of defense. It must be remembered that since the commencement of the war the Russians, taught by Todleben's example at Sevastopol, have thrown up a very efficient secondary line of defense. The eastern sectors, against which heavy attacks have been continuously delivered, were already so carefully arranged for mutual defense by Gen. Vernander's plan that comparatively little new work has been carried out there. On the north and west, that is, from Suei-sze-ying, (Shwishi-ying,) a village north of the marine camp or parade ground, four and a half miles from the inner harbor, to Lian-tie-shan Promontory, it is otherwise.

Here the country is more open; the important works on Angle Hill and High Hill have been connected by smaller defenses. In front again of these mines or deep pits filled with stones, placed above explosives, which explode by contact when walked over, protected again by wire entanglements, and trous de loup, have been plentifully arranged. The high millet, called by the Chinese koaliang, much resembling maize in leaf, but growing as high as the sugarcane, has been cut down in the adjoining fields. It is due to this destruction of natural cover that the Japanese infantry advances have been attended with such loss.

ATTACKS ON THE FORTS.

An-tsu-ling was occupied by the Japanese after a fierce fight on July 30. The right wing, advancing by the road from near Vostfkorabiel (Eight Ships) Bay, was directed upon Shwangtaiku. To the right, or west of that again, the advance gradually extended, seeking for a line of lesser resistance as the outworks north of the great forts of Antszshan and Etsechan came in view. In the meantime the centre moved toward Suei-sze-ying and Etse-shan to give a hand to the right, while the left, coming up from Dalny, was confronted by the outlying forts of Taku-shan and Siao-hou-shan, almost due north of Takhe Bay. Against these was directed the first general attack, which lasted for four days.

The right then moved to Chiao-kai-weitze and sent outposts to a firwood near Ko-tai-tung and Tatao. Trenches were dug for the infantry like the rifle pits before Sevastopol. On Aug. 4 the Japanese, with the object of forcing the enemy to reveal his carefully concealed positions, opened fire with artillery as far as possible all along the line. So that the first stage of the investment, which consists in denying all lines of egress to the besieged, in bringing up one's own heavy artillery and ammunition, and in a preliminary bombardment to force the enemy in response to show the position of his guns, was quite regularly undertaken by the Japanese.

In this first operation the navy under Togo lent the army supreme assistance. It closed the harbor mouth, co-operating by shelling the land defenses from Pigeon Bay on the west to Takhe Bay on the east. Best of all, with its command of the sea, it covered the transports that brought everything necessary for siege work to Dalny by water. The big ships awaited the sturtle of the enemy, like those of Camperdown before Brest. The destroyers and torpedo craft ran in nightly, frightening and confusing the garrison, both naval and military, destroying their rest, adding by plentiful sowings of mines to the already great natural difficulties of exit.

On Aug. 6 the Russians mounted heavy guns in the neighborhood of Yutashan. This place seems to correspond with Yu-tsia-tun, or Yang-chia-cheng, on the extreme west of the field of operations, where, we heard from Russian sources, that new forts were erected. From these places they shelled the Japanese land advance until one at least of their forts was silenced from the sea. The islanders' artillery from Shin-tai-tung, a place shown neither on French, German, nor English maps, possibly Lukiatun, replied. The duel continued until Aug. 8. Simultaneously in a desperate battle of two days' duration the Japanese from Dalny captured Ta-ku-shan and Siao-hou-shan, north of Takhe Bay. It was in this fight that the Japanese were reported in St. Petersburg to have lost 30,000 men!

HAD DRIVEN IN A WEDGE.

On the 9th the Russians endeavored to retake these positions. They had need to, for in holding them the Japanese had driven a wedge between the first land sector, Drakonaya Gora, or Dragon Hill, and the second, on the summits of the Keekwan Hills. A desperate night assault resulted in no betterment for the besieged, whose artillery in the main line of the perimeter, mistaking their own retreating infantry for Japanese troops, poured a heavy fire on the "unfortunate foot soldiers." On Aug. 10 the Japanese reserves arrived, greatly increasing their strength.

On the night of the 13th the Japanese right made an attack in the direction of Yu-ta-shan, (Yang-chia-cheng,) reaching Ko-kai-tung undiscovered. A desperate encounter followed, with hand-to-hand combats, in which the bayonet was freely used. The Japanese infantry are trained to stoop and deliver thrusts upward, getting underneath a tall man's guard. After several days' battle, in which the Japanese advancing over the open country toward the Liau-tie-shan peninsula suffered greatly, they succeeded in occupying Yu-ta-shan, (Yang-chia-cheng.) Probably they were helped much by their ships.

This brings us to about Aug. 17. So that, to resume, it appears that the Japanese, being in possession of the Ta-ku-shan crests to the east, with the villages of Siao-hon-shan and Ta-ku-shan below toward Dragon Hill, pushed forward in three other directions. First, from near Suei-sze-ying (Wolf Mountain) toward the gap where pass the railroad and the little Lun-ho, that falls into the estuary before spoken of. Secondly, from Louisa Bay toward Angle Hill, and the open Ko-kai-tung plain. And, thirdly, from Pigeon Bay toward High Hill, and the villages Yang-chia-cheng and Ya-hu-chui. In this direction their progress must needs be very slow, for they come under a cross fire from the forts above Ya-hu-chui and those on the Liau-tie-shan heights.

As any one who was in South Africa will agree, the difficulty of being able to see your enemy is one of the chief obstacles to success. Conversely, a good view of him is a signal advantage. To the furious attacks and battles described by participators or spectators are given an importance that they, perhaps, scarcely deserve. The losses attributed to the Japanese are fanciful.

THE PRESENT SITUATION.

The state of affairs seems to be that the whole preparatory artillery duel is over; that the Russians have been driven from their outer lines of defense upon the permanent works. This latter line even appears to have been pierced by the taking of Fort Itchan, or Etse-chan. A wedge has been driven at or near Tong-chai-tze, due north of the inner harbor, between the eastern and western groups, or sectors, of defense.

The Russians declare that the fortress can hold out for six weeks. This will depend, inter alia, on the amount of heavy gun ammunition in their possession. They assert that even if both towns fall they can pass their troops over to the Tiger Tail and Liau-tie-shan forts and continue their resistance there. To me it seems that such a position would entail great difficulties of supply and that the gorges or backs of the works thereon would soon be destroyed by the fire from the Japanese guns on land. There would be an ominous similarity to the situation at Sevastopol, when the raft bridge from the Kreustalnaya to the north shore gave passage to the war-worn troops, forced to evacuate the town by the presence of the French in the Malakhor Kourgan.

The latest news from Port Arthur is to the effect that on Aug. 26 the Russians attacked furiously at Palichwang. After several days' fighting, however, the Japanese remained in possession of their dearly acquired positions. The wedge has been pushed through the bark of the tree; but to drive it home more heavy blows will be needed.

CHILE'S NATIONAL FETE.

Monument to Montt and Varas Unveiled at Santiago.

SANTIAGO, Chile, Sept. 17.—A monument in honor of Montt, ex-President of Chile, and ex-Premier Varas, his colleague for a number of years, was unveiled here yesterday with great ceremony in the presence of the Diplomatic Corps and the civil and military authorities.

The event marked the beginning of a series of National festivities in celebration of the tranquility and progress of the country.

Manuel Montt and Anthony Varas in 1850-56 were the founders and leaders of the Extreme Conservative Party in Chile, now known as the Montt-Varastas, and were bitterly opposed by the Liberals, resulting in two revolutions, in both of which the Liberals were beaten. Montt died Sept. 20, 1880, and Varas in 1886.

COMBES AGAINST REFERENDUM.

Unnecessary to Submit Religious Issue to the Nation, He Thinks.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—The movement for the separation of Church and State has brought out a proposition from a group of Deputies to submit the question to a referendum vote of the country. The Constitution contemplates a referendum, but it is only adopted in the case of questions of the highest importance. The proposers of the plan assert that the separation of Church and State is so vitally important that it should be submitted to the country.

The proposition does not receive encouragement from Premier Combes, who says the municipal elections sufficiently show that the country approves his policy.

FRENCH ARTISTS AT ODDS.

Threatened Split in Fine Arts Society Over Autumn Salon.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—A split is threatened in the important Fine Arts Society, owing to a decision of the Directors refusing permission to artists to exhibit at the Autumn Salon. The latter had a notable success last year.

A number of artists have united in a protest. They insist on their right to exhibit at the Autumn Salon, and threaten to bring about a rupture of the society.

Wireless Telegraphy Congress Deferred.

BERLIN, Sept. 17.—The international wireless telegraphy conference, summoned at the initiative of Germany, which was to have met Oct. 4, has been postponed at the request of France and Great Britain, which countries desire more time to study the questions involved.

X-Ray Congress to Meet in Berlin.

BERLIN, Sept. 17.—A congress to discuss the Röntgen methods will meet in Berlin April 30, 1905. Prof. Röntgen will be the guest of honor of the congress, which marks the tenth anniversary of the publication of his discovery.

TAGGART STIRS UP INDIANA.

Gives a Demonstration of Harmony as Against Republican Discord.

Special to The New York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 17.—After a stay of two days in his home city of Indianapolis, National Chairman Thomas Taggart left for French Lick Springs en route to Chicago this evening. For three hours today Chairman Taggart was in conference with the Marion County (Indianapolis) Democratic Committee at the Grand Hotel in his private room. There were also present the county candidates and the candidate for Congress in this district, Levi P. Harlan.

Reports were received from every ward and precinct in this important district, and from what occurred it is regarded as pretty certain that the Democracy of Taggart's home county will give a splendid account of itself in November. To a considerable extent success in the State depends upon Indianapolis and Evansville being carried, and the two counties embracing these cities are being gone after with a determination to win.

The Evansville County Convention took place to-day, and from word received before Taggart left here it is known that a strong ticket was nominated. It is said that Vanderburg County, which embraces Evansville, was never so well organized by the Democrats in its history.

The good news Taggart received while here made him feel well satisfied with the conditions. The National Chairman worked incessantly while here, and the city was crowded with representative men from all districts during the past two days.

He was at State headquarters each morning at 7 o'clock, and never left up until midnight each night. State Chairman O'Brien, John W. Kern, the nominee for Governor; Benjamin F. Shively of South Bend, Major Menzies of Mount Vernon, Samuel M. Ralston of Lebanon and E. J. Fogarty of South Bend, nominee for Secretary of State, were among those who conferred with Taggart before he left.

The Republican Headquarters officials in Indianapolis are badly scared over Taggart's visit, and it is said to-night that owing to the Republican factionism in this State, National Chairman Cortelyou will pay a visit to Indiana State Headquarters this week. He is expected Wednesday or Thursday next.

National Committeeman New and the Republican State Committee are more at odds than ever over the Senatorship squabble and the failure of Fairbanks to furnish the promised funds. That Taggart should have such a representative reception from all kinds of Democrats in the State at this time, and with this condition prevailing among the Republicans has caused the Republican leaders much uneasiness.

Taggart will rest to-morrow at French Lick, and proceed to Chicago early Monday morning. From that city he will go direct to New York, and expects to arrive there Tuesday night or Wednesday morning, to resume his labors at headquarters. The Democratic campaign is now in full swing in Indiana, and a redhot fight will be made for the State.

DROP SUNDAY-CLOSING FIGHT.

Baptist Ministers in Pittsburg Give Their Reasons.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Sept. 17.—The Baptist Ministerial Association of Allegheny County has withdrawn support from the movement to close drug stores and other places where necessities are sold on Sundays. The Rev. G. Warren Partridge of the Fourth Avenue Baptist Church to-day said:

"I believe in moral persuasion in promoting movements of this kind and not in force. It is not the way for Christian people to make Christians. There are some kinds of business houses that must remain open on Sunday, for they are a necessity. The drug stores are in this class."

The Rev. Dr. W. A. Stanton of the Shady Avenue Baptist Church said:

"The Baptists have always stood for religious liberty. They don't believe that a man should be forced to do anything on the Sabbath or any other day that would tend to destroy his religious liberty. If men insist on doing business on Sunday, the Baptists as a Church have nothing to do with that. I am not in favor of closing with that. I am not in favor of closing drug stores. They are a necessity. Conditions are different to-day from what they were 100 years ago."

VIRGIN'S STATUE IN BACK YARD.

Bayonne Citizens Stirred Up Over Italian Barber's Sacrilege.

Special to The New York Times.

BAYONNE, N. J., Sept. 17.—Catholics of this city have been much stirred up for the last week by the nightly exhibition of an illuminated statue of the Virgin Mary in the yard in the rear of Frank De Crescenzi's barber's shop. The statue is a costly affair, and had stood on the altar of the Italian Church of Our Lady of the Assumption, of which the Rev. Father Mercolino is the rector. In the back yard it stands on an improvised altar, with American and Italian flags surmounting it, and surrounded with a myriad of red, white, and blue lights. Great crowds assemble every night to look at it and denounce De Crescenzi for sacrilege.

The barber had sent the altar to the church. The priest presumed it was a gift till De Crescenzi sent in a bill for $500. The priest thought the price exorbitant, and offered half the amount, but De Crescenzi refused it, and it ended in the barber taking the statue away.

BIG CHICAGO TRACTION DEAL.

J. A. Spoor Decided Upon for President of City Railway.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—John A. Spoor, President of the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company and the Chicago Junction Railway, has been decided upon for President of the Chicago City Railway Company should the Union Traction reorganization syndicate succeed in getting a majority of the South Side Company stock. Mr. Spoor will succeed President D. G. Hamilton on the City Railway Directorate. P. A. Valentine of Armour & Co. will enter the Board of Directors of the Chicago City Railway Company.

The big individual holdings which are pledged in the new move for control include those of Marshall Field, John J. Mitchell, the Leiter estate, the Hoxie estate, and the Armours.

John J. Mitchell, it is understood, will go to New York on Tuesday to confer with the Morgan, Speyer, and Hollins interests, and then the whole matter will be in his hands to carry through.

FEARED LIFE FOR HUSBAND.

Woman Who Says She Married Prominent Man Asks Police Protection.

A woman about twenty-eight years old, dressed in a white silk waist and a blue skirt and who wore many rings and other jewelry, went to the West Thirtieth Street Station last night and asked for police protection. She called Sergt. Wilson from behind the desk and told him that she was afraid of her husband, who had threatened to kill her.

The woman said that her husband was a prominent man and that he had beaten her. She said that she desired to go to Baltimore, the home of her mother, but was afraid to go out on the streets, as her husband might kill her. As she was talking to the Sergeant the woman called to another woman who came from across the street and corroborated the story.

Sergt. Wilson sent Detective McGuire with the women to the Liberty Street Ferry. The woman asked that the police of this city notify the police of Baltimore, as she desired protection when she reached that city. She refused to tell her name.

FURIOUS ANTI-JEWISH OUTBREAK IN POLAND

Woman Killed and Fifty Persons Injured at Sosnowiec.

POLICE REFUSE TO STOP RIOT

Sergeant Tells Victims to Go to the Courts for Redress—The Synagogue Wrecked.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 17.—I have obtained particulars of the anti-Jewish outbreak at Sosnowiec, (Russian Poland, on the Austrian frontier.)

Last Sunday the Jews at Sosnowiec, according to an old custom there, gathered on the shore of the River Przemisa to perform religious exercises. As in previous years, their prayers were disturbed by a number of roughs and boys, who threw stones at them. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the attacks on the Jews grew more serious, a mob of Roman Catholics throwing stones.

One of the Jews retaliated, and threw a stone which struck a little girl. She was hurt very slightly.

After the stone was thrown, however, the Jews fled. The mob followed, crying "The Jews have murdered a Christian girl." The alarm spread and the mob attacked Jewish houses. Knives were drawn, and a large number of people were injured. Many women were assaulted.

Mrs. Golenza, the mother of six children, who lived in a place called Bensin, was one of the women attacked, and she afterward died as the result of a stab in the abdomen.

At Old Sosnowiec, a town of 25,000 inhabitants, the mob stoned the synagogue and then wrecked it. The caretaker, a man named Scherrer, was terribly injured. The windows of every Jewish house were broken. Police Sergt. Kronenberg, when the Jews appealed to him, replied, "You must go to the courts for redress."

Several men were finally arrested, but were soon released. The chief culprits were not even arrested. About fifty persons in all were injured.

Further trouble is feared to-morrow.

FRANCE'S DEADLY ARTILLERY.

Development of Scientific Warfare Demonstrated at Dijon Manœuvres.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—The grand manœuvres, just concluded at Dijon, have shown the development of scientific warfare since the Franco-German war.

The guns used throw shells which burst into 240 deadly fragments, whereas the shells used in the war of 1870-71 only burst into thirty fragments. The present French shrapnel shells are calculated to scatter 400 particles, whereas, the former shrapnel shells only scattered thirty-seven particles.

Gen. Brugère, the Commander in Chief, emphasized the necessity of the army concealing itself and exposing the enemy during action. Therefore powerful searchlights were successfully used to disclose the movements of the "enemy." Old-fashioned powder was used to create a curtain concealing the army's advance.

Capt. T. Bentley Mott, the American Military Attaché, and other foreign Attachés speak in the highest terms of the efficiency of the French troops.

TRIBUTE TO ROOSEVELT.

Baron d'Estournelles de Constant Says He Saved The Hague Court.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, the Deputy who was the most prominent figure in the peace movement which led to the British-French cordial understanding, writes to The Associated Press that he deeply regrets his inability to attend the Peace Congress at Boston, owing to the approaching French elections, in which he is a candidate for election to the Senate. The Baron adds:

"I had hoped at Boston to recognize publicly the grand and decisive services rendered to the cause of international arbitration by the United States, and particularly by President Roosevelt. Better than any one I know that the Court at The Hague stood deserted, abandoned, and ridiculed until the day when he had the courage, generosity, and foresight to save it. That act alone has entitled him to the thanks of all Europe for his pacific and liberal spirit."

NO SECOND TERM FOR LOUBET.

French President Anxious to Return to Private Life.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—President Loubet, in the course of a speech to the provincial Mayors to-day, said he looked forward with satisfaction to the serenity of private life after the close of his present term at the end of next year.

His statement is taken as a definite announcement of the President's intention not to seek a second term.

CELTIC HAS 3,350 PASSENGERS.

Said to be Largest Number Ever Brought on One Vessel.

QUEENSTOWN, Sept. 17.—The White Star Line steamer Celtic, which sailed to-day from Queenstown for New York, carried 3,350 passengers, believed to be the largest number ever taken in one vessel from a British port.

Nine hundred and fifty of them embarked here and about one hundred steerage passengers were left behind on account of lack of accommodation.

30 HURT IN CLASS RUSH.

Purdue Sophomores Capture and Bind 400 Freshmen.

LAFAYETTTE, Ind., Sept. 17.—After one of the roughest annual class rushes ever held at Purdue University, the sophomores late last night danced about a group of 400 freshmen, bound hand and foot, and fastened to a long chain. The clash resulted in injuries to thirty students. Some of the injuries may be serious.

Fred Haas of West Lafayette, a sophomore, has a broken collarbone, two other sophomores named Trumbull and McCoy are suffering, the former from a wrenched spine and the latter from internal injuries, and Earl Chandler, freshman, is badly injured about the head and chest.

The Faculty will make an effort to eliminate the annual class rush from college life.

LOST JEWELS FROM HIS AUTO.

A. R. Shattuck Recovered Them in Springfield, Mass., and Paid $300.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 17.—While driving through Springfield this morning on an automobile trip from New York to Boston, A. R. Shattuck of New York, ex-President of the Automobile Club of America, lost a small bag with several thousand dollars' worth of jewels. The bag belonged to Mrs. Shattuck, and contained, among other things, her wedding ring.

The bag was found by two young sons of George P. Houghton, and Mr. Shattuck gave the family $300 when it was returned to him.

NEW YORK BRINGS SINGERS.

Clement A. Griscom and Augustus Van Wyck Also on Board.

Mme. Kirkby-Lunn, who sang at the Metropolitan Opera House two years ago in Italian and German opera, returned on the steamship New York last night to sing the part of Kundry in Henry W. Savage's English production of "Parsifal."

Ada Rehan was another passenger. She has been engaged by the Shuberts, but she said that her plans have not been completed.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the actress, who was also aboard, brought back her dog Pinky Panky Poo and enough trunks to keep the customs inspectors busy all night. She declined to say what plans she had for the coming season.

Clement A. Griscom, the former President of the International Mercantile Marine, also returned on the New York. He has been abroad for his health, and appeared to have recovered it fully. To friends Mr. Griscom said that the International Mercantile Marine had not bought the shipyards of Harlan & Wolf at Belfast, and that the company was just as far at sea over the rate of war as it ever was. He also said that he believed that Roosevelt's election was assured. Mr. Griscom left at once for Philadelphia.

One of Mr. Griscom's fellow-passengers was Judge Augustus Van Wyck, who is reported to have visited Richard Croker at Wantage. Mr. Van Wyck declined to be interviewed. He said that everything looked "all right for Parker." He also said:

"I am not posted well enough to say who would be the best candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket. I certainly would not."

The New York also brought Dr. Charles Wardell Stiles, who attended the International Congress of Zoological Nomenclature at Berne; the Marquis of Allesbury and Lady Marjory Bruce, who will visit the St. Louis Exposition; Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Coler of Brooklyn, Mrs. Robert Osborn, and Henri Mouquin.

The Marquis of Allesbury said:

"One of the royal family said to me, only a few days before I sailed, that if he could consult his own pleasure he would spend six months out of every year in the United States. I told him that, for my part, I would spend the entire twelve months there if I could."

PLUCKY COUPLE HELPED.

Police Aid Florida Parents Seeking Child in California.

Working their way from Florida to California by way of this city, in search of a six-year-old child who, they say, was kidnapped by a neighbor, William Bertram and his wife were taken into the Tenderloin Police Station last night. Their story immediately gained them an audience with Capt. Cottrell and hearty assistance from him and the policemen.

Bertram is stone deaf as a result of a wreck of the ship of which he was the Captain and part owner, off the Bermudas three years ago. His wife is about forty years old and a woman of evident refinement. Policeman Molloy found them in front of the Hotel Imperial just when the theatre people were going to supper. Their scanty attire and general appearance attracted his attention.

Mrs. Bertram said that her first husband's name was Cummings. He died five years ago, leaving her with a baby not then a year old and three other children. She later married Bertram, who was then prosperous, but who lost his all in the wreck and was made deaf and contracted consumption.

Mrs. Bertram told Capt. Cottrell that when things began to look dark for the family she sent the three older children to her sister, in Michigan. The baby attracted the attention of a neighboring couple. Fifteen months ago, according to Mrs. Bertram, her baby, who was then five, disappeared. The neighbors disappeared at the same time. The Bertrams heard at their home, in St. Petersburg, near Tampa, that the child had been found in Lakeport, Cal.

Mrs. Bertram decided that, even if she had to walk, she would get to Lakeport. So the couple started. She says that they worked their way from Tampa to Jacksonville, thence to Charleston, and by the steamer Iroquois to this city. They think they will earn enough here to ride to California. The police made up a purse and sent them to a lodging house in West Thirty-first Street.

BEFRIENDS BOY HE RAN OVER.

Autoist Accidentally Injuring Lad, Sends Money to Hospital.

Eight-year-old John Stachenberg, living at 303 West One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, was run over last night at the corner of One Hundred and Eighteenth Street and Eighth Avenue by an automobile in charge of F. Crawford of 201 West One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street. The boy was riding on the end of a truck that turned off at the corner. The automobile was immediately behind the truck and crowded close to it by a carriage and another truck.

As the boy jumped off the truck, which was going at a good rate, he missed his footing and fell. Before Crawford could stop his machine the front wheels passed over the boy, breaking his right leg. Crawford, assisted by Policeman Ennis of the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station, dragged the boy from under the automobile and hurried him to the J. Hood Wright Hospital in the machine. They then went to the station house, where Mr. Crawford was bailed by friends. He sent money to the hospital for the care of the boy.

WOMAN ACCUSES COUNCILMAN.

Hoboken Saloon Keeper Says She Paid $50 to Fix License.

Mrs. Julia Meyer and Robert Henn were arrested and arraigned before Recorder Stanton in Hoboken yesterday on a charge of selling liquor without a license. Mrs. Meyer has a saloon at 88 Garden Street, and Henn is in her employ.

When brought before the Recorder, Mrs. Meyer accused Councilman Herman G. Voll of the Second Ward of having received from her $50, with the understanding that he would see about having the license of the former owner of the saloon transferred to her. Voll emphatically denied that he had received a cent from the woman.

Voll is collector for a Newark brewery which foreclosed a mortgage on the saloon when it was being conducted by the former owner.

CAR KILLS MAN ON PARK ROW.

Thought to be Timothy Sullivan of Brooklyn—Motorman Arrested.

A man supposed to be Timothy Sullivan, about thirty-five years old and living at 196 Water Street, Brooklyn, died in the Hudson Street Hospital shortly after midnight this morning, from injuries received fifteen minutes earlier, when he was knocked down by a southbound Third Avenue car at Park Row and Baxter Street. His skull was fractured and he received internal injuries.

According to the motorman of the car, George Fink of 303 East Ninety-third Street, the man started to cross the street at that point, and Fink slowed down the car. When the man neared the track he saw the car and stood still. Fink, thinking the man would wait for the car to pass, released the brake, and the car shot ahead. Just as it did so the man stepped on the track. Before Fink could again control the car it struck Sullivan.

He was picked up unconscious, and Policeman Herlihy of the Elizabeth Street Station had him removed to the Hudson Street Hospital, where he died in a few minutes. Fink was arrested and locked up in the Elizabeth Street Station on a charge of homicide.

IS BRYAN COMING EAST?

Announcement That He Will Stump Nebraska in October.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 17.—A special from Lincoln says that William J. Bryan will on Oct. 3 open the Democratic campaign in Nebraska with a speech at Gretna, a little town near here, and then begin a speech-making tour of the State. It is planned to make the meeting at Gretna the occasion of an impressive demonstration of Democratic enthusiasm. Congressman Hitchcock and other prominent Democrats will speak after Mr. Bryan delivers his address.

It has been given out and has been generally understood that Mr. Bryan was to deliver a number of speeches for Parker and Davis in certain States east of Chicago in the fore part of October, and the announcement that he will make a tour of Nebraska then has given rise to a good deal of curiosity among politicians here as to whether he really intends to make any speeches outside of his own State.

In some quarters the announcement that he is to begin a tour of Nebraska the first week in October is taken to mean that he will not go outside this State for the National ticket.

PLUGS TO FOIL LOVEMAKING.

Science Brutally Interferes with Courtship by Telephone.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company has moved its Central Exchange to a new and permanent telephone building. The new plant is provided with a device to stop flirtations.

Stationed in the center of the immense operating room the chief operator can connect with any of the boards and "butt in" on all flirtations with the telephone girl.

Whenever the assistant manager thinks one of the girls is exchanging sweet nothings with a subscriber he places his receiver to his ear, puts a plug in, and listens. Having convinced himself as to the transgression, he walks over to the offending girl and advises her the company can do without her services for a week or so. It is always suspension for the first violation of rules and dismissal afterward.

WOMAN LEAPS FROM BOAT.

Suicide on South Ferry Line—Her Identity Unknown.

A woman dressed in mourning jumped from the rear platform of the ferryboat Brooklyn of the South Ferry Company just as the boat was pulling out from her pier, at Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, about 10 o'clock last evening. The matter was reported to the police of the Amity Street Police Station at midnight by Edgbest Anderson, an employe of the company.

Anderson told the police that the woman had been seen to enter the women's cabin for a second as they were pulling out, but had reappeared again soon, climbed over the railing, and jumped into the river. He said that the boat was stopped, but that the woman was not seen again.

Two men, who were standing on the platform near the spot where the woman jumped, said she appeared to be about thirty-five years old.

Struck Wife with Candlestick.

Morris Goldsaub of 268 West Fortieth Street met his nephew, Abraham Willinsky, in the hallway upon going out last evening, and who, according to the latter, remarked: "I've just had a fight with Simmie [his wife], and I hit her with a canadlestick. I guess she's done for." Willinsky ran up to the Goldsaub flat and found what his uncle had said to be true. Mrs. Goldsaub was lying on the floor unconscious, the candlestick beside her. Her skull had been fractured.

PASTOR SAYS HE WAS NAGGED.

Mr. Janzow Feels Justified in Suing Eighteen Members of His Church.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 17.—Depositions in the suit for $45,000 damages brought by the Rev. Charles L. Jangow of the Bethlehem Evangelical Lutheran Church against eighteen members of his congregation will be taken Sept. 21. A church meeting has been called by the defendants for Monday evening. Mr. Smith, Mr. Janzow's attorney, said to-day:

"The troublesome element in the church, about 2 per cent. of its membership, disposed two pastors in years gone by, and it now seeks on trial charges to oust Mr. Janzow. He has been hampered at every turn by these members, who have placed at their head a man of wealth eighty-seven years old, merely to give the movement tone. I believe the atmosphere will be cleared by this bolt in their camp."

Mr. Janzow discusses his suit freely. He said to-day:

"'Christians do not go to court,' my traducers declared when it became known that I might seek redress in the courts, and I will confess that the position in which I was placed as pastor had a great deal to do with my delay in forcing the issue. But conditions, after six years of pertinacious nagging, have become such that I felt justified in forcing the men I have sued into a corner."

AUDITOR'S ALLEGED STEALINGS

Chicago Bank Official Said to Have Embezzled Over $63,000.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—It was charged to-day that Herman E. Haass, the ex-Auditor of the Corn Exchange Bank, who was arrested in Colon, Panama, a few days ago, embezzled over $63,000 from the bank. It is said his peculations in all will exceed $150,000.

A statement filed to-day by officers of the Corn Exchange Bank shows the shortage there to be $63,347.65. This declaration is not based on an entirely complete examination of the books. Haass himself told Detective Marsh, according to that officer, while the detective had him temporarily under arrest in Mexico, that he "got away" with over $100,000.

For four years previous to the consolidation of the American National Bank with the Corn Exchange National Bank Haass was chief clerk in the former institution. Reports of the man's alleged doings while he was in the American National got abroad to-day.

Papers of extradition were secured for the fugitive to-day by Attorney Louis Dent of the City Trust and Safety Deposit Company of Philadelphia, which bonded Haass in his position with the bank. The papers were immediately forwarded to Washington and will go from there to New York. Representatives of the company expect to arrive in Panama by Sept. 27. "I have no doubt that we will manage to extradite the prisoner," said Attorney Dent.

Italians Hold Roosevelt Rally.

The New York Branch of the Latin American Republican National League held its first meeting since its foundation in February last, at the headquarters of the league, 178 Park Row, last night. John Lenzi, an Italian banker, called upon the Italian Americans to stand to a man for the present Administration and the principles of the Republican Party. President Roosevelt sent a telegram, through Secretary Loeb, expressing his regret at not being able to attend.

MORE FLORIDA FEUD PARTISANS SURRENDER

Twelve Ride Into Baxter and Give Themselves Up.

MEET VICTIM'S FUNERAL

Score of Prisoners Implicated in the Killing of a Deputy Sheriff Taken to Jacksonville by Troops.

BAXTER, Fla., Sept. 17.—Twelve of the men alleged to have been implicated in the killing of Deputy Sheriff Thrift came into town to-day and surrendered to Sheriff Hernden. They were quickly started for Jacksonville on a special train under guard of the military.

Those surrendering, in addition to the eight men arrested yesterday, are Charles Altman and Hillary Altman, who are charged with the murder of Jackson Duncan and the negro Jim Riley; Jesse Altman, who shot W. N. Duncan; Andrew Harvey and Ivey Harvey, charged with being members of the mob; Aaron Dawling, William Dawling, Alonzo Dawling, William Dawling, J., V. H. Johns, George Johns, and Cauley Johns.

Jesse Altman had been hiding since yesterday and came in by himself. Hilary Altman has a bad wound in the right shoulder. None of the others was wounded.

Just as the party of men were coming in to give themselves up the cortège bearing the body of Deputy Sheriff Thrift, started to leave the building where it had remained since the killing.

As the horsemen reached the railroad track, coming from the south, the funeral party reached the opposite side of the track. The murdered man's body and the men charged with his murder met directly on the crossing. Each party continued on its way without paying any attention to the other. The body of the dead Deputy was taken to the little cemetery near Moniac, and there buried.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 17.—Wilson Battery, the artillery company of this city, has arrived with twenty men supposed to have been connected with the shooting of the Duncans at Baxter. The prisoners will be held for safekeeping.

POLICE IN BASEBALL ROW.

Bluecoat Teams Had Three Umpires—Short Game, Wrangle at End.

With "a good dinner" as the stake, baseball teams representing the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth and West One Hundred and Fifty-second Street Police Stations went to the Polo Grounds yesterday to play. The game broke up in a row after the seventh inning, when the score stood 14 to 12 in favor of the West One Hundred and Fifty-second Street team.

They said that it was too late to continue, as several members of the team had to report for duty at 4 o'clock. The West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street team refused to pay for the dinner, because the full nine innings had not been played.

After a sharp wrangle lasting long enough to have finished the game the teams left the field.

The game started in a wrangle over the umpire. A man was finally chosen, but he only lasted one inning and left the field fearing for his life. The second man lasted three innings, when he, too, fled for life and limb. A third man was found, and when he wanted to quit after the fourth inning he was threatened. He found it convenient to remain until the game broke up.

ASKS RECEIVER FOR RAILROAD.

Plaintiff Asserts Hudson Valley Coupons Were Not Paid.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Sept. 17.—An action in which Daniel J. Halpin of Waterford, N. Y., seeks to have a mortgage against the property of the Hudson Valley Railroad Company foreclosed and a receiver appointed came before Supreme Court Justice H. T. Kellogg at his chambers in this city this forenoon. The Hudson Valley Railroad is a trolley line running from Warrensburg through Caldwell on Lake George, Glens Falls, and Saratoga to Albany, a distance of about eighty miles.

The plaintiff affirms that he is the owner and holder of fifty-five bonds of the railroad company, secured by the trust company, upon which there are past-due interest coupons to the amount of $3,500.

The motion was opposed on the grounds that the coupons are not owned by plaintiff and that they were paid when they became due, but through an oversight were not cut off the bonds by the Knickerbocker Trust Company of New York before their delivery to Halpin.

Judge Kellogg postponed the motion until Oct. 1.

PIRATES AT COLLEGE POINT.

Visit Knickerbocker Yacht Club's Fleet and Help Themselves.

When the owners of several yachts of the Knickerbocker Yacht Club went aboard their vessels at College Point yesterday afternoon to prepare to take part in the Ladies' Day regatta they found that thieves had recently paid a visit to the boats.

The plunder included oilskins, clothing, tools, and other articles. Among the vessels boarded were the Edna, Nan, Marion, and Dolphin. A number of smaller boats had also been visited and various articles stolen. There is no clue to the identity of the thieves.

THINNEST OF TIN PLATES.

Takes 182 to Make Inch in Thickness—New Method's Success at Pittsburg.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Sept. 17.—The American Tin Plate Company has at last succeeded in rolling and tinning forty-gauge plates. It takes 182 of these plates to make an inch in thickness.

The method of rolling and tinning recently installed at Monessen was used. This method has revolutionized tin plate making.

SAT BESIDE DEAD MOTHER.

Thirteen-Year-Old Daughter Thought Her in Stupor.

Not knowing that her mother was dead, but thinking that she was in a stupor, Ellen Sullivan, thirteen years old, of 508 West Fifty-ninth Street, sat all yesterday afternoon in the same room in which the older woman was lying. It was not discovered that the woman was dead until her husband, Peter Smith, returned home at night. An ambulance surgeon was then called, and he said that the woman had been dead for about four hours, and that death was probably due to alcoholism.

Ellen Sullivan told the surgeon "mamma had been lying like that all afternoon. She had been there on the floor, and I have been sitting here watching her. I wish that she would wake up."

Smith said that his wife had been drinking hard of late, but the Coroners' office is investigating.

Archbishop Davidson at Bar Harbor.

Special to The New York Times.

BAR HARBOR, Me., Sept. 17.—Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner Sherman gave a dinner to-night to Archbishop and Mrs. Randall Thomas Davidson, the guests being Bishop and Mrs. William Lawrence, Dr. and Mrs. H. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Schieffelin, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Bowdoin, Mrs. John Davis, Mrs. C. D. R. Moore, Mrs. C. K. Wright, Mr. and Mrs. W. Butler Duncan, J. Pierpont Morgan, and Gen. Edward D. Morrell.

KEPT HENS IN THE AIR.

Police Find East Sider So Utilizing Fire Escape.

The police in their crusade against blocked fire escapes have found that the uses to which the escapes are put are many and varied. Numerous tenants have been summoned to court because they insisted upon blocking their fire-escapes with bedding, bottles, boxes, and kitchen utensils, but Mrs. Mary Ost of 135 Cannon Street thinks her fire-escape makes an excellent poultry yard.

Several days ago Policeman Cohen of the Union Market Station, while walking through Cannon Street, heard the cackling of an aerial hen. The sound seemed to come from one of the upper floors in the tall tenement house at No. 135, and when he looked up the policeman saw on the fire-escape of the rooms occupied by Mrs. Ost several chickens, which proudly strutted up and down, most content in their high station.

Further investigation showed that the fire-escape was being used practically for a hencoop. Cohen secured a summons in the Essex Market Court, and yesterday Mrs. Ost appeared in court. She said that she was fattening the hens for their holiday feast and did not know she was doing any harm. Magistrate Ommen reprimanded the woman and discharged her with a warning.

FOUGHT RESCUER IN WATER.

Woman Leaped from Recreation Pier and Struggled Hard to Die.

Mrs. Fannie Glasgow, twenty years old, of 156 Madison Street, and her sister went to the recreation pier at the foot of Market Street and the East River yesterday afternoon. When the sister got ready to go Mrs. Glasgow refused to accompany her. The sister left, asking Frank Radley, of 69 Pike Street, to watch Mrs. Glasgow.

The woman sat silently for some time, and then suddenly jumped up on the seat and flung herself over the rail into the water. Radley was looking in another direction at the time, but his attention was attracted by the screams of women and children on the pier. Leaping up on the seat, he divested himself of his hat and coat, and then jumped in. In a minute he reached the woman's side and began to struggle with her. She fought desperately, and twice carried the man under. Radley held on, and Policemen Barr and Devine put out in a rowboat. The woman still fought, but the policemen finally got her ashore.

On June 14 of this year Radley distinguished himself by saving Mayer Angelovitz, of 256 Madison Street, from the river, after the lad had fallen from the Recreation Pier.

NEGROES PLAN MURDERS.

Club in Alabama Formed to Exterminate Certain White Citizens.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 17.—News was received in this city to-day from Prattville, just across the river, of the formation of a "Before Day Club." This club is composed entirely of negroes, and the object is to exterminate certain white citizens.

The first notice that such a club was in existence was when a prominent white planter was stopped on his way home at Autaugs Hill, about five miles from Prattville, by several armed negroes, who demanded that he continue on and not stop. It has been found that meetings are being held at a negro church on this road, and that sentries are placed on all the roads to keep the white people from coming anywhere near the meeting place.

The action of the negroes in this section has stirred the white people considerably, and they are now preparing to protect themselves from the members of the "Before Day Club." It is said that the members of the club have determined that none of their race shall be arrested by any white officer.

McLAURIN INDORSES LYNCHING.

Senator's Defense of Prisoner Arouses Indignation in Mississippi.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 17.—According to information received here to-night, United States Senator McLaurin of Mississippi, in defending W. C. Eastland, who was arraigned in the Circuit Court at Indianopa, Miss., last Friday on the charge of having participated in the burning at the stake of Luther Hollsert and his wife for the murder of a white man, has indorsed lynching as being the only reasonable atonement for murders and assaults in the South.

Senator McLaurin has announced his determination of convincing the jury which will try Eastland that the burning of the negroes was justifiable should conclusive evidence be introduced establishing Eastland's guilt.

Eastland has engaged eminent counsel in Mississippi, the most noted of whom is Senator McLaurin. The authorities of Mississippi purpose prosecuting Eastland rigorously, and prominent attorneys have also been engaged to assist the prosecution.

Senator McLaurin's connection with the case has caused general indignation in Mississippi. It is understood that Gov. Vardaman, who sent a special train with State troops to prevent the burning of the negroes, will oppose Senator McLaurin at Eastland's trial.

HANDBOOK ON BROADWAY.

Police Get Man They Say Had One in Front of 229.

George Meade, thirty-one years old, of 107 Park Place, was locked up in the Church Street Station last night on a charge of carrying on a handbook in front of 229 Broadway, where he keeps a news stand.

According to the police, Meade accepted a two-dollar bet from a colored man yesterday afternoon. When he was searched in the police station the police say he had betting sheets showing that he had accepted $100 in bets during the day. There were no names on the sheet, only initials. When Acting Capt. McAuley of the Church Street Station asked him if he did not know that it was against the law to accept bets Meade is said to have replied:

"I didn't know that I was doing anything wrong."

Exploding Battery Maims Electrician.

Herman Geyer, fourteen years old, an electrician's helper, living in Remsen Avenue, Newtown Heights, was putting in a door bell at his home when a storage battery he held in his hand exploded. The thumb of his left hand and the index finger of the same hand were blown off. His right eye was also injured. The injured boy was taken to St. John's Hospital in Long Island City.

Programme for City College Opening.

The College of the City of New York will open on Sept. 22. After President Finley has delivered the opening speech Mayor McClellan and Commissioner Darlington will make addresses, followed by James Byrne, who will speak for the Board of Education and the Board of Trustees of the college. The buildings for the preparatory department, as well as the gymnasium, are nearing completion.

Lightning Sent Stone Through Roof.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 17.—The Prudential Insurance Company put men to work to-day repairing the damage caused by a bolt of lighting which shattered the tower on the east end of the north building last Wednesday night. Workmen were lowered from the tower to the sloping slate roof, where the stones from the tower had struck. One of the stones went entirely through the roof, but the structure was not weakened.

Italian Musician Asphyxiated.

Special to The New York Times.

BAYONNE, N. J., Sept. 17.—Salvatore Rosano, a young Italian who belonged to the Royal Italian Band, was found dead in bed this morning, evidently a victim of accidental asphyxiation. Rosano was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Letcher of Avenue D and East Third Street, who met the young man at Atlantic City. Mr. Letcher is senior member of the metal merchant firm of Letcher & Norton of Jersey City.

GROUT WOULD SAVE CITY $400,000 A YEAR

Thinks He Can Collect Entire Franchise Tax.

TO ELIMINATE DEDUCTIONS

Court of Appeals Holds Otherwise in Buffalo Case, but Controller Has Discovered a Loophole.

Controller Grout, it was announced yesterday, believes that he can get the Court of Appeals to reverse, for the City of New York, a recent decision adverse to the City of Buffalo in a case between the City of Buffalo and the Crosstown Street Railway of that place, and thereby can place New York in a position greatly to increase its franchise tax collections. The amount of the increase, if the Controller is successful, will be the present deduction from the total franchise tax on account of percentages of gross receipts already paid to the city, and will amount to about $400,000 annually.

The litigation in Buffalo arose from the contention of the city that under the Roosevelt franchise tax law of 1898, following Mr. Roosevelt's refusal as Governor to sign the franchise tax law previously adopted by the Legislature, payments by the street railroad company as a percentage of its gross receipts should not be deducted from the general franchise tax. The city went to the language of the statute, which said: "Which shall tax all franchises as realty, which shall provide for the assessment of the tax by the State Board of Tax Commissioners, and which shall further provide that from the tax thus levied for the benefit of the locality there shall be deducted the tax now paid by the corporation in question."

The City of Buffalo asserted that percentages of gross receipts paid the city could not be considered in the light of a "tax." The Court of Appeals went back to the bill preceding Mr. Roosevelt's, which contained the words, as determining what should be deducted, "in the nature of a tax," and held that those words showed the legislative intent, upon which the whole question hinged. And, said Judge Cullen, who wrote the opinion, payments of gross receipts on percentage, whether a "tax" or not, were "in the nature of a tax."

The point on which Controller Grout thinks he can get the Court of Appeals virtually to reverse its decision in the Buffalo case is that the message which Mr. Roosevelt sent to the State Legislature accompanying his tax bill must be taken as determining the "legislative intent" in that case. The Controller finds that the words "in the nature of a tax" are nowhere contained in this message, and that legislative intent must therefore be judged from the wording of the Roosevelt bill itself, in which the word "tax" was specifically inserted instead of the longer phrase of the earlier measure.

Advising with the Controller is ex-Senator John Ford, who has made a special study of the franchise tax question.

WAGGAMAN BANKRUPTCY SUITS.

He Admits His Inability to Pay the Columbia National Bank.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Counsel for Thomas E. Waggaman to-day returned answers to the second and third petitions in bankruptcy filed against him by M. Agnes Gardiner and others and by the Columbia National Bank of this city, and other creditors.

The answer to the Gardiner petition admits the act of bankruptcy alleged, but denies the right and standing of the petitioners to ask adjudication of the case. He admits his guarantee of the notes held by the petitioner Gardiner, and says that the real estate into which the amount of the notes was placed could be sold to pay the notes in full. He therefore denies that the petitioners have provable claims in excess of their security.

The answer to the Columbia Bank admits the indebtedness alleged, admits his inability to pay his debts, and says that on this petition he is willing to be adjudged a bankrupt. This latter case is the one in which the United States Marshal was appointed custodian to hold the notes secured by the so-called "List No. 1," and other securities until a trustee in bankruptcy could be appointed by the creditors.

CUNNEEN AND DEPEW SPEAK.

Two Political Adversaries Tell Farmers the Evils of the Time.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Senator Chauncey M. Depew and Attorney General Cunneen addressed a great crowd today at the Ontario County Fair. Mr. Cunneen contrasted the hardships of pioneer life in Western New York one hundred years ago with the privileges and advantages enjoyed by people there to-day, and ascribed the progress to the character of the Government founded by the Revolutionary fathers rather than to the country itself, its climate, or its people.

This Government, he continued, secured to the people of the State and the Nation freedom of conscience and freedom of opportunity, and he urged that the duty of the people to-day is to guard against evils that may threaten those principles. He said that if through legislative favoritism individuals or corporations are oppressing the people, the latter have the remedy in their own hands and should use it. In conclusion Mr. Cunneen said he had no sympathy with the flippant way in which public officials are often treated.

"If you would improve the public service," he said, "speak well of public servants; dignify them until they are proved to be unworthy. Then drive them out in disgrace."

Senator Depew declared that the chief danger threatening the country to-day is that of speculation by which fictitious values are given to our products and they are shut out of foreign markets. Notwithstanding the fact that American railways are now transporting farm products at one-fourth the cost of that service in 1870, and at little more than one-fourth its cost in Great Britain to-day, he said, he welcomed the trolley as a feeder of the steam roads and predicted that the latter would be equipped with electricity within ten years.

ALABAMA LYNCHING ARRESTS.

Two Men Lodged in Jail at Huntsville Accused of Arson and Murder.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Sept. 17.—Silas Worley, a teamster, and Josh H. Mitchell, a peddler, were lodged in jail to-day for alleged connection with the lynching of Horace Maples. Worley is charged with arson and Mitchell with murder.

There is a rumor that additional troops have been ordered here to guard the jail, but Capt. Lucien Brown, in charge of the militia, authorizes a denial of all such rumors.

AND THE DOG CAME BACK.

A Biting St. Bernard Legally Banished—Owner Summoned for Contempt.

Police Justice Manning of Jersey City yesterday issued a summons requiring James Stapleton of 47 Van Reipen to appear and show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt of court for not shooting a big St. Bernard dog which bit Raymond Egan on April 2. The dog was condemned to death, but later the sentence was changed to banishment to Piermont, N. Y.

On last Thursday the dog was back again at Mr. Stapleton's house, but was chained in the yard. Yesterday it broke its chain and bit Harold McGrath, who lives opposite. Complaint was made to the police, and Justice Manning issued the summons requiring Mr. Stapleton to appear in court.

SAY POLITICAL PULL BLOCKED CONATY CASE

Deal Made with Supposed Aunt to Spirit Girl Away.

TWO MEN OFFERED HER $150

One Said He Was a Tammany District Leader and the Other a Policeman—Woman Is Held.

There will in all likelihood be an aftermath to the strange case of Tessie Conaty, the sixteen-year-old girl who two weeks ago caused the arrest of two young men on a charge of assault, and who later was prevented from appearing against them by a plot in which political pull is thought to have been a potent factor. Assistant District Attorney Krotel intimated yesterday that further prosecutions would follow and that the District Attorney's office was determined to sift to the bottom what appeared to be a systematic and deliberate attempt to frustrate justice.

The girl was spirited away after her aunt, Mrs. Kate Kiernan of 1,469 First Avenue, had been approached by two men, one of whom represented himself as a Tammany district leader and the other as a policeman connected with the case, and had accepted from them an agreement by which, in consideration of the sum of $150, she would prevent the girl from pressing the case. The girl, who was taken into custody on Friday evening at 501 East Fifty-first Street, was arraigned yesterday before Magistrate Mayo, in the Tombs Court, and committed to the House of Detention as a witness. Mrs. Kiernan, the aunt, was also arraigned, on a charge of compounding a felony, and released under $1,000 bail. Detectives who had been hunting for the two men with whom she said she had made the agreement reported that they had been unable to find them. The Magistrate adjourned the case until Tuesday.

Queer proceedings have characterized the case of Tessie Conaty from the beginning. Early on the morning of Sept. 3, the day after Tammany Leader Tom Foley's picnic at Sulzer's Harlem River Park, the girl rushed up to a policeman in Chambers Street and told him that four men had attacked her at 13 Chambers Street, the old building of Tom Foley's Down Town Club. The two prisoners, who described themselves as Jacob Strobel and James Geraghty of 9 Chambers Street, were arrested not far away, while two other men escaped.

The men were held for examination, and Foley gave bail for them. John Hoyer, a police court lawyer, who frequently appears in cases in which the district leader is interested, became their counsel. In the meantime Tessie Conaty was sent to the House of Detention.

When the case came up for examination a week ago Mrs. Kate Kiernan appeared for the first time. A further adjournment was asked for and granted. Mrs. Kiernan told the Magistrate that she was the girl's aunt, and asked that her niece be committed to her custody. This was done.

When the case came up again the two defendants appeared in court, but neither girl nor aunt. Magistrate Pool then dismissed the two men. Detectives who had been sent to find the girl at 1,075 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, the address she had given, are said to have told Magistrate Pool that there was a vacant lot where the girl said she lived. If they did it was not the truth.

On Monday afternoon last Mrs. Kiernan went to the Tombs Court and told Clerk Lewis about the deal with the two men. One of the men, she said, had represented himself as a policeman and the other as Tammany Leader Henry Hart. They offered her $150 to keep the girl from appearing, and paid $50 on account. The rest was to be paid on the following day.

Clerk Lewis started the woman to the District Attorney's office, but she never got there. When she reached the door she was met by a lawyer whom she did not know.

"I guess you need legal advice," she declares he told her. "I am a lawyer, and if you take my advice you keep away from the District Attorney's office. You have had a share in this matter, and may be arrested."

When Assistant District Attorney Krotel sent a policeman out to arrest the woman she could not be found. On Wednesday Mr. Krotel learned that she had called on Capt. Kear of the Elizabeth Street Station, in whose precinct the alleged assault was reported. She spent an hour in his private room, and told him practically the same story. Capt. Kear, however, did not report the matter to the District Attorney's office.

Mr. Krotel at once sent for Detective Hahn of the Elizabeth Street Station and instructed him to go out and arrest Mrs. Kiernan. This was on Wednesday. It took him until Friday afternoon to do it. The first time he went to her home he reported that he did not find her in. The second time he said he had seen the woman, but did not care to take her out of her house for fear she would create a scene.

"You go and get her," Mr. Krotel told him, "or I will report your case at Police Headquarters." Mr. Krotel was particularly anxious to get the written agreement he knew she had. When she was finally taken, however, she told him that she had left the agreement with her lawyer.

Mrs. Kiernan was represented in court yesterday by Benjamin Perkins of 152 Nassau Street. Mr. Krotel made a demand on him for the agreement. Mr. Perkins replied that while he remembered having seen the agreement, he did not know what had become of it.

Henry Hart, Tammany district leader of the Thirtieth Assembly District, said yesterday that he knew the identity of the two men, one of whom had used his name.

"Both men are under obligation to me," he said. "I will not mention their names at this time, but will appear against them in court."

THIEF KILLS ILLINOIS MAYOR.

Is in Turn Shot and Captured by Citizens of Thomson.

THOMSON, Ill., Sept. 17.—Mayor W. F. Bennett was shot and killed to-day by a thief whom the Mayor was trying to arrest.

The murderer was caught by citizens, after he had been shot twice.

PROSPERITY IN MEXICO.

Diaz's Message to Congress—Finances in Excellent Condition.

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 17.—President Diaz's message, delivered at the convening of Congress yesterday, was to-day given to the press for publication.

The message is of the usual length and dwells particularly on the friendly relations existing with all foreign powers. The arrival of the first diplomatic representative of China is noted.

President Diaz reports the result of the sanitary campaign against yellow fever as gratifying. There has been no recurrence of the disease in epidemic form during this year.

The President reviews at length the notable advances made in education.

During the first half of the current fiscal year 1,000 titles were granted to mining properties. There has been notable activity in mineral production, and Mexico now takes second rank as a producer of copper.

The railway systems of the country have increased greatly during the past year. The Federal telegraph system has steadily grown, 1,500 kilometers of new lines having been erected.

The national finances are in an excellent condition.

The total revenue of the fiscal year ending June 30 was over $55,000,000, a gain of $8,000,000 over the previous fiscal year.

Both the customs collections and the stamp taxes continue to give large returns.

In referring to military matters the President says great progress has been made in improving and modernizing armaments, and the artillery has been strengthened.

The President states that the new war vessels constructed in the United States and Italy will add to the importance and efficiency of the navy. No mention is made of the monetary reform measure, which may come before Congress this year or next Spring in a special session.

BAD TRAIN WRECK IN CHICAGO.

Twelve Persons Injured, Several of Whom May Die.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—A through passenger train on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Road from Toledo to Chicago was wrecked this afternoon at the crossing of the tracks and Root Street. Accounts of the cause of the accident differ, some of the railroad people claiming that the train ran into an open switch, and others saying that the locomotive jumped the track because of a broken flange. Twelve persons were injured, and several of them may die.

The most seriously injured are John Schuler of Elkhart, Ind., engineer, not expected to live; J. E. Lane of Kalamazoo, Mich., fireman, condition serious; George Leffert of Clayton, Mich.; Mrs. Susan Berdell of Chicago, condition serious; Dr. L. H. Goodrich of Springfield, Mass., badly bruised, and W. G. Weiss of New York, severely cut about the body.

The train was a little late on entering the city, and was going at a high rate of speed in order to make up the lost time. The tracks are elevated, and the accident happened just before the train reached the viaduct passing over Root Street. The engine left the track, but the forepart of the tender struck the end of the viaduct railing and was torn to pieces.

The engine plunged to the far side of the viaduct, where a rail torn from its fastenings transfixed the rear of the engine cab and the fore part of the baggage car. It held the wreckage so closely that several hours' work was necessary before the wreckage of the baggage car could be removed.

STOLE TO DRESS WELL.

Williamsburg Servant Girl Took Cash and Jewelry, Then Disappeared.

Magistrate Naumer yesterday in the Manhattan Avenue Court, Williamsburg, held Mamie Thompson, a young woman, in $1,000 bail for a hearing on the charge of grand larceny. She confessed stealing $140 in cash and jewelry valued at $100 from the house of Mrs. Mamie Welch, at 1,009 Lorimer Street, Greenpoint, where she was employed as a servant.

The girl said that she desired to dress well when her sweetheart came to see her, and in order to do so turned thief. The robbery was committed early on Friday morning, after which the girl disappeared. She was arrested in a Williamsburg dressmaking parlor yesterday, together with a man who was waiting outside. In court the girl exonerated the man and he was released.

DOUSES LAD WITH ACID.

Young Italian Burns Williamsburg Boy Without Apparent Reason.

Eight-year-old Frederick Noble of 131 North Fifth Street, Williamsburg, while at play yesterday on the sidewalk in front of St. Vincent de Paul's parochial school in North Fifth Street, near Driggs Avenue, was approached by a big boy, apparently an Italian, and who doused his face and neck with carbolic acid.

ANTIETAM DAY OBSERVED.

Brooklyn Veteran Associations Meet in Prospect Park.

The anniversary of the battle of Antietam was observed with interesting exercises in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon by the War Veterans and Sons' Association of that borough. About 7,000 people attended the ceremonies.

Major Walter Thorn, President of the association, introduced Park Commissioner M. J. Kennedy, who presided at the exercises. Addresses were made by Mr. Kennedy, Past Department Commander Joseph W. Kay of the Grand Army of the Republic; Gen. Horatio C. King, President of the Society of the Army of the Potomac, and the Rev. Dr. James M. Farrar, pastor of the First Reformed Church. Following the speechmaking there was a parade and review by a number of uniformed organizations, including the American Volunteer Cadets, the Boys' Brigade from the Home for Destitute Children, the Columbian Lady Guards of Mansfield Post, Perry Lady Guards of Perry Post, and Hamilton Post Liberty Guard.

B. Altman & Co.

NINETEENTH STREET AND SIXTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

NOTICE.—During the month of September, the store will be closed at TWELVE o'clock Noon on Saturdays, and at FIVE o'clock P. M. on other business days.

Messrs. B. Altman & Co. are constantly receiving important additions to their extensive stocks of fabrics, wearing apparel, novelties and other merchandise, in suitable and correct styles for the approaching seasons; they desire to direct attention especially to the following announcements:

MISSES' DRESSES. The first importation of Misses' Evening Gowns and Children's Party and Dancing Dresses has been received; it comprises a number of very desirable models showing newest materials and most effective designs for Autumn.

In addition to these is a general stock of garments for Misses and Girls, comprising new and very attractive styles.

OUTER GARMENTS. Wraps, Coats and Paletots in materials and colors, for Street and Evening wear, for Motoring and Carriage use. The collection includes recently received importations from the foremost foreign houses, and an interesting line of garments of American manufacture.

FINE LACES. Additional Autumn importations of high-class novelties include French made Point d'Irlande, Point d'Appliqué, Irish Crochet, Chinese embroidery effects on Tulle, Clunie, Reticella and Bruges combinations; Circular Lace and Spangled Tulle Flounces.

As an exceptional offering 125 LACE ROBES (unmade), Ivory color and Black, Crêpe de Chine combinations, imported to sell at from $40.00 to $68.00, will be offered commencing Tuesday, September Twentieth, at $28.00, $35.00 and $42.00 each.

DRESS SILKS. A SALE OF EVENING DRESS SILKS WILL BE HELD, COMMENCING TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER TWENTIETH, consisting of over twenty thousand yards of Silks, in white, ivory, cream and conventional evening shades (plain colors), the regular prices of which are 75c. to $1.25 per yard, at . . . . . 58c.

FORTY PAGES.

THE MAN FOR GOVERNOR.

The Democratic Party can probably elect its candidate for Governor of this State if he be thoroughly fit and known to be so.

He should be a man of integrity and ccurage, of independent judgment and practical sagacity, versed in public affairs, familiar with them by study and by experience, and able to deal with large matters in a systematic and efficient manner. Moreover, he should be a man honorably ambitious, wishing to extend his reputation by distinguished public service.

We believe Mr. SHEPARD to be such a man, and that he could be elected.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S PENSION ORDER.

The Parker Constitution Club has done well to set forth the history of President ROOSEVELT'S Pension Order No. 78, together with the constitutional objections to such legislation by the Executive. This order directs, in effect, that in the adjudication of pension claims every claimant who has passed the age of sixty-two years shall be assumed to be "disabled one-half in ability to perform manual labor," and is entitled to be rated at $6 per month. The only possible warrant for this act which the President's defenders have adduced is found in that provision of the pension law of 1890 which declares that all honorably discharged veterans suffering from mental or physical disabilities shall be entitled to a pension of not less than six or more than twelve dollars per month, and these pensions shall be granted "according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide."

In the case of veterans of the Mexican war Congress by enactment directed pensions to be paid to those who had become sixty-two years of age. If Congress had been of this mind with regard to the veterans of the civil war it would naturally have passed a bill giving pensions to every veteran of that contest who had reached the age of sixty-two. It did nothing of the kind. It is to be assumed that the elected lawmakers of the people saw no good and sufficient reason, were aware of no motive of public policy, which convinced them that such an act should be passed. The President officiously, and in the opinion of many jurists unconstitutionally, steps in, and, through the Secretary of the Interior, issues an Executive mandate declaring that the fact of attaining the age of sixty-two shall be considered as establishing disability, as diminishing "one-half inability to perform manual labor." Now this is an opinion, an assumption, a generalization to which notoriously there is a multitude of exceptions. Moreover, great numbers of the veterans of the civil war are not performing manual labor. They are doing office work, they are janitors, collectors, agents, or have duties of a nature to be performed as efficiently and as easily by a man of sixty-two as by a man of thirty-two. Moreover, it is distinctly contrary to public policy to increase the annual pension expenditure, save for reasons so valid and convincing as to command universal approval. The vast pension roll is a public scandal. It would have been infinitely more creditable to Mr. ROOSEVELT had he attempted to purge it of fraud rather than to augment its yearly cost by a sum which may reach twelve or fifteen million dollars.

We repeat, there was no public reason for Pension Order No. 78. For what reason, then, was it issued? If THEODORE ROOSEVELT were ten times a saint, if his reputation for entire straightforwardness and unselfish devotion to the public interest were as high as it was when he represented New York in the Assembly or served as Civil Service Commissioner, he would not escape the suspicion that he had put forth this order to catch the old soldier vote. "It is a fair inference," says the report of the Parker Constitution Club, "that the action of President ROOSEVELT three months before the nomination was a bid for the pension vote."

It is an inference. It lacks proof. The President's friends cannot say that it does him injustice. Whatever its motive, however, the order was one of those perfectly characteristic acts which have implanted in the minds of the people the belief, not diminishing but growing, that President ROOSEVELT misuses power and is habitually given to transcending the constitutional limits of Executive authority. Is Congress slow, does it fail or refuse to act? The President acts. He has the temperamental failing, and it is a most grave failing in our form of government, of overweening confidence in himself, in his own judgment, in his own infallibility. He has tried the patience of the people. It may prove that he has tried it beyond their toleration.

THE TERMS OF PEACE.

Rumors of peace are as thick as Autumn leaves; they are not of much more value. Yet it is quite possible that the rulers and statesmen in Japan and Russia are asking themselves, if not each other, whether the time has not come to consider a settlement.

So far Japan has had much the better of the fight. She has practically destroyed the sea power of her foe in Asiatic waters, and she has every reason for confidence that she can take care of the Baltic fleet if it ever gets within her reach. On land the success of Japan, though less decisive, has been very great, and would so be considered had the most powerful of European nations attained it. She has driven the Russians from the borders of Korea and from the Liao-Tung Peninsula as far north as Mukden, and while Port Arthur, with a small garrison, holds out, it is in pure desperation, and Liao-Yang, a position elaborately and with long preparation fortified and occupied by all the troops Russia could gather, has been captured. There is very good reason for the Japanese commander to expect still further successes before the Winter sets in. Japan is not in a position to dictate peace: she clearly is in a position to exact honorable and advantageous terms, if opportunity offered. Equally she is so situated that she could without discredit or injury accept moderate terms.

The mind of Russia it is difficult to fathom. In the end it will be the Czar who will determine, but how his mind inclines, or by what influences his course will finally be shaped, it is not easy to say. Unquestionably there was a party in Russia strongly opposed to the war, and not only to war when it was begun, but to the policy which led to the war. M. WITTE is known firmly to have pressed on the Czar the evacuation of Manchuria. Gen. KUROPATKIN, though he is not known to have gone so far as WITTE, counseled delay, and, if practicable, an entente with Japan and England. WITTE has been smothered with empty honors and poor KUROPATKIN, forced to take up a war for which he knew he was unprepared, has fought stubbornly and creditably, but always in retreat. There may be—if ordinary civilization prevailed in Russia—there must be a sentiment demanding the cessation of a struggle in which further defeats would be perilous and in which the utmost attainable success would be terribly exhausting. But how far that sentiment exists, in what quarters, with what influence, no outside observer can tell. Probably the observers from the inside best qualified to discover would differ widely in their opinions. For the truth is that there is no public sentiment in Russia, as we understand the term. There is not even a ruling class. There is only the Czar, and the persons who for the time have the ear and the favor of the Czar, while the character, the purposes, the wishes, of the man who must be the final arbitrator are shrouded in impenetrable mystery.

It is tempting to personify great nations, to speak of each as an individual with a more or less definite disposition and tendencies producing a consistent policy which is pursued with some patience and can be traced in the past or predicted for the future. In the case of a fairly homogeneous people with a known system of government, with organization for the expression of public sentiment, or even with a continuous ruling class, this process of reasoning is often risky, but often leads roughly to correct inferences. It will not do for Russia. It is peculiarly fascinating, but it is practically worthless. Therefore in speculating as to the possibility of peace and on what terms it will be brought about the statesmen of Europe are hardly more secure than the outside students. The Czar will make peace when, in the mysterious recesses of his mind, swayed by influences of which the world knows little, and which are constantly shifting, the conviction is born that he can safely do so, or that for the safety of the autocracy he must.

THE EMBATTLED ARMSTRONG.

KNOX in perfect amity may rub elbows in the Senate with obese representatives of great consolidations of capital, and CORTELYOU may with both hands collect Trust funds for use in the campaign. But the wrinkles have not all been smoothed out of the front of the Administration. While the President at Oyster Bay takes such ease as is permitted to a candidate, ARMSTRONG remains in Washington with all his armor on, and his blood up. ARMSTRONG is Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in charge of the Customs Service. He is a trust buster in dead earnest, and in that capacity he has just planted a smashing blow between the baleful eyes of a certain octopus popularly called the Tobacco Trust, but known in law as the Havana Tobacco Company.

This octopus is a large manufacturer of cigars in Cuba, where it controls a majority of the cigar factories. Every smoker knows that the boxes which contain real Havana cigars are adorned with a customs stamp in red. This stamp serves as a proof satisfactory to purchasers that the cigars are imported, not domestic. Great numbers of smokers, even those having wives and families to support, disdaining the humble "two-fer," luxuriously indulge themselves in the costlier and more delicately flavored Havana article. Such profligacy as this is revolting, and justly so, to the virtuous manufacturers of domestic cigars. They have besought the Treasury Department to discontinue the practice of affixing the red customs stamp to imported Havana cigars, insisting that the stamp serves as a trade advertisement immensely profitable to their rivals, the Havana Tobacco Company. The red stamp is considered, they insist, a sort of certificate of merit, a Government guarantee that the cigars were imported, a fact which, it would appear, they think the purchaser ought to be left to discover for himself.

Moved in part by these arguments, we suppose, but chiefly by his stern purpose to crush a trust wherever he finds one, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury ARMSTRONG has decreed that the glaring red stamp shall be discontinued, and in obedience to his order a new stamp has been prepared, a shrinking, modest, humble thing that will be inconspicuously affixed to the bottom of the cigar box. This stamp, he holds, will be a compliance with the law, and yet will not serve as an "advertisement" of foreign-made cigars.

On the receipt of this news joyous bunting was hung out all over the façade of the great factory in which Boston's favorite brand, the Swampscott Minnehaha, is manufactured. The men who make the Agawam Delicioso and the Feeding Hills Perfectos marched in triumphant processions through the streets. The proprietor of the East Eaddam Intimidad factory ordered cannon to be fired, and even the little Windsor Locks Concha interests joined in the wild demonstration. The cyclone which came up the coast Wednesday night was a reverberation of the Key West outburst of gladness.

The Armstrong policy is the only sound one. The way to bust the trusts is to make the people unconsciously trample them under their feet. Smokers will angrily insist that they ought to have some assurance other than the retail vendor's word for it that the cigar for which they are made to pay thirty cents is made in Havana and not in Glastonbury. They can tell the difference themselves as soon as they have lighted the cigar, but then it is too late to return the goods and get back their money. But who cares for the consumer? The whole tariff policy of the party in power is based on disregard of the consumer as a human being with rights. Strip him, despoil him, rob him. Expose him to the risk of buying cigars for twenty-five cents each that would be high at three for ten. Turn a deaf ear to his complaints. For does not the Administration's high and holy purpose of destroying the trusts justify any means employed to that end?

THE UNDER WORLD.

At least one section of the British Association sat through one session of the late meeting sighing for a hole deep enough to enable it to solve some of the problems of geology which are now largely speculative.

At the present time the deepest mining shaft is at the Cape of Good Hope, and it is said to be about one mile in depth. The deepest bore hole of record is one in Silesia made by the Austrian Government, also about a mile deep. What might be found at greater depths is what the geologists want to know more than they are able to tell in temperate language. The sinking of a shaft to a great depth presents, so far as are known, no insurmountable difficulties, but of such an undertaking it may be said, as Mr. BLAINE said of his canvass, "it is largely a question of finance." It would be desirable to select for such an experiment a locality known or believed to be as free as possible from water-bearing strata, so as to minimize the cost of pumping. Preferably it would be sunk in stages, each about half a mile in depth, and at each stage there would be located hoisting and other machinery to be operated electrically. At each second or third mile in depth it would probably be necessary to provide airlocks, in order to sustain the air column and prevent the pressure from becoming too great to be borne. A greater pressure than twice that normal at the surface would probably be unbearable by workmen. Ventilation would have to be provided for by means of air pumps driven by electricity. To maintain the shaft at a bearable temperature at great depths powerful means of conveying the heated air to the surface and replacing it with cool air must be provided. The amount of heat conducted inward through the rock wall and requiring to be absorbed and carried off will depend upon the conductivity of the strata. Among those who are studying this subject critically the opinion obtains that it would be possible to maintain a tolerable temperature at the depth of at least twelve miles. Beyond this it would probably be necessary to have recourse to something like the Belgian freezing process of M. POESCHE for excavating through water-bearing strata.

From figures presented at the Engineering Section of the British Association by its Chairman, the Hon. CHARLES A. PARSONS, it may be assumed that the cost of such a hole in the ground, including airlocks and cooling, the time consumed in the work, and the temperatures of rock to be encountered, would be about as follows:

Depth.	Cost.	Time in years.	Temp. of Rock.
2 miles.	$2,500,000	10	122 deg. F.
4 miles.	5,500,000	25	152 deg. F.
6 miles.	8,000,000	40	182 deg. F.
8 miles.	13,500,000	55	212 deg. F.
10 miles.	18,500,000	70	242 deg. F.
12 miles.	25,000,000	85	272 deg. F.

Besides the great additions which it would make to geological knowledge, the suggestion is made that at hitherto unexplored depths the shaft might bring to light vast resources of compensatory mineral wealth and gems of purest ray serene which would enrich the backers beyond the dreams of avarice. If this expectation can be given verisimilitude it should not be difficult to syndicate the undertaking, but to secure the money for the promotion of geological investigation might be very difficult. It runs to large totals.

THE HONEST TITLE BROKER.

From time to time society in Europe is convulsed by spasms of indignation over the traffic in titles which is said to flourish in Italy and Spain, Belgium and Germany; and the reports by cable are greedily commented on in our press.

The latest "exposure" is of a thrifty son of the Tyrol who has a printed form wherein he guarantees titles in certain of the federated German States. He promises you a German title of Baron for a poor two-hundred thousand marks, and a Spanish equivalent for one-fifth that sum. So far as an unassisted intellect of average dimensions can perceive, he is only doing what thousands of high-placed officials perform with impunity so long as they are not found out and published. The major domo of her Majesty the German Empress, the haughty VON MIRBACH, beloved of the clergy and of banking circles, owes his retirement in large part to a disinterested endeavor to recruit the nobility among the wealthy; but it was not title broking that caused his fall; title broking was an incident which came out in the course of his indictment for irregularities in the collection of large sums of money for alleged charitable purposes.

It is part of the game that titles should be considered by the public as rewards for substantial services to the public weal, and any one who lays bare the facts as they exist is marked for execution. English titles have the highest quotations because of the genius of the English people in overlaying their motives with plausible reasons for acts that do not bear investigation. The public that reads English hears more about titles granted for real merit; but the old game goes on. In Germany there is less hypocrisy, though under BISMARCK there were attempts to clarify the aristocracy by holding up bearers of titles and forcing them to explain on what grounds they used them. The absurdity of such sporadic efforts is apparent when one considers the origin of many German titles during the past centuries. As for Spanish, Portuguese, and Papal titles, they are past defending, and the quotations made by an honest broker are therefore almost down to those from Turkey and Persia.

CARBOLIC ACID.

There is ground for the objection of the dispensing chemists to the order of the Health Department forbidding the sale of carbolic acid except on prescription. The reason for this order is the employment of carbolic acid for purposes of suicide. The same reason might be given in the case of illuminating gas, with the added emphasis derived from the fact that a great many people are annually killed by gas who have no suicidal purpose and whose deaths are presumably accidental.

When a person reaches the state of mind which permits the development of the suicidal purpose, there are too many ways of ending life to make it necessary or desirable that one of them should be singled out for special restriction, especially when this one has a value so great in connection with antisepsis as carbolic acid in solution. Almost any one of the concentrated acids of commerce, even in rather attenuated dilution, would destroy life about as quickly and quite as painfully as carbolic acid. Death by any corrosive acid of this character is probably the most dreadful which could be chosen, and to make its horrors known would better operate to restrain suicide by this method than would an arbitrary restriction of trade in an article which has already taken its place among the simples of the family medicine closet. It is doubtful if any one so strongly desires death as to choose the frightful torture of eating holes in his viscera with carbolic acid if he knew what to expect; to place obstacles in the way of getting this particular means of self-torture would seem futile. The druggists could very easily render the enforcement of this rule unnecessary by exercising good discretion in dispensing this material. It has no domestic medicinal use except in high dilution, and this is the only form in which the retail druggist needs to dispense it. To give a wild-eyed and hysterical young woman with a distraught expression and disheveled hair a lethal dose of anything is an abuse of the privilege of the drug counter, which happily is not to be expected.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE "EXPERIENCE."

The stories told by the Christian Scientists at their convocation are doubtless entertaining, but they are also extremely instructive as illustrating the utter valuelessness of what the Medico-Legal Society has happily characterized as "crude experience." We may laugh at the man who is growing hair by the combination of prayer and faith; at the man who adopts this method to secure a supply of stoves, or at the woman who was thus cured of chronic rheumatism in a day. But it should be remembered that these people are in all probability telling what they believe to be the truth, and that the miraculous incidents they relate from a sense of duty are "matters of personal experience." The same is true of the testimonials which can be accumulated by the wagonload for every quack medicine which is sufficiently advertised to give it currency. Every popular delusion which has existed since civilization began has been sustained on evidence based upon experience, or what has passed for it among those who lack the acumen to discriminate between what they see and what they think they see. Witchcraft, ghosts, miracles, quackery, spiritualism, and so on up and down the line, have in turn all been matters of experience. That it is so with Christian Science, so called, is not surprising.

In jurisprudence, evidence which is contrary to probability and which it is impossible to sustain by collateral circumstances, is unconditionally rejected. The same rule might very well apply to experience, even when recounted by persons who "aim to tell the truth," but lack the qualities which make for good marksmanship.

ARMS AND THE MAN.

Being the Chronicle of Another Kind of Human Hog.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There have been various articles in your paper concerning the "end-seat hog," and women who dispose themselves on the smoking seats in open cars, but as yet I have noticed no article about the arm seat hog, or, in other words, the selfish persons who in ferryboats and railroad stations use both arms of the seats they occupy, regardless of their fellow-passengers' comfort, who are thegeby frequently made uncomfortable throughout the journey. It is evident that with only one arm or division between each seat every person is entitled to the use of one arm, but no more.

If a little more consideration of the rights of other people were displayed with a little less thought of our own comfort it would be better for all mankind.

Drama—Revolutionary and Literary.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read your notice in to-day's TIMES, and appreciate very much the interest you take in our work. But I think it is of importance to do away with some impressions that do not convey our object.

We wish not exactly to produce revolutionary dramas, but literary dramas mainly, regardless of what they preach or teach as long as they are high-class literature. Of course we are animated by progressive thoughts and, living in our age, we see the problems of our age and desire to treat these problems.

Whatever the future in this country will bring we cannot know. The economic problem is growing more serious. But the drama itself does not intend to become exclusively revolutionary. We may in time develop dramatists who will take hold of these questions. This is another matter.

At present we wish to create a field for the literary drama. If we succeed, we may produce whatever is important and beautiful.

We may succeed in doing things in our own way. You are aware that there are very few plays known to the American people that ought to be widely appreciated. You will agree with me that such an undertaking is absolutely necessary from a literary point of view. JULIUS HUPP.

Source of a Quotation.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your excellent editorial of the 13th inst. entitled "A Monopoly of Righteousness," you observe that an English barrister, pausing in the course of an argument, said to the Judge: "Your Lordship, the language you have seen fit to employ toward me would be disrespectful from the Almighty to a black beetle."

In the ninth edition of Bartlett's familiar quotations, at Page 857, the incident is stated thus:

"Lord Coleridge remarked that Maule told him what he said in the 'black beetle' matter. 'Creswell, who had been his pupil, was on the other side in a case where he was counsel, and was very lofty in his manner. Maule appealed to the court: "My lords, we are vertebrate animals, we are mammalia. My learned friend's manner would be intolerable in Almighty God to a black beetle.'"

A KAISER'S DAILY LIFE.

How Francis Joseph Lives at the Age of Seventy-four.

From The London Telegraph.

VIENNA, Sept. 1.—A member of the Polish aristocracy, occupying a prominent position at the Vienna Court, recently published some interesting details concerning the daily life of the Emperor Francis Joseph. On Aug. 18, says this well-informed writer, the Emperor entered upon his seventy-fifth year, in full possession of mental and bodily health. His great-grandfather, Leopold II., died comparatively young, at forty; his grandfather, Francis I., at fifty-eight, and his father, the Archduke Franz Karl, reached, indeed, his seventy-sixth year, but for several years before his death the mental and bodily energy which distinguish his son was absent. That Francis Joseph enjoys such excellent health is easily explained; it is the result of his moderate and regular course of life. His Majesty in this respect may be regarded as a hygienic model for his subjects.

He rises in Winter at 5, in Summer half an hour earlier, when he takes a cup of coffee and a piece of bread. At 8 he takes a cup of pure tea and a roll. At 12 he lunches, the meal being of the simplest kind, consisting of an egg, boiled and roast meat, with which he drinks a glass of Bavarian beer. For dessert he smokes a Regalia cigar; he has gradually disassociated himself from the use of Virginia tobacco, as the doctors consider it injurious to the nerves. The Regalias intended for his Majesty's use are prepared with special care at the Vienna tobacco factory, and are made of selected Havana leaves by the most skillful workwomen. Every month a box containing 600 cigars is sent to the Hofburg and paid for at the usual rate. His Majesty frequently sends a case of these choice cigars as a pleasant surprise to civil, military, and ecclesiastical dignitaries who are known to be especially fond of this brand.

At 7 o'clock follows the dinner, but however elaborate the menu the Emperor only partakes of soup, roast meat with vegetables, cheese, and a glass of beer. This, followed by one of his favorite cigars, is all that the monarch allows himself daily. He does not care for wine, but when the etiquette of a toast requires it he sips a little champagne. At 9:30 the lights in the imperial apartments are extinguished, and his Majesty retires to rest. The same order is strictly observed when he travels or attends the manoeuvres. Doctors with nervous patients would do well to recommend them a strict observance of his Majesty's regimen, which has proved so advantageous in his case.

Automobile Seller's Commission.

From The Philadelphia Record.

A Philadelphia capitalist and an old friend who has not been so successful in amassing wealth were discussing business affairs. The latter was inclined to be a little disgruntled, and made the claim that the present condition of industrial affairs rendered it almost impossible for a man to make money unless he had a big working capital. "To prove that you are in error," said the capitalist, "I know one man who has made $100,000 clear during the past year, his only capital being his natural ability as a salesman. He sells high-grade automobiles, purely on a commission basis, and within the past twelve months his commissions alone have amounted to $100,000. He is located in New York, where all the people of wealth have the motor car craze. He has the agency for one French machine that sells for $7,500, and he gets a commission of 20 per cent. on every one he sells. That means $1,500 on every sale. He has sold almost fifty of these machines alone, in addition to numerous others of an equally high grade. Of course his is an exceptional case, but you know it's the exception that proves the rule."

Modern Ways.

From The Detroit Free Press.

"Are you going to send your daughter to boarding school this Fall?"

"No, she is going at her own accord; we don't presume to dictate to our children."

TO CARRY THE STATE.

Various Suggestions of Policy and Candidates for Democrats.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The tide against Mr. Odell in the sentiments of all voters who clearly discern the difference between clever and selfish manipulation and between personal worth—this tide, I say, has been steadily rising for some time, and now—what prevents this typical machine from going to Washington as Senator from the great State of New York in case a Republican Legislature and Governor are elected?

But the Democrats must offer a candidate who is neither a mere product of the machine, (past or present,) nor merely negatively available; the candidate clearly must recommend himself by some form of positive worth with which the electorate of New York is already familiar. Such a one will quite certainly defeat Odell's man and bring discomfiture to the further plans of that worthy himself. OBSERVER.

New York, Sept. 16, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Although I hadn't voted for ten years, I came out of my seclusion and voted for E. M. Shepard three years ago. Why? Because he fascinated me. I regard him as the most accomplished orator in the country to-day. But he is not only an orator, but a practical, honest man—the true stuff out of which great statesmen are made. An opportunity now offers to secure his services as the Executive of this State and prospectively of the Nation at large. It will be a thousand pities if the Democrats do not avail themselves of it.

I may mention that I do not know Mr. Shepard, have never met him, and have nothing to expect from him. F. M.

Brooklyn, Sept. 17, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The suggestion of Chauncey S. Truax as the Democratic candidate for Governor made by a correspondent of THE TIMES is a wise and practical one.

He is a splendid combination of an able lawyer, a successful business man, and a clean politician.

He is the type of man needed. There may be others as fitting, but I do not think of them just now. MADISON.

New York, Sept. 17, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

After reading the three letters in to-day's issue of THE TIMES it appears to me that if Westchester County is to have a Gubernatorial candidate it should present not its cleanest and ablest Judge, but its cleanest and best business man, one who in all ways will answer those qualifications applied to our learned Judge—Cornelius A. Pugsley.

Mr. Pugsley's election in 1900 to represent the Sixteenth District at Washington showed his popularity, as he was the only Democratic Congressman elected in this State north of New York City.

He is a man who would draw heavily from the independent and Republican voters, not to mention the united support of his own party. Should he be nominated and elected he would be Governor in fact as well as in name. He was born on a farm, and as a young man he obtained a clerkship in the Post Office, then a position in a bank, from which he worked his way slowly and surely to its Presidency. To-day he is known among his business associates east of the Mississippi—I might also add west of it—as one of the foremost bankers and a man of high integrity. He never took part in any factional differences of the party; therefore he could be supported by a united Democracy.

THOMAS J. POWERS, JR.

Peekskill, Sept. 16, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your leading article "Democratic New York," which appeared in to-day's issue, is worthy of becoming a campaign document. Mr. Odell, in assuming the position of Chairman of the Republican State Committee, has taken away the dignity pertaining to the office of Governor, to which he was elected. He rode roughshod over the Republican State Convention and forced on the Republican Party the present Lieutenant Governor as its nominee for Governor. However fit Mr. Higgins may be for the office to which he has been nominated, how can any one outside of machine Republicans vote for him? Gov. Odell has shown that he thinks the position of Chief Executive of the Empire State second to that of chief of a political party. His personal nominee can hardly be expected to differ in this respect with his chief.

To strengthen the Republican ticket, Mr. Odell has named ex-Judge Julius Mayer for Attorney General, with a view of capturing the Jewish vote. Although Mr. Mayer is well known and well liked among all classes, there are plenty of gentlemen of his faith in the Democratic Party who are better known, better liked, and, I believe, bigger vote getters.

In former letters I have advocated the nomination of Jacob A. Cantor as the Democratic candidate for Governor, and I hope he will be named. Should, however, the Democratic Convention choose another gentleman, I think it would be good politics to select a gentleman of the Jewish faith for a higher position than that of Attorney General, so as to counteract the nomination of Julius Mayer.

I have seen the name of Mr. Guggenheimer mentioned as a candidate for Lieutenant Governor, and there is no doubt that, outside of Mr. Cantor, he, as a representative of the Jewish race, would far outclass the Republican nominee for Attorney General.

Mr. Guggenheimer is a very popular man, and as a vote getter can hold his own with any candidate for office in either the Republican or the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party must carry New York State, and therefore the leaders should carefully weigh the popularity of the various candidates as vote getters rather than their financial standing. If they do this, I have no doubt that Parker, Davis, and the Democratic State officers will carry New York State by upward of 20,000 on Nov. 8. WALTER H. LEWISSON.

Undertaker Bests Doctor.

From The Indianapolis News.

"I'm up against it, it seems, if Dr. Morrison is doing what they say he's doing," remarked Harry D. Tutewiler.

Tutewiler is an undertaker. Morrison is a physician. Both are candidates for the office of county Coroner.

"An old stand-by of mine in the last campaign told me yesterday that he couldn't vote for me. Not only that, but he said he would be compelled to work for Morrison. He said Morrison promised to 'doctor' him free of charge after he was elected."

"Up against it, were you not?"

"Rather. Guess I fixed it all right, though."

"How?"

"I told that 'hyper' that if Dr. Morrison would begin his treatment now instead of after the election, I'd promise to bury him free of charge—before the election."

His Cynical Theory.

"That is for you to say, Sir," answered the trained mathematician. "What do you want them to show?"

A GENIUS HAS ARRIVED.

Now Look Out for the Firing of the Hudson.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You don't know me, but you will some day, and long after you have passed away my name and fame shall be a by-word.

Even if we are not acquainted I don't know but what you'll be glad to learn that I have come to New York. Yes, Sir, come to be one of its leading lights, and brought with me two dramas, three books of poetry, one of short stories, one of essays, and a novel, all written by "yours truly." My pen has been very prolific for one of my tender years, but the results are splendid. I feel it myself.

Just a week ago yesterday the fire of genius burning within my soul and the fire of coals in the bowels of the locomotive brought me to the city. I call it "the city" as I hear others speak that way, but candidly I'm disappointed in the place. Why, last Saturday evening another girl and I went out to see the sights on Broadway, and we walked from a big wide street way down town—I think they call it Canal Street—clear up to Eighth Street, and we hardly saw a person the whole way, except in cars, or cabs, and every store was shut up tight. Why, you just ought to see Schenectady streets—that's the biggest city near our village—on a Saturday night! Gee, you can't push through the crowd! Then, too, I think board down here is pretty high. Why I'm paying $3.50 a week for room and board. To be sure, it's a lovely house, and I have a nice bed and three of the dearest roommates. One dresses people's hair and does something to their nails. I'd like to be that if I wasn't in literature. Then there is a nice parlor downstairs with signs up telling you not to dress your hair in that room, and that all callers must leave at 10, &c. I'm going to have Ma put up some signs in our best room when I get home; they are so decorative.

The only thing I don't like about my boarding house is you can't stay out after 10 at night, and just suppose I'd be waiting for an editor that long some day and get locked out. I've found out that all you do with an editor is just wait for him. I've called on several, but haven't met any yet. Well, I guess I'd better stop or I'll run off the paper, so good bye.

SARAH JOSEPHINE SMITH.

New York, Sept. 9, 1904.

P. S.—I'll be awfully disappointed if you don't print this letter, but I'll keep on writing to you just the same, for "Never say die" is my motto. S. P. S.

Need of a Lunch Hour.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In answer to your editorial entitled "The Lunch Habit," I take the liberty of disagreeing with the main points, and assert from my own experience that a man, no matter how ambitious he may be, and however anxious to advance himself and his employer's interests, cannot do good and accurate work confined in an office from 9 A. M. to 6 P. M. without, as the writer puts it, "cutting the day in half." After poring over figures and books for four hours, the eyes and brain become so fatigued that it is almost impossible to see or think clearly, when an hour's recreation, (re-creation,) a light luncheon, and forty minutes spent in the fresh air, filling the lungs with oxygen, and so clearing the brain, enable a man to resume his work with renewed vigor, beneficial alike to employer and employed. In the matter of late suppers, one can agree with him, but a light luncheon and forty minutes of fresh air, or "cutting the day in half," are only conducive to good work.

BUTLER PFEIFFER.

For Governor—Edward M. Shepard.

From The Troy Press, (Dem.)

In 1900 Democratic sentiment crystallized upon Bird S. Coler, and he was plainly the predominating preference of his party for the Governorship. The convention leaders disregarded this demand and forced the nomination of John B. Stanchfield, who was beaten by 111,126 votes.

In 1902 Democratic sentiment crystallized upon Alton B. Parker, and he was plainly the predominating preference of his party for the Governorship. The convention leaders disregarded this demand and forced the nomination of Bird S. Coler. Mr. Coler was defeated.

In 1904 Democratic sentiment is crystallizing upon Edward M. Shepard, and he is plainly the predominating preference of his party for the Governorship.

Loubet's Visit to His Peasant Mother.

From The London Chronicle.

President Loubet has been visiting his old home at Montelimar. He was received at the railway station, say the French newspapers, by several functionaries, and he subsequently took a drive in semi-state with one of his children. Much less ceremonious was the charming scene described by the Rev. A. N. Cooper, the "walking parson." Mr. Cooper, in one of his rambles, found himself at Montelimar, and looking out of the window at his inn in the early morning, he saw the President escorting his old mother to the market-place, where she continues to sell farm produce, even though her son has become Chief Magistrate of the Republic. She drove up in a market cart, which was duly unloaded. Then the President gave her his arm, escorted her to her chair, and opened the great umbrella under which she sat. No functionaries were in attendance, and the rest of the market people showed no signs of regarding the incident as anything remarkable. At the end M. Loubet gravely saluted his mother and went off to read State papers, while she remained to sell cabbages.

Scared Off.

From The Chicago News.

"Did Harwood buy the cottage at Swamp Glen?"

"No."

"What caused him to change his mind?"

"Why, he started to buy a few quinine pills in the drug store and they said they sold them only by the quart."

GOLDEN MIST.

The golden days were ours of old,
If we but did as we were told;
And when night came, we knew "next day"
Would come in time for us to play.

Our world, wherever we might be,
Down stairs, or in the nursery,
We changed at will—all things became
Quite different, or were just the same.

Then I could make a chair a horse,
Or steam car, as a thing of course;
The lounge a ship, or a mule train,
Which took us "there" and back again.

Maybe to Chile—if it snowed,
Or up the rocky Yonkers road,
Or off to India's coral strands,
And all the bad, but lovely lands.

I sometimes crossed the Delaware,
And always found Columbus there.
And as to cables—what d'you think?
We laid one in the kitchen sink!

We learned a little now and then,
But soon forgot, and learned again;
They laughed at our mistakes, and so,
They didn't scold us, don't you know?

We once got Pocahontas mixed
With William Penn, till they were fixed;
And Queen Bess was a Hottentot,
And Eve said, "Shoot him on the spot!"

No wonder golden days are past,
For they were far too good to last;
And so I climb, to crest the hill,
For gold is in the sunset still.

The production of Franz Adam Beyerlein's "Taps" ("Zapfenstreich") last night at the Lyric turned out better than was to have been expected. As will be recalled by those who saw the original last year at the Irving Place Theatre, where it made the success of the season, it is a peculiarly German arraignment of conditions peculiar to Germany—the anomalies and abuses of caste as it prevails in the army. "How can an officer," one of the characters asks, "command the respect and obedience of his subordinates when he overrides their most sacred feelings as men?" The implied answer is that though he does, he should not, and in conjunction with Lieut. Bilse's revelations of the evils of military life in a small garrison town and Hartleben's drama "Rosenmontag" of two years before, the play produced a storm of talk, dominated by the official disapproval of the Emperor.

A young and thoughtless Lieutenant, von Lauffen, (played by Robert Loraine,) seduces the daughter (Effie Shannon) of an old and distinguished Sergeant Major, (Herbert Kelcey.) A young under officer, the girl's fiancé, surprises the Lieutenant with the girl in his rooms, and in a burst of jealous rage attacks his superior officer. In the court-martial that follows the truth as to the intrigue comes to light. Volkhardt, forgetting in his rage as a father his position as a non-commissioned officer, demands the satisfaction by duel which would be due to an equal in rank. Being refused, he yields his customary obedience, but in his rage of frustration shoots his own daughter. The tragedy is grim and pathetic, and throws into a lurid light the abuses to which scope is given by German military caste.

There is little here that is dramatically intelligible to an American audience, and less that is inevitably appealing. But Mr. Shubert has had the good sense not to attempt such adaptation as has too often perverted imported plays; the piece is given in a pretty faithful translation. The result is that much of the strength of the original is sure, there is little or nothing, which is perhaps not a matter for criticism. But some kind of verisimilitude is certainly to be expected, and the performance last night was so lacking in this respect as to be indistinguishable at times from the baldest melodrama. Yet at the crises the dramatic force of the piece asserted itself. The scene of the court-martial, admirable in its truth and variety of human nature, made a strong appeal. And the scene of the shooting had a certain rough force. The production is billed to run only until Oct. 10, and may be relied upon to fill its time satisfactorily.

The acting was crude and effective by turns. Miss Shannon endowed the part of the passionate and self-sacrificing girl—the willing moth immolated in a flame of devotion to her Lieutenant—with fresh beauty, and in the main with force and sincerity. Only in one moment was she inferior to her predecessor at the Irving Place, (Bertha Rocco, was it not?). When, to save her lover from perjury, she confessed the truth in the open court, sentiment was given sentimentality with a roll of the eye that may not have been addressed to the gallery, but seemed so. On the whole, it was the best performance of the evening, and one of Miss Shannon's best—thoroughly womanly and moving.

In Christian's part of the young and selfishly heedless Lieutenant, Mr. Lorraine was agreeable and, on the whole, convincing, though without much light and shade. As the cynically humorous Count, Mr. Swickard, who is responsible for the rather capable translation and the rather incapable production, was heavily and harshly out of the character except for his final moment of true feeling, which was strongly denoted. As the Corporal fiancé Mr. Blake lacked smoothness and authority, in the main, but in the trial scene, during most of which he sits silent and dejected, he managed to create a profound impression of patient agony—a very remarkable achievement.

Mr. Kelcey was admirably intelligent in his quietude, in his simulation of the manner of the ancient soldier, and in the mimicry of the voice of age; but he showed his lack of recent experience in character work by failing at times to project his mood across the footlights. In the passage during the trial, where his daughter's guilt slowly and silently dawns upon him, his demeanor was cold and unimpressive, beside the subtle and acutely shaded emotions with which Bonn worked up to the final outburst. In the final scene, in which the passions of the father struggle on even terms with the habits of lifelong humility before a superior in rank, until they find an outlet in the murder of his child, Mr. Kelcey was melodramatic merely, leaving the audience quite cold.

"Taps" is a far sincerer, more dramatic and more significant play than often comes upon Broadway; and in spite of the remoteness of its appeal and the imperfections of the production it is well worth the attention of intelligent playgoers.

BELASCO SCORES THE TRUST.

Says the Six Men Who Control the Drama Have No Interest in Art.

Special to The New York Times.

YORK, Penn., Sept. 17.—In an interview here last night upon the theatrical season and the present conditions prevailing in the amusement world David Belasco said:

"To-morrow night two of the largest theatres in New York—both Broadway houses—will close their doors. On the road the opening of the season has been anything but auspicious.

"What is responsible for this state of affairs? The simple fact that six men, imbued with no other spirit than commercialism, have gained control over the drama. They are uncultured, unlettered men, without the slightest interest in art, with no care for its advancement or its future; yet they dictate to the stage as would the Czar to his subjects.

"While this syndicate, this octopus of the drama, has its grip upon the profession, it is losing its hold upon the public, and it will destroy itself eventually by its own greed. You cannot make a trust of art. Commercialism and art are incompatible. These men, who seek to lower art for their own gain, must in the end fail.

"The public has become satiated with the sort of amusements the trust has been offering. Last season a dozen London and Paris failures were brought over here and staged as great European successes. This season the trust is attempting again to foist foreign failures on the public. One such failure, a play which had a run of but ten days in London, was brought to New York, run at one of the syndicate houses, and taken off after the fourth night. The trust has been producing these foreign failures because the American

MORE DRILLING NEEDED.

Gen. Wheeler Says We Must Follow Europe in Training Soldiers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Brig. Gen. Joseph Wheeler, retired, who attended the manoeuvres at Manassas, to-day expressed the opinion that the manoeuvres must not only be continued, but conducted on a larger and more scientific scale.

"The old school of the army," said Gen. Wheeler, "was the training of the pioneers in the forests of the South and the mountains and plains of the West. Having lost our old school, we must start a new one, and we are following Europe to that extent.

"The American, because of the destruction of his vast forests, is no longer the rifleman he was in the days of Washington, Jackson, and up to the civil war. He must learn again.

"We are approaching the condition of Europe, where every man has to be taught the use of firearms by the authorities. Manoeuvres are necessary; they are the best sort of schooling for officers and men alikc.

"It is time the United States educated its troops regularly in the most modern tactics of warfare, and I believe the best way to do this is to drill them in manoeuvres. We must have educated soldiers, as well as officers, to keep pace with other nations.

"In almost every case where the commanders had had time in the civil war to manoeuvre their troops before their battles they won victories. The defeat at Shiloh was due to the undrilled condition of the troops, the wagon trains and columns becoming irretrievably tangled.

"The recent manoeuvres have been the greatest military school the United States has had since the war with Spain, and I hope that next year they will be held on even a larger scale."

SEND CASH TO UNCLE SAM.

Don't Send a Check or Stamps If You Want a Book from Him.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—The Government bureaus authorized to sell certain of their publications frequently have trouble with the remittances made to pay for books, pamphlets, or maps. Checks, foreign coin, (including Canadian coin,) and postage stamps are frequently sent to pay for books and maps.

Under the law, such payments cannot be received in exchange for its publications. In some cases the clerks who are required to send out the books and maps have simply bought the stamps and themselves turned the cash into the official coffers, so that the offending purchasers have received without detriment the publications ordered.

The clerks have, however, grown weary of investing their salaries in postage stamps which they cannot use and for which they must find buyers.

The offense of sending stamps has been in many cases aggravated by the remittance of amounts in excess of the price of the book or map. It has often happened that 6 cents in stamps has been offered in payment for a five-cent map.

In these cases it has been necessary to return 1 cent to the purchaser at a cost greater than its value. In most instances, perhaps, no change has been expected, but the rules of the Government bookkeeping have made it necessary to return the surplus amount.

MRS. PHIPPS LEAVES DENVER.

Starts for Pittsburg with Her Two Children.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., Sept. 17.—Mrs. Genevieve Chandler Phipps, the children, Dorothy and Helen, and Mrs. Phipps's maids left for Pittsburg this afternoon on the Burlington. Mrs. Phipps rode to the Union Station in Mr. Phipps's automobile, which was driven by the latter's chauffeur. Mrs. Charles Cooper, who accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Phipps on a European trip several months ago, was with them. Mrs. Phipps bade Mrs. Cooper good-bye at the station.

Before leaving Denver she had stripped the Phipps mansion of all her personal belongings not affected in any way by the settlement. She said that she intended to return to Denver, but was not sure when all papers drawn in connection with the settlement would be signed. Mr. Phipps remained in seclusion to-day.

AMERICAN IN CUBAN PRISON.

Charged with the Murder of a Native—State Department's Action.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—The attention of the State Department has been directed to the case of Rodriguez, an American citizen, imprisoned in Cuba, charged with the murder of a native named Bavato, and Minister Squiers has been instructed to watch the progress of the trial and report any necessity for action by the United States.

When an appeal was made to the State Department in Rodriguez's behalf, the determination was reached, as is usual in all such cases, to allow the legal proceedings to take their course. It was stated that only in the event of a denial of justice would diplomatic interference by the United States be warranted.

CORPORATIONS TO TEST LAW.

Oppose Massachusetts Excise Tax on Foreign Companies.

BOSTON, Sept. 17.—Two suits designed to test the constitutionality of the new corporation law of this State with respect to the levying of an excise tax upon foreign corporations were instituted to-day by Attorney General Parker, at the instigation of State Treasurer Bradford.

Both suits are against the Electric Storage Battery Company, a manufacturing corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey, and doing business in this Commonwealth. The action is taken in each case to enforce the collection of an excise tax imposed under the law of 1903, and also to recover the penalty provided for failure to furnish an annual report or statement of condition.

HURRICANE ON GRAND BANKS.

Many Mishaps Among the Gloucester Fishing Fleet.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Sept. 17.—The Gloucester schooners Henry M. Stanley and Horace B. Parker are here and the Landseer and Aerolite are at Bay of Bulls, having been forced into harbor by the equinoctial hurricane, which has raged on the Grand Banks for the past few days. They lost trawls and fishing gear and suffered considerable other damage.

They report many mishaps among the fleet. Three New Foundland Bank fishing vessels parted their cables and went adrift, and it is feared crippled badly many of the other craft.

DOWIE NOW MEEKLY TO TURN THE OTHER CHEEK

Modern Elijah Even Sees Virtue in the Newspapers.

HOST GATHERING AT ZION CITY

Will Hear Him Proclaim Himself Divinely Commissioned First Apostle of the Christian Catholic Church.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—When John Alexander Dowie proclaims himself to-morrow afternoon at a public meeting in Zion City as the "divinely commissioned first apostle of the Christian Catholic Church," it is believed by some that he will appear in a different rôle than he has yet assumed. It is said that he will no longer be "Dowie the fighter," but "Dowie the temporizer."

Years ago when he first promulgated his views that the only divinely sanctioned foundation for the Church was the apostolic, he said:

"The chief essential in apostleship is humbleness and lowliness of spirit. It is not how great a power I can become in the Church, but how can I efface myself. The apostle must be like Paul, who said: 'I am the chief of sinners.'"

Lately he said that he had not altered that view. The most ardent admirers of Dr. Dowie admit that at times this conception of the apostolic rôle has hardly seemed to fit. This feeling has been most pronounced when the General Overseer, at some public meeting, has shown himself in the most aggressive light, abusing his enemies, bristling with indignation, shouting the clarion of war—relentless war—against anything that did not agree with the Dowie idea of what was right and proper.

"The old Dr. Dowie will not appear under the apostolic rôle," said one of his friends to-night. "It will be a different Dowie—a more humble, chastened Dowie; a Dowie who is anxious to be placed in the proper light before the world, one who wishes to be no longer misunderstood, who will not give his enemies back blow for blow, but will rather turn the other cheek.

"His recent attitude toward the press is the most astonishing exhibition of this change of policy. At his meeting last Sunday he said that the press had done much and would continue to do much in the spread of true religion. He has expressed the hope that the press will try and see the good that is in him and discontinue false reports. This is not the way he has talked of the press in the past.

"It is the belief among those that know him best that Dowie the fighter will be succeeded by Dowie the temporizer. His recent financial difficulties have had something to do with it."

One of the Deacons of his Church said, however, that this idea was all wrong.

A man can be humble and lowly and still be a fighter," he explained.

"Dr. Dowie will not change his disposition one jot. He has always been meek and humble. He will always be a fighter."

Extraordinary preparations have been made for the reception of what is expected to be the largest crowd that has ever gathered in Zion City. The usual force of guards has been doubled. The tabernacle seats upward of 7,000 persons and double that number is expected to clamor for admission. The faithful have gathered from many parts of the United States and Canada, and some from abroad.

It is not expected that Dr. Dowie will appoint any of the eleven other apostles at the meeting to begin at 2:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, nor for several weeks. He has been preparing his people gradually for his announcement, and does not think it advisable to name the others at this time. It was said last night. The twelve will be known as an apostolic college, and will agree upon a deputy who "would bear the weight of office and be familiar with the details of the office in the event of Dr. Dowie being suddenly called away."

The apostles will have the authority to receive confessions and forgive sins, but will not require detailed and specific confessions, as in the Roman Church. This authority has already been exercised by Dr. Dowie and some of his leaders, members of the Church confessing when feeling the need of forgiveness and Divine intercession. The confessions are made privately.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP SAVED.

The Costa Rican, Long Aground in Jamaica, Reaches Newport News.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Sept. 17.—The British steamship Costa Rican, Capt. Woodward, which went aground at Kingston, Jamaica, June 16, and remained in that position thirty-nine days, was towed to the shipyard here to-day by the Merritt-Chapman tug Rescue.

It was necessary to use the vessel's pumps all the way up the coast, and extensive repairs will be made to put her in seaworthy condition, there being several holes amidship.

PERMIT FOR IROQUOIS THEATRE

But Memorial Association Will Still Try to Prevent Its Reopening.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—Although the converted Iroquois Theatre was licensed to-day to open as a music hall, the members of the Iroquois Memorial Association, who have been fighting the plan so long, have not despaired. Publicity, the clergy, the unions, and the reform organizations of the city will be the weapons to be used from now on until the death, as one man put it, "of the last man who lost his loved ones in that pit of death."

The declaration of this line of action was made by James J. Reynolds, President of the association, upon hearing that the license had been granted.

No time was lost in issuing the permit. The inspection was made at 11 A. M. by Acting Corporation Counsel William H. Sexton, Acting Building Commissioner L. E. Stanhope, and others. An exhaustive two hours' examination was made, and two hours later the license was made out in the City Collector's office under an approving opinion by Mr. Sexton.

ANTIETAM BATTLE MEMORIALS.

Monuments to Thirteen Pennsylvania Regiments Dedicated.

SHARPSBURG, Md., Sept. 17.—Survivors of thirteen Pennsylvania regiments that fought in the battle of Antietam, to-day, on the forty-second anniversary of the battle, dedicated monuments to the same number of regiments as memorials to the valor of their comrades. Prominent among those who participated were Gov. Samuel W. Pennypacker and Gen. Robert Shaw Oliver, Acting Secretary of War. Thousands of veterans, headed by Gen W. W. Blackmar, the new Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army, attended the exercises. Col. Joseph W. Hawley, who commanded the 124th Pennsylvania Volunteers, presided.

Gov. Pennypacker accepted the shafts in a brief speech and in turn transferred them to the United States, represented by Acting Secretary of War Oliver, in the place of President Roosevelt, who was unable to attend. The oration was delivered by the Rev. Dr. John Richards Boyle,

FOOLED JERSEY CONSTABLE.

Drummer Gave Him the Slip at Station and Left Note.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Sept. 17.—George W. Able of St. Louis, Mo., agent for a big machine manufacturing company in the West, who had been arrested and placed under $500 bail on charges preferred by Clyde Fetherman of Martin's Creek, escaped from Constable Nelson W. Teeter yesterday and has not been recaptured.

Fetherman appeared before Justice Smith on Thursday and swore out a warrant for Able, charging attempted alienation. Able was arrested and held in $500 bail. Constable Teeter started yesterday for Martin's Creek with Able, who wanted to find a bondsman. At the Pennsylvania Railroad station the prisoner watched his chance and gave the Constable the slip. Teeter stood on the platform as the train started for Easton, wondering whether Able were on board.

Recently some one handed him a note, which read:

"Mr. Teeter: Meet me at St. Louis.

"G. W. A."

Able had boarded at Fetherman's house in Martin's Creek for several weeks. After his arrest he made light of the charge against him.

SOCIETY AT TUXEDO.

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, N. Y., Sept. 17.—The delightful Autumn days in the Ramapo Valley are now at hand and a large crowd of well-known society folk are gathering in the colony. Tennis, golf, and dinner parties are now in vogue and those who came out to-day will remain over Sunday. Nearly all the cottagers have returned, having passed the Summer abroad or at the seashore.

An unusual amount of attention will be given to the horse show, which will open early in October, and Tuxedo day at the Orange County Horse Show at Goshen will be well patronized by the Tuxedo residents. The Hallowe'en ball on the last Friday in October will be an event which will attract the younger set, and already rooms are being engaged at the club house and every cottage will have its quota of guests.

Mr. and Mrs. William M. V. Hoffman, who passed the Summer abroad, are now occupying their new villa, and Mrs. W. H. Neilson Voss will arrive at her new villa on Wee Wah Lake early next week. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Halsey have opened their cottage near the club house. Mr. and Mrs. William B. Dinsmore, who lately arrived at the Waldo cottage, are building a new residence on West Lake Road. Other arrivals are Mr. and Mrs. George F. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. August Roesler, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel T. Worden, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Ronalds, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Burton Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Poor, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Walker.

Next week Mr. and Mrs. Howard Page, Mr. and Mrs. William Kent, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Spencer, and Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Juilliard will arrive at their Tuxedo mansions, having passed the Summer abroad.

Among those who are entertaining house parties for the week end are: Mr. and Mrs. William M. V. Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Halsey, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Condon, Mr. and Mrs. Edson Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. Price Collier, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Post, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Mitchell, and Mr. and Mrs. William K. Hamilton.

Mrs. Robert Waller entertained a party of fourteen at the club at lunch on on Thursday, followed by bridge. Among some of those present were Mrs. Richard Trimble, Miss Julia Henry, Miss Martin, Mrs. G. L. Ronalds, and others.

Miss Gibson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Rutledge Gibson, entertained a party of guests at the club during the week, among whom were Morgan Goetchins, Francis Stevens, A. E. Gallatin, Miss Waddington, and Miss Crosby.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. P. Robinson have taken apartments at the Winter Club. Other arrivals include Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Van Nostrand, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Godwin, Mrs. Russell Hoadly, James Brown Lord, George L. Scott, Richard Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Davis, G. T. Goldthwaite, Miss Crocker, Guy Cary, Charles E. Sampson, James Brown Potter, Gordon Douglas, Pierre Lorillard, L. E. Pierson, Miss Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Grannis, Lucius Wilmerding, Mr. and Mrs. Willard S. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford M. De Mott, Mr. Monroe, D. W. De Mott, and P. O. Mills.

J. Henry Smith, who passed the Summer in England, is expected to open Kincraig late in September and entertain numerous guests throughout the Autumn.

Mrs. C. L. Best has arrived at the small Garrison cottage for the season, and Mrs. John Wolfe has arrived from Newport. Mr. and Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting, who passed the Summer in Europe, arrived at their Tuxedo villa to-day.

Several large dinners were given at the clubhouse to-night, among those entertaining being Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Van Norrand, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Brown, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Waller.

THE NEWS OF NEWPORT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 17.—Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Mrs. F. O. French, and Willing Spencer returned this evening from a ten days' stay at Mr. Vanderbilt's camp at Lake Saranac, in the Adirondacks.

Mrs. M. Delancey Kountze is the guest of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt at Beaulieu.

R. Spreckels of California is the guest of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs at Rosecliff.

Miss Susan Travers has returned to New York, as also has Miss Catherine Cameron, who has been visiting Miss May Van Alen and Mrs. J. Ellis Hoffman.

Mrs. Henry R. Taylor of New York is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor.

Ex-Commodore Lewis Cass Ledyard has returned to his villa, on Ridge Road, from a visit to New York.

Cornelius Vanderbilt arrived to-day on the steam yacht Mirage from New York.

Mrs. Maurice La Montagne, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Frederick P. Garrettson, returned to New York to-day.

Lispenard Stewart left to-day for a hunting trip in Canada, and will later go to St. Louis to visit the World's Fair. He has closed his cottage here for the season.

Miss Serena Rhinelander closed her Pinard cottage to-day, and left for New London.

Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Bush, who have been visiting Mrs. J. R. Bush at Indian Spring, returned to-day to New York.

Mrs. J. F. D. Lanier, who has been occupying the Tiffany cottage, left to-day for New York, and will sail Tuesday for Europe.

James J. Van Alen gave a dinner to-night at Wakehurst in honor of his guests, Mrs. H. Jaffray and Miss H. P. Jaffray of Paris. Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Charles B. Hillhouse, and Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, Jr., also gave dinners.

Cosby-Dousman Engagement Announced

Cards are out for the wedding of Miss Virginia Rolette Dousman to Arthur Fortunatus Cosby of this city on Oct. 1 at Villa Louis, Prairie du Chien, Wis., the seat of the Dousman homestead, which is unique in that it is built on an Indian mound on an island in the Mississippi River. The Astors still hold much land in Prairie du Chien, which was a post in the old fur trading days. Miss Dousman's grandfather, Col. H. L. Dousman, was connected with the original John Jacob Astor in the North American Fur Trading Company. Mr. Cosby was an Assistant Corporation Counsel under Mayor Low, and was with the Rough Riders during the Spanish-American war.

F. W. Glen Says Andrew Carnegie Offered Millions for It.

ROOSEVELT AND LAURIER, TOO

Chief Conspirator Tells a Sarcastic Ottawa Editor About Deep Scheme for Continental Union.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Sept. 17.—That Andrew Carnegie and others stood ready to supply the millions necessary to bring about Canadian independence as a step toward a continental union is the statement made by F. W. Glen of New York, organizer of the Continental Reciprocity League. The statement is contained in the following letter, written by Mr. Glen to the editor of The Evening Journal of this city, and giving the history of the Continental Union League project:

"In 1893, with the support of Charles A. Dana, Andrew Carnegie, John Jacob Astor, Ethan Allen, Warner Miller, Edward Lauterbach, William C. Whitney, Orlando B. Potter, Horace Porter, John Hay, Theodore Roosevelt, Elihu Root, Oswald Ottendorfer, Cornelius N. Bliss, John D. Long, John B. Foraker, Knute Nelson, Jacob Gallinger, Roswell P. Flower, Joseph John O'Donohue, Chauncey M. Depew, John P. Jones, William Walter Phelps, Gen. Butterfield, Gen. Henry W. Slocum, Gen. James H. Wilson, Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, Charles Francis Adams, Oliver Ames, Seth Low, Bourke Cockran, John C. McGuire, Dennis O'Brien, Charles L. Tiffany, John Claflin, Nathan Straus, and Samuel Spencer, I organized the National Continental Union League for the purpose of promoting union by peaceful, lawful, honorable, and generous means.

"Upon the 4th day of November, 1893, Wilfrid Laurier held a meeting of his friends in Montreal and that meeting sent a delegation to New York to ask funds of the National Continental Union League for the elections which it was supposed would take place in the Spring of 1894. Israel J. Tarte, Honore Mercier, J. E. Robidoux, Louis Joseph Papineau, and Mr. Langelier were on the delegation, and Sir Oliver Mowat was represented by John Morrison of Toronto.

"These gentlemen met Mr. Dana, Mr. Carnegie, and myself in the office of The Sun on Nov. 6. Mr. Tarte asked as a beginning for $50,000 with which to purchase Le Monde, a newspaper, and Mr. Morrison desired $50,000 to purchase a labor paper in Toronto.

"Mr. Carnegie asked Mr. Tarte if he was prepared to pledge the Liberal Party to advocate the independence of Canada as a prelude to continental union.

"Mr. Tarte: 'If you furnished them with money for the elections they would do so if they were successful in the elections. Mr. Morrison agreed with Mr. Tarte.

"Mr. Carnegie then asked Honore Mercier if he would contest the Province of Quebec in favor of the independence of Canada as a prelude to continental union. He replied 'Yes.'

"Mr. Carnegie asked Mr. Tarte how much it would require to secure continental union. Mr. Tarte replied $1,000,000. Mr. Carnegie replied that if he was sure that amount would do it he would give it himself.

"On the following day I was instructed by Mr. Carnegie to draft a letter to Honore Mercier informing him that he could have any amount necessary to carry the Province of Quebec. I drafted as strong a letter as the English language would permit, addressed to Honore Mercier, and Mr. Carnegie signed it without the slightest hesitation. I then asked Mr. Dana to sign it, and then sign it myself.

"Before Mr. Dana signed it, he said: 'Mr. Glen, this is a blank check perhaps for millions, but if Mr. Carnegie can afford to sign it, I can,' and he did so, and then I signed it and mailed it to Mr. Mercier.

"All of the parties except Mr. Dana and Mr. Mercier are still alive."

The letter was sent to the editor of The Journal under peculiar circumstances. Mr. Glen recently sent out invitations to prominent Canadians to join his new Continental Reciprocity League. One was received by the editor of The Evening Journal, who made the fact public and editorially added: "Reciprocity? What's that? They used to talk about it in the Dark Ages. Glen ought to change his name to Rip Van Winkle."

Mr. Glen thereupon wrote the letter already quoted to the editor, challenging him to prove his honesty and independence by publishing it.

WUXTRY! GREAT MYSTERY!

False Jewels and Letter (Also False, Perhaps) Found Up Town.

A negro boy, racing up the elevated station steps at Forty-second Street and Sixth Avenue yesterday afternoon, dropped a little box of the kind that jewelers use. Policeman Lurker got it and took it to the Tenderloin Station. In it was a lot of jewelry of the kind that glitters and goes no further. Also there was this letter:

"Dear She: Sorry to miss you; see Sunday's Herald personal for appointment. Hope you can be there without that ugly chaperone. Inclosed is draft for $1,000; also, samples of some cheap stuff. It is as good as the better kind for our purpose; and with $3,000 worth we can pay all expenses of the yacht, even if we have to carry twelve in crew. HE."

The draft purported to be one on J. P. Morgan & Co. for $1,000 and was made payable to bearer by "William W. Astor."

About that time the newspapers began to receive word from somebody who affected a press agent's voice that there was "a good story" at the Tenderloin Station.

JAKE'S LITTLE SURPRISE.

Shows Zebadiah Hawkins That a Mule Sometimes Kicks Before.

Zebadiah Hawkins of 243 West Twenty-second Street, who works for Hunter & Trinin of Fulton Market, drove a load of meat up to the Casino in Central Park yesterday, hitched Jake, the mule, to a post and started with a basket toward the kitchen.

As Zebadiah reached the building, Jake jumped once into the air. He broke the strap with which he was tied, and started to run. Hawkins saw the move in time, and, dropping his basket, caught the mule by the bridle. This Jake did not appreciate, so he jumped into the air again, and tried to kick away the wagon.

Then Jake and Zebadiah waltzed round and round the Concourse until the guests at the Casino left their seats to watch the performance.

Suddenly Jake lifted his right foreleg. Something thereupon struck Hawkins, and he fell to the ground. Attendants interfered at this point and the show came to a close. Zebadiah Hawkins saying, as an ambulance surgeon patched up the spot where Jake had "landed," that he never did know a mule until now who kicked both before and behind.

NEW ORPHEUM OPENS IN HARLEM.

First Offering Is Musical Comedy Based on War in Far East.

After many delays the New Orpheum Music Hall in East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street opened last night with a musical extravaganza called "The Japskys." The book is by Louis de Lange and the music by Billy Taylor.

The scenes are laid in Russia, Japan, and Korea. The story tells the "true cause of the present unpleasantness between the Mikado and the Czar." The costumes are handsome, the stage setting novel, and there are some comely girls in the chorus.

POISONING LARCHMONT DOGS.

Rewards Out for Culprits' Detection—Prominent Man Mentioned.

Special to The New York Times.

LARCHMONT, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Rewards aggregating nearly a thousand dollars for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who are at present poisoning valuable dogs belonging to residents of Larchmont have been offered by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the owners of the dead dogs. In addition, the officers of the society have engaged a detective to run down the guilty persons. So far no arrest has been made, but it is rumored that suspicion points to a member of a prominent family.

A valuable spotted coach dog belonging to A. Baudouine of the Manor was poisoned a few days ago with paris green. Several other dogs in Mr. Baudouine's neighborhood suffered a similar fate. Many of the residents did not pay much attention to the situation until "Mr. Dooley," the faithful police dog who has patrolled the streets of the Manor at night and guarded the Summer homes against intruders, was poisoned. Then the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals took up the case.

"Mr. Dooley" was known to all the children of Larchmont, and was beloved by them all. When he died several of the children called to see his body and brought handfuls of wild flowers to cover him with. There are dozens of blue ribbon dogs in Larchmont, valued at thousands of dollars.

VESSELS LIMPING HOME.

Many Hurt, Some Missing After Thursday's Cyclone.

A long procession of sailing vessels limped into the harbor yesterday to testify to rough experiences along the coast during the West Indian cyclone that raged about the city on Thursday. From the appearance of a number of vessels that reached here it seems doubtful whether some that were out in the gale will ever again make port.

A number of small Fulton Market fishing schooners have not been heard from since the gale, but no great fear will be felt for them even if they are not reported for two weeks. In the gale of a year ago three of them were lost with all aboard.

The steamship Algonquin, from Jacksonville, which arrived yesterday, brought the news of having passed the schooner Emily F. Northam off Cape Romaine, abandoned, waterlogged and on fire, with both masts standing, loaded with lumber. The Northam was probably worsted by the gale and abandoned by her crew, who set her afire before leaving.

A telegram to the Maritime Exchange told of the destruction by fire at sea several days ago of the bark James A. Wright. The vessel, one of the best known of her kind on the coast, sailed from Philadelphia for Havana several weeks ago. Last week she drove ashore at Nassau, where she remained for ten hours. She then resumed her voyage, only to be stranded again on one of the Bahama reefs. After being floated from there she was not again heard of until yesterday. Nothing is known of her crew.

CALVE MAY SING IN CONCERT.

Herbert Guarantees Her Immunity from Managerial Quarrels.

Nelson Roberts, manager of Victor Herbert's Orchestra, is trying to engage Mme. Emma Calve for a tour of the large cities in this country. If she accepts the offer, says Mr. Roberts, she will get more money out of the forty concerts than if she sang an entire season in grand opera.

"And," adds the announcement sent out by the managers, "she is assured of peace of mind. No managerial quarrels will occur."

DAVID B. POWELL DEAD.

Fulfills Prophecy of Dying on Anniversary of Wife's Death.

NAVY DEPARTMENT ASKS BIDS FOR BATTLESHIP

New Hampshire, 16,000-Ton Craft, Next to be Built.

SPEED OF EIGHTEEN KNOTS

Vessel Will Have 16,500 Horse Power—Four 12-Inch and Eight 8-Inch Guns.

The various shipbuilding concerns which are expected to bid for the construction of the 16,000-ton battleship New Hampshire, have received circulars from the Navy Department defining the chief characteristics of the new ship. The plans show a vessel 450 feet long, with an extreme breadth at the load water line of 76.10 feet, and a mean draft to bottom of the keel not to exceed 24.6 feet.

It is also provided that the new battleship shall have a coal capacity of 2,350 tons, and that she must able to attain a speed of 18 knots, with a premium for increase and a penalty for decrease, while, should the rate of speed fall below 17½ knots, the vessel may be accepted at a reduced price or rejected altogether by the Government.

As in all great vessels of the New Hampshire class, the point of greatest interest is her armament. The main battery will consist of four breech-loading 12-inch rifles, which will be located in electrically controlled elliptical turrets fore and aft, each with an arc of fire of about 270 degrees. There will be eight 8-inch guns, which will also be in pairs, and located in turrets controlled in the same manner as the 12-inch turrets. These turrets will be located two on each beam, at each end of the superstructure. There will be twelve 7-inch guns, which will be arranged in broadside on pedestal mounts, will be protected by 7-inch armors, each gun being isolated by splinter bulkheads of nickel steel from one to two inches in thickness. The forward and after 7-inch guns will be arranged to fire ahead and astern respectively, while the other guns of this calibre will have the usual broadside train.

The guns constituting the secondary battery will have a large arc of unobstructed fire, and will consist of 20 three-inch, 12 three-pound, and 4 one-pound semi-automatic guns, 2 three-inch field guns, 2 machine guns, and 2 automatic guns, all of the pieces to be located in commanding positions. Four torpedo tubes, two each in forward and after submerged torpedo rooms, will also be installed.

A complete belt of armor, 9.3 feet wide and having a thickness of 9 inches for about 253 feet amidships and gradually decreasing to 4 inches at the stem and stern, will protect the hull at the water line. The lower casemate armor will extend to a point abreast the twelve-inch barbettes, and will reach from the top of the waterline belt to the lower edge of the seven-inch gun ports on the gun decks, and will be 7 inches thick. The armor surrounding the seven-inch guns will also be 7 inches thick. The twelve-inch turrets will be protected by a front plate 12 inches, a rear plate 8 inches, and a top plate 2½ inches thick. The armor protecting the eight-inch and other guns will be proportionately thick.

The New Hampshire's engines will be of the vertical twin-screw, four-cylinder, triple-expansion type, and will have an indicated horse power of about 16,500. The vessel will be fitted as a flagship, and will carry a complement of 41 officers, 815 men, and 60 marines.

SLEUTH'S SON A SLEUTH ALSO.

Young Gerald Cryster Traces Lad Who Stole His Bicycle.

"You certainly are a chip of the old block," said Magistrate Cornell in the Yorkville Court yesterday, after fifteen-year-old Gerard Crystar told how he had traced his stolen bicycle and secured the arrest of the boy he accused of stealing it. Gerald's father is Detective Sergeant Thomas Crystar of Inspector McClusky's staff. The defendant, Louis Jacobs of 55 Second Avenue, pleaded guilty, and was held for trial under $500 bail.

Gerald discovered the theft of his bicycle two days ago. With no clue as to the identity of the thief, he made inquiries of people whom he met, and finally learned that a bicycle similar to the one stolen had been seen in the vicinity of Jacobs's home. Learning where the nearest second hand store was, the boy then took up his vigil across the street, and early yesterday morning was rewarded by seeing young Jacobs trundle his bicycle into the store. Gerald called a policeman and caused the arrest.

BANKERS TAKE A RIVER TRIP.

Fifteen Hundred of Them Visit Military Academy at West Point.

As the guests of the National Bank of North America nearly 1,500 members of the American Bankers' Association, with their families and friends, took a sail up the Hudson to West Point yesterday. The C. W. Morse carried the party up and a special train brought them back.

The cadets at the Military Academy turned out for inspection at 2 o'clock in honor of the visitors. They went through the usual drill, vastly to the delight of the assembled spectators, most of whom had never been to West Point before. The visitors also watched with great interest the preliminary manoeuvres of the academy football squad, which had its first line-up of the season yesterday. Souvenirs were distributed, most of them little booklets, gotten out by the National Bank of North America, containing pictures of New York and scenes along the Hudson.

SLOCUM COMMISSION RESUMES.

Deckhand Tells About the Progress of the Fire.

Michael T. Phelan, a deck hand on the tugboat Walter Tracy, which followed the General Slocum while that vessel was afire, was a witness yesterday before the Federal Commission appointed to investigate the disaster. The commission resumed the taking of testimony at the office of the United States Steamboat Inspection Service, in the Whitehall Building. Phelan's testimony had to do with the handling of the fire and the progress of it.

The commission has finished looking over the reports of the local inspectors on their reinspections of harbor crafts. In the commission's final report will be embodied 200 reports on the inspections and reinspections. It will be shown that, although the vessels had two months from the time of the Slocum disaster to comply with the law, many were still in such bad condition at the time of reinspection that they were unfit to carry one-half their licensed capacity. Other, it will be alleged, should not have received papers at all.

Hughes-Faul Wedding.

Miss L. Alice Hughes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Hughes of 884 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn, and Arthur Faul, also of that borough, were married on Wednesday evening at the home of the bride's parents. The bride was attended by Miss Ada B. Clements as maid of honor, and Mr. Faul's best man was his brother, William A. Faul. The Rev. Dr. F. W. Norris, rector of St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal Church, officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Faul are now on a trip through the South.

BUILDER BEATEN AND ROBBED.

Crowd Followed Him to Saloon—Hadn't Paid Men.

Louis Wallin, a contractor and builder of 36 Malta Street, Brooklyn, called up Police Headquarters yesterday afternoon on the telephone from the saloon at Snedicker and Sutter Avenues.

"I've just been beaten and robbed," he said, "and the crowd is breaking into the saloon now to get at me."

The reserves from the Liberty Avenue Police Station were hurried to the saloon. They found it surrounded by a crowd of men yelling for Wallin's blood. A vigorous use of nightsticks put them to flight. Wallin was found inside in a state of collapse. He said he was driving to some new buildings which he is building in the Brownsville section when his carriage was stopped by some men, who dragged him from his seat and beat him. His pockets were rifled, he said, and his gold watch and chain taken.

Wallin described two of his assailants as Samuel and Louis Laprodes of 1,683 Avenue A, Manhattan. They were arrested, charged with assault and highway robbery. The men declared that they and other men had worked for Wallin, and that he would not pay them. Wallin admitted this, but said that he meant to pay the men.

WATCHMAN'S MONEY WAITING.

When O'Farrell Died He Had $5,000—No Claimant.

The friends of Patrick O'Farrell, for thirty years a watchman along the Brooklyn water front, are anxious to obtain the addresses of his two married daughters. O'Farrell, who lived very frugally, died nearly six weeks ago, in a little room in the building at the foot of Washington Street, Brooklyn. On him were found $965.53 and a bank book showing deposits aggregating about $4,000. The money is in the hands of the Coroner and so far no one has put in a claim for it.

According to one of O'Farrell's friends, he has two married daughters somewhere in the West. O'Farrell did not know their addresses. Efforts to find them have been made, but so far nothing has been heard from them. O'Farrell came to this country about thirty-five years ago from County Longford, Ireland. He was last employed at the Brooklyn anchorage of the new Manhattan Bridge.

JAP CAMERA FIENDS FAILED.

Wanted to Snap Washington Statue from Steps of Morgan's Office.

Two Japanese stopped in front of the Washington Statue on the steps of the United States Sub-Treasury Building yesterday morning and decided to take a photograph. Then they walked across to the southeast corner of Broad and Wall Streets and unlimbered a camera. The outfit was an expensive one, including an aluminium tripod that folded into a very small space.

They set up the tripod and were training the camera when the law intervened. Four Detective Sergeants walked up, placed their heavy hands upon the surprised little men, and ordered them to quit. They were standing right at the foot of the steps that lead up to J. P. Morgan's office. A crowd gathered while, under guard of the Detective Sergeants, the men put their camera away. The biggest detective then placed his hand on the shoulder of the smallest Jap, and giving him a push down the incline of the Broad Street walk, said, "Go on, now." They obeyed instructions.

MUSICIANS FORM NEW UNION.

Old One, Incorporated, Could Be Sued—Mistake Now Rectified.

On account of being chartered under the laws of this State, the Musical Mutual Protective Union since it joined the American Federation of Musicians, over a year ago, has been in an awkward position when ordered by the National body to declare a strike or discipline its members for violation of union rules. Its charter rendering it an incorporated body, it is liable to be sued for damages in such cases, and twice has got into trouble in this way.

In order to be able to conform to trades union rules, and at the same time be free from outrage suits, the union has decided to form a separate trades union body with no State charter. This was done at a meeting of the Musical Mutual Protective Union last week. The new union is composed of the members of the Musical Mutual Protective Union, which will, however, continue to have a nominal existence.

TELLS HOW HE ESCAPED.

Fields Simulated Keeper's Voice—Criminal Courts Officers Suspended.

Judge McMahon and Chief Clerk Carroll of the Court of General Sessions, in the course of an investigation yesterday, obtained some further light on the circumstances under which William J. Fields, alias Gillespie, who escaped from the Criminal Courts Building on Friday afternoon and was captured in Newark the same evening, succeeded in getting away. Fields admitted that he had fooled the court officers by simulating the voice of one of them when he was remanded. He thus was left alone on the stairs leading to the detention pen.

As soon as Fields saw the coast clear, he returned up stairs, and, passing through the corridor, at the top of the stairway reached a door leading to the vestibule of the first mezzanine floor. This door, according to rules, should be kept locked. Fields found it open. He went out into the vestibule, walked calmly down stairs, and out of the Criminal Courts Building by way of the main entrance. Then he went to Newark, where he was arrested.

Court Officers Degnan and Frank, who were responsible for Fields, have been suspended.

MAY ABANDON FAMOUS FORTS.

Posts Important in Indian Warfare Days Now Useless, Says Sumner.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Major Gen. S. S. Sumner, commanding the Southwestern Division, comprising the Departments of Texas and the Colorado, in his annual report, makes some radical recommendations looking to the abandonment of military posts in that division regarded as of the greatest importance in the old days of Indian warfare.

Some posts he wishes to be brought up to date in the matter of water supply and other conveniences, as in the case of Fort Huachuca. He wants this post enlarged, and if that is done he suggests the abandonment of Fort Grant, which is too distant from the railroad. Fort Clark is said to be in a tumble-down condition, ten miles from the railroad on a limestone ledge and in a most uncomfortable position, so Gen. Sumner says that for strategic reasons it would seem well to abandon the site of Fort Clark and establish a post of like size near the present site of Camp Eagle Pass.

Touching Fort Ringgold, on the Rio Grande, opposite Camargo, it is said that the twenty-mile road connecting it with Havana on the railroad is practically impassable in wet weather, so Gen. Sumner recommends that Fort Ringgold be abandoned at an early date and the garrisons at Fort Brown and Fort McIntosh be correspondingly increased.

If these suggestions are adopted there will be a line of posts on the Mexican border covering all rail communication between the United States and Mexico. Other posts that might be abandoned are Forts Wingate and Duchesne, while Fort Apache is said to be too remote and expensive to maintain at full strength and should be reduced to a two troop post.

U. S. S. CONNECTICUT READY FOR LAUNCHING

WAYS ARE ALREADY GREASED

Interest Keen in Race with the Louisiana's Builders—Chattanooga Nearly Ready for China Trip.

The big battleship Connecticut, building at the New York Navy Yard, is practically ready for launching. In fact, it is said the vessel could be launched on twenty-four hours' notice. All of the skeleton framework and the starboard gangway for the workmen, which has hidden the form of the hull from view since the work of construction began, has been taken down, and visitors can obtain a good idea how a battleship, from keel up, minus her turrets, conning towers, and superstructure, looks. The great vessel has been examined by many experts recently, and the unanimous verdict is that she is destined to prove one of the most formidable fighting machines ever constructed.

Yesterday, in order to make a solid bed for the extension of the launching ways, about 6,000 cubic yards of stone were thrown into the slip, about forty feet from the stern. The cradles and the sliding ways down which the battleship will go, when she plunges for the first time into the water, were built last week. In order to make the sliding ways fit to receive the soft soap that is to lubricate the ways, they have been swabbed with barrels of melted tallow. To apply this tallow scores of men were employed, who for hours at a time lay on their backs.

The great tubular boilers are now being put into the vessel, and the triple-expansion engines, which have been built at the navy yard under the supervision of the engineering department, have had all their parts and connections tried, and are now being taken apart again, so that they will be ready to install as soon as the great ship is put afloat. The erection of the turrets has also begun, and the bases of them may be seen on large blocks a little distance from the ship.

Interest in the race in construction that the Navy Department is making, in the building of the Connecticut, with the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, which is building the Louisiana, is as keen as ever. The percentage of completion for the Connecticut is 60 and for the Louisiana 56.3, according to the latest report.

The torpedo boat O'Brien is nearly ready to make another attempt to have the official trial required by the Act of Congress. The coal to be used at the trial has been sent on to Newport, and the vessel herself will be ready to leave the Navy Yard in a few days. After reaching Newport, the Board of Officers will prepare her for the sea trial as proposed. Since her last attempt the boat has undergone many changes, including new watertanks, a readjustment of the blower engines, new girders to arrest the vibrations, &c.

The sheathed cruiser Chattanooga, sister ship to the Denver, which went into commission last May, continued and completed the dock trial of her machinery this week. Her equipment, stores and provisions are being collected at the Navy Yard, and it is expected that she will be put into commission in about ten days, and soon afterward she will start for China, where she will do a three years' cruise.

The Secretary of the Navy has given orders that Sept. 29, after 10 A. M., shall be a holiday at the local Navy Yard. This will enable the workmen to see the launching of the Connecticut, and they are rejoicing greatly.

CAN EXPLODES IN HIS HAND.

Two Hurt When Chemicals Blow Up—One May Lose His Sight.

Two men were injured by the explosion of a can of chemicals in the Laurel Rubber Company's works at 554 to 562 West Twenty-fifth Street, yesterday afternoon. The injured are Frank A. Siebel, the Superintendent, who lives at Madison, N. J., and Francis Roselli of 218 West Twenty-seventh Street. Siebel was seriously hurt, his eyes being burned so severely that he may lose his sight. Roselli was only slightly burned about the face and hands. Both were taken to the New York Hospital.

There is some doubt as to what sort of chemicals exploded. A chemist has been making some experiments on the second floor of the building, but what they were nobody about the factory knew. He used a tin can, which was corked up, and, according to witnesses, the Superintendent picked up the can out of curiosity. The explosion followed, and fragments of the can as well as the chemicals were blown into Siebel's face. Roselli, who was near him, was also struck by some of the flying fragments.

There was a lot of excitement among the twenty persons employed in the factory. A fire alarm was turned in, but the damage was not over $50.

Philadelphian Supposed Suicide.

Dead for several hours, with his room tightly closed, and filled with gas, the body of Harry Hayder, twenty-eight years old, a Philadelphia perfumery salesman, was found yesterday in the Hotel Eiseman at Sixth Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street. He had lived there about a year. Although suicide is indicated by the circumstances, John Rent, clerk of the house, who saw Hayder alive last, says that he seemed then not to be dissatisfied with life. He was thought to have a good position and always seemed to have money.

Women's Evening High School.

The New York Evening High School for Women, at 209 East Forty-sixth Street, offers free instruction in English, mathematics, French, German, Spanish, and Latin to women preparing for Regents, college entrance, and civil service examination. Classes under competent instructors are also being formed in chemistry, physiology, drawing, stenography, and bookkeeping. English history and civics will be taught this year for the first time. Registration is going on every evening from 7 to 9 o'clock.

Gave Up Parrot to Pay Fine.

John Mangan of 464 West One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street and his parrot were before Magistrate Crane in the Harlem Police Court yesterday. Mangan was charged with intoxication and disorderly conduct and the parrot's offense was being in the company of Mangan. Mangan was unable to pay a fine of $5, so a policeman paid it for him and Mangan gave the policeman the parrot.

Chain Stops Passage Through Building.

The building at 10 Wall Street stretches through to Pine Street, and, like many of the buildings in the financial district, is much used as a thoroughfare by persons who do not intend to stop in the building. Yesterday a chain was stretched across the hallway and kept there all day, the purpose being to close up the thoroughfare occasionally, to prevent it becoming public under the "common law."

Schoolship St. Mary's at New London.

The schoolship St. Mary's, which arrived off Fisher's Island Thursday night, after her foreign cruise, instead of proceeding directly to her anchorage at Glen Cove, as was expected, has put into New London harbor and will remain there until next Tuesday. A letter to this effect was received by the Secretary of the Board of Education yesterday.

HORSE SHOW AT HIGHLAWN.

Annual Lenox Exhibition Held on W. D. Sloane's Country Estate.

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Sept. 17.—The sixth annual Lenox horse show to-day at Highlawn Farm, William D. Sloane's country estate, was the largest and most successful exhibition which has been held by the Lenox Horse Show Association. Twenty-one classes were judged, and in order to successfully carry out the long programme, the judging began at 10 o'clock, when the farm pairs were called into the ring. All the classes were well filled, and particular interest centred in the saddle classes, which formed a prominent feature of the show.

The principal winner was W. D. Sloane, whose entries received five first prizes, five seconds, two thirds, and one fourth. F. K. Sturges took three firsts and three seconds, Giraud Foster three firsts, two seconds, two thirds, and two fourths, and Miss Marian Haven, daughter of George G. Haven, won two firsts and a third prize. Miss Bloodgood won two blue ribbons with her chestnut mare Paula.

The closest competition of the day was in the combination riding and driving class, which had twenty-one entries, and was won by Miss Bloodgood's chestnut mare Paula, with Miss C. A. Barnes's bride second, and Charles Lanier's Courier third. During the judging of this class Miss Nora Iasigi, the daughter of Mrs. Oscar Iasigi of Boston, was kicked in the side by her entry and knocked down between the shafts. Although her injuries were painful, Miss Iasigi insisted on appearing in the ring later when another class was exhibited.

Black Oak, owned by C. G. Gilmore of New York, was awarded first blue ribbon in the competition for jumpers. In the driving competition the various entries were driven by Miss Heloise Meyer, sister of the American Ambassador to London; Miss Rosamund Dixey and Miss Nora Iasigi of Boston, and Miss Dix and Miss C. Harriman of New York. The first prize was awarded to Miss Harriman.

Among the prominent persons present were the Duke of Newcastle, Sir Mortimer and Lady Durand, Baron and Baroness Speck von Sternburg, members of the British and German Embassies; Minister Van Swindert of the Netherlands, Robert W. Paterson, Samuel Russell, Major F. C. Grugan, William Pollock, J. Egmont Schermerhorn, Charles Astor Bristed, Charles Lanier, William Douglas Sloane, Girard Foster, John E. Alexander, Miss Kate Cary, Frank K. Sturgis, Capt. John S. Barnes, Newbold Morris, William A. Read, J. Montgomery Hare, George W. Folsom, Mrs. Robert Winthrop, David Lydig, George Westinghouse, Edward R. Wharton, George G. Haven, John E. Parsons, Richard C. Dixey, Miss Clementine Furniss, Lindsey Fairfax, Mrs. William C. Wharton, John Sloane, T. M. Adams, J. Frederic Schenck, Dr. William Armstrong, Henry H. Fease, Morris K. Jessup, Dr. Henry C. Haven, H. K. Bloodgood, and Dr. W. Gilman Thompson.

WIDOWER VAN NOTE DEAD.

Suicide, Maybe—Grand Jury Was Looking Up Wife's Death.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS, N. J., Sept. 17.—Joseph Van Note, whose wife, Julia, was drowned in the bay on June 5, was found dead in bed at his home in Belford, three and a half miles from this place today. Mr. Budlong, who examined the body, says he thinks the man committed suicide by taking some kind of poison. Van Note had been dead for several days, the doctor said.

Van Note and his wife left their home in a launch to visit friends at the Highlands of Navesink on Sunday, June 5. The same evening Van Note returned home alone and reported that his wife had been drowned. Her body was found the next day. There were some bruises on it. When Coroner Andrews went to Van Note's house to make inquiries he found that the man had gone away. Van Note returned on June 11 and was placed under arrest. An inquest was held and the jury found that Mrs. Van Note came to her death by accidental drowning.

Van Note was released, but the matter has since been investigated by the Grand Jury, which is now in session. Subpoenas had been issued for witnesses in the case, and this fact was known to Van Note. It was expected that the Grand Jury would make some report on the case on Monday next, when it will hand up any indictments that it may find.

Coroner Bedle said to-night that the cause of the man's death was not yet determined, but the supposition was that he had committed suicide.

SHOTGUNS FOR ITHACA DOGS.

All Found Loose on Streets at Night to be Killed.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 17.—In the effort to prevent an epidemic of rabies here the local Health Department to-day issued an order that all dogs found on the streets after 6 o'clock to-night be killed.

The order was issued because many dogs that have been kept chained during the day have been allowed to run loose at night. Special officers armed with shot guns were detailed to enforce the new rule.

BROOKLYN TAILOR A SUICIDE.

Victim of Heart Disease, Dickert Jumps from Window.

Bernard Dickert, a tailor who lived at 138 Cook Street, Brooklyn, committed suicide last night by jumping from a window in his apartment onto an iron picket fence three stories below. He was instantly killed.

For three years Mr. Dickert had suffered from heart disease, and it was despondency as a result of his affliction that caused him to end his life. He is survived by a widow and three children.

Accuses Former Employers of Larceny.

Henry Langraff of 208 East Eighteenth Street and Thomas H. Lemhoff of 142 East Sixteenth Street, President and manager, respectively, of the Manhattan Protective Association, at 103 East Seventeenth Street, were arrested last night on complaint of Thomas Donahue of 214 East Twenty-fifth Street, who charges the men with grand larceny. Donahue says he was formerly employed as a watchman by the men, and on Thursday night left his coat, containing $300, in the office. When he returned the money, he alleges, was gone.

Lakewood Engineer in Insane Ward.

A man named Zah Dennis, forty-three years old, of Lakewood, N. J., a civil engineer, was taken to Bellevue psycopathic ward by a physician last night. He mentioned as his friend J. S. Avery of Mount Vernon, and the physician said the man had been brought down from that place. Dr. Gregory said the man was only temporarily in the pavilion, and would be taken away probably to-morrow to be placed in a private sanitarium.

Auto Owner Threatened Policeman.

Bicycle Policeman Kiely of the Tremont Station was at Washington and Tremont Avenues in the Bronx last night when he saw an automobile pass at a lively pace. He followed and placed the chauffeur, Joseph Romero, under arrest. A man who sat with Romero said he was Alex W. Wood of 40 Riverside Drive. Mr. Wood is said to have shouted at Kiely: "You will go out the first of October to make room for a good policeman."

E. L. BOURNE A SUICIDE.

Philadelphia Insurance Man Shoots Himself at Belgrade Lake, Me.

Special to The New York Times.

AUGUSTA, Me., Sept. 17.—E. L. Bourne, an insurance man of Philadelphia, committed suicide by shooting at the Belgrade Hotel, at Belgrade Lake, to-day. He had been a sufferer from rheumatism for some time, and had an attendant constantly with him until a few days ago, when he dismissed him.

He came here about three years ago and began the construction of a house at Belgrade Lake, on which he had already expended $12,000.

The suicide is ascribed to temporary insanity due to illness.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 17.—Edward L. Bourne was a member of the firm of Bourne & Durham, general agents of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, with offices in the Stephen Girard Building. He was a widower, fifty-two years of age, and leaves a son and a daughter.

Mr. Bourne was very ill when he left Philadelphia on his vacation. Half a dozen years ago his condition was such that he sought a retreat at Burn Brae, a sanitarium near Clifton Heights. There he remained some months, and was finally discharged as cured. He resumed active business, but excessive nervousness soon returned, and he was forced virtually to abandon his commercial affairs.

While a resident of this city he lived at the Hotel Walton. Lately he had made his home at the Manhattan Hotel, New York. He had amassed a considerable fortune.

STEEPLECHASE JOCKEY KILLED

Patrick Lyons, Ejected from Car, Run Down by Another.

Patrick Lyons, a steeplechase jockey, who lived at 107 Avenue I, Bayonne, N. J., was run over and fatally injured by a Smith Street trolley car of the Coney Island and Brooklyn Railroad Company at Coney Island Avenue and Avenue P early yesterday morning. The jockey died before the ambulance surgeon arrived.

Lyons was on his way to Manhattan and had refused to pay the second fare, and as a result was ejected from the car. He was crossing the tracks when Smith Street Car No. 565, bound for Coney Island, struck him. Daniel T. Topey, the motorman, was arrested on a charge of homicide, and later released, bail being furnished by an official of the railroad company.

Lyons was twenty-six years old, and was well known by patrons of the metropolitan race tracks.

MITCHELL READY FOR TRIAL.

Will Deny He Acted on Suggestion a Lawyer Values at $200,000.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Sept. 17.—President John Mitchell of the United Mine Workers arrived here to-night and attended a conference of the lawyers engaged for the defense in the case of A. D. Wales, a lawyer of Binghamton, N. Y., who has instituted suit against President Mitchell and the United Mine Workers for $200,000 for a suggestion which he claims he made to Mr. Mitchell, and which, he alleges, was the means of settling the great strike of two years ago.

Mr. Mitchell declined to make any statement, but at the trial it is understood he will deny that he acted on any suggestion made by Mr. Wales. Mr. Mitchell, accompanied by the anthracite District Presidents of the Mine Workers, will go to Binghamton Monday morning, the trial being set down for that day.

ALLEGED COINERS IN ALABAMA.

Secret Service Men Say Three Prisoners Are Agents of a New York Gang.

Special to The New York Times.

MOBILE, Ala., Sept. 17.—Vincenzo Lowanaco, Francesco Bestivo, and Monaco Antonio were taken before the United States Commissioner here to-day and placed under $2,500 bonds to await trial for passing and circulating counterfeit money. Antonio passed the money and the others were in his company.

The Secret Service men say the prisoners undoubtedly are the agents of Italian counterfeiters in New York City.

WOMAN HAS DRIVER ARRESTED.

Mrs. Nellie Belknap Will Forego Church to Appear Against Him.

Indignant at the treatment which a driver was giving to his horse, Mrs. Nellie Belknap, wife of William M. Belknap of 1,124 Simpson Street, the Bronx, ordered a policeman to arrest the driver and said she would forego church to-day in order to go to the Harlem Court to prosecute the man.

The prisoner is E. Stener, driver for A. Campabello, a Harlem produce dealer. He was trying to drive a team of mustangs up the hill at Third Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street to the Harlem Bridge. Mrs. Belknap says that one of the horses was bleeding at the mouth and that Stener was cruelly beating it. He was locked up in the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Station.

Boy Hungry, Family Dispossessed.

John Cossey, ten years old, walked into the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children last night and asked that he be allowed to sleep there. When he was asked why he did not go home, he replied that on Friday his father and mother had been dispossessed from their home at 444 West Twenty-eighth Street. He said he had had nothing to eat during the day, and that his mother and her three children were not to be found, as they had gone looking for food.

WHEAT BREAKS IN CHICAGO.

Down Four Cents, with Market Closing Practically at Lowest Point.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—As a result of heavy liquidation and of heavy selling on stop loss orders, the price of wheat dropped 4 cents here to-day. At the low point wheat for May delivery sold at 111 a bushel, while at the same time the December option sold at 109. The sharp break to-day practically wiped out the remaining vestige of the sensational advance of the forepart of the week. The market closed practically at the lowest point of the day.

Prospects of a continuation of favorable weather conditions throughout the country was the main influence in causing the weakness.

The oft-heralded free movement in the country northwest seemed to have begun in earnest, receipts at Minneapolis and Duluth to-day being much heavier than for the corresponding days last week and a year ago. As a result of the more liberal arrivals, the Northwestern markets were weak. Lower prices in those markets added downward impetus to the declining prices here. From the start there was a lot of long wheat for sale, and the little demand from shorts was totally inadequate to stem the receding prices.

WANTS RECEIVER FOR RAILWAY.

Motion of Hudson Valley Coupon Holder Postponed by Court.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Sept. 17.—A motion for the appointment of a receiver for the Hudson Valley Railroad Company, made by a purchaser of 110 past due and contested coupons of January, 1903, and July, 1903, was postponed by Justice H. T. Kellogg here to-day.

It developed on the argument that the coupons held by the plaintiff were respectively fifteen and twenty-one months past due, their validity and enforceability having already been in litigation for a few months, and there had been no default or non-payment of other or later coupons, notwithstanding a contrary report to that effect.

AMERICANS TAKE THE LEAD FROM CHAMPIONS

Greater New Yorks Capture Well-Played Game from Washington.

NATIONALS WIN AND LOSE

McGraw's Men Prevented from Scoring Their 100th Victory at Washington Park.

The Greater New Yorks are again leading in the American League. In a well-contested game with the Washington tailenders Griffith's men won by one run, while the Bostons were defeated at Philadelphia by a run. In double-headers played at Cleveland and St. Louis, Detroit captured one from the local team and Chicago was defeated twice by St. Louis.

In the National League the New Yorks slipped up in their attempt to score their one hundredth victory, being defeated in the second game of a double-header with Brooklyn. Only one game remains to be played to finish the season's series between the two teams. At Boston yesterday the Philadelphias took two games from Boston by one run in each. Summary follows:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Clarkson Scores Triumph in New York's Victory Over Washington.

Walter Clarkson, the ex-Harvard pitcher, saved the Greater New Yorks from defeat in the game with the Washingtons yesterday at American League Park. His pitching was not only effective, but he sent in the winning run by a tremendous three-base hit. It was his second victory since joining the professional ranks, but his greatest triumph was that of yesterday. He was called upon to succeed the old war horse Griffith in the sixth inning, and from his first pitch of the ball until the finish he had the Washingtons at his mercy. It was a surprising turn of affairs, for the visitors had batted Griffith heavily, and of the five runs had earned four.

When Clarkson appeared in the box all this was changed. With the veteran McGuire behind the plate to guide him, the former college boy, unmindful of the vigorous coaching of the Washingtonians, attended strictly to business, and the first three batsmen to oppose him were quickly retired. Only one hit to the outfield was made off his delivery, the other one charged against him being a hit to short stop on which Hughes beat Elberfeld's throw to first. Clarkson struck out five men, and in several instances three balls were called on him, but the batsman suffered in the end.

The game was splendidly contested, brilliant plays being numerous. Cassidy's display at short stop was in some instances of the phenomenal order, while Ganzel's first base playing has rarely been excelled. In the fourth inning Elberfeld made a wonderful catch of Hulsman's hit, the ball going deep into left field and Elberfeld securing it while running in the same direction.

For two innings Griffith gave every evidence that he held the visitors within his grasp, but in the third inning they began to bat freely, scoring one earned run on three singles. It was in the fourth inning, however, that his delivery was punished the hardest, two singles, a three-bagger, and two earned runs being made. In the fifth inning a base on a force hit and Stahl's hit to the extreme centre field for a home run scored two more runs, and this ended Griffith's appearance in the box.

Fultz started off in the second inning with a safe hit, and after being caught off first reached second safely by a bad throw of Stahl. After Williams had been retired on a fly Ganzel hit safely to left field and Fultz scored. The local men tied the score in the fifth by scoring four runs, three of which were earned. Eight men went to the bat and five hit safely, Fultz producing much enthusiasm by hitting to centre field for three bases and scoring two runs. Wolfe was then supplanted by Hughes. The ex-New Yorker gave Ganzel his base on balls, but the latter was forced out by Conroy, and McGuire was put out at first, Ross Clarkson hit to right field for three bases and Conroy tallied. The score:

TWO GAMES AT CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 17.—Cleveland and Detroit tried to play two games to-day, but finished only one, the second being called when neither side had scored. Detroit bunched its hits in the first four innings off Donahue, and drove him out of the box. Rhoades, who succeeded him, pitched well. In the fifth inning Stovall was hit by a pitched ball, having a finger broken. Cleveland hit Donovan hard, but generally after two were out. The score:

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New York Won First Game from Brooklyn, but Lost Second.

In the presence of a crowd of more than 11,000 "rooters" yesterday at Washington Park the New Yorks and Brooklyns played for more than three hours in a double-header that resulted in a victory and defeat for each team. Both games were well played, but the New Yorks won the first by the excellent pitching of Taylor and Brooklyn the second chiefly by the wildness of Ames. Bowerman's catching was a feature of the afternoon's play.

The New Yorks began scoring in the first game in the second inning, Dahlen hitting a ball too hard to second for Jordan to handle. On Dunn's sacrifice Dahlen reached second, and Gilbert sent him to third on a one-base hit to right field. Dahlen tallied on Bowerman's two-bagger to right field, and Gilbert crossed the plate on Taylor's fly to Sheckard. The third and last run for the New Yorks was made by Bresnahan in the seventh inning. He hit a swift ball, which went between Batch's feet, but after Donlin had reached first base on called balls he was caught "napping." McGann was second out. A hit by pitched ball gave Mertes a base, and Dahlen's single enabled Bresnahan to cross the plate. The Brooklyns had a man on third base in the first and ninth innings, but good plays of Dahlen and Dunn prevented runs.

In the second game the Brooklyns started off with two runs, chiefly by the wildness of Ames and his slow fielding. They made another run in the fifth on a base on balls, a sacrifice, and Dillon's hit to centre. In the seventh the Brooklyns by clever base running and bunting scored two more runs. The New York's first run was made in the fourth inning on singles by Bresnahan, Dahlen, and Mertes. They scored again in the sixth and seventh innings on Donlin's two-base hit, Mertes's single, and two bases on balls by Scanlon. The scores:

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—After bunching six hits and scoring four runs in the first two innings, the visitors went to pieces, and lost out by fumbling and wild throwing. McChesney, from the Western League, played in right field for Chicago and showed very strong, both at bat and on the bases, getting a single, a triple, and a steal. Score:

AFRICANDER WON CUP RACE IN A HOT FINISH

Four-Year-Old Took Long-Distance Contest from McChesney.

STAKES WENT TO BROADCLOTH

Last Day of Racing at Brighton Track Drew a Big Crowd and Produced Interesting and Close Sport.

With three runners, the race for the eighth Brighton Cup, at two miles and a quarter, in every way fulfilled the traditions of the big event of the seaside meeting and made a splendid special occasion for the wind-up of the Brighton Beach racing for the year. Three stakes were set for decision on the last day of the club's racing for the present season, but good as was the programme, all interest centred in the long-distance event, for which the survivors of a most exacting season of hard-fought contests were named to run. Only three horses were named on the programme, and the three that were named all ran.

The crowd looked hopefully for added starters, but not one of the many horses engaged dared take up the chance against the trio named on the card.

The weather was bright and clear, and the sun was out with full force, serving to dry the track to the point that just failed to be fast, but as the unusual distance called for some unusual effort on the part of the management, harrows were at work through the early part of the afternoon, and the surface of what was a really fast track was scratched deep enough to make a track that was slow when the big event of the day was run.

The cup stood out so prominently on the card that when the time came for the long-distance event the Brighton Beach paddock was crowded as it never was before in the history of the track, and eager partisans in hundreds crowded to the rails as the horses were galloped through the stretch in their warming-up canters. The attendance was the largest of the Brighton Beach Fall meeting, and the cheer that went up when the white-faced McChesney strode through the straight in his preliminary was in the nature of an ovation. Africander was greeted with much less enthusiasm, but when the black horse Major Daingerfield swept past the stand and just opposite the judges' inclosure made a grab for the bit and for a moment looked to be running away, the watching crowd sent up a cheer that might have done credit to a finish. By the time that the three horses had been warmed up and saddled the enthusiasm had reached the pitch that demanded expression, and there were more cheers when the trio paraded to the post, McChesney leading, with Major Daingerfield second and Africander last.

In the meantime the betting had found a settled state, with McChesney the favorite at odds of from 11 to 10 up to 6 to 5, while Africander ruled as a steady second choice at 2 to 1, and Major Daingerfield held his own in the betting at odds of 5 to 2, after having been backed down from 3 to 1.

The start was made in the chute at the head of the stretch, Major Daingerfield having the rail with Africander next to him. The riders were the same as in the Cup Preliminary, won by Africander, O'Neill having the mount on the victor in that event, Lyne riding Major Daingerfield and Redfern being up on McChesney. For so small a field there was quite a long delay at the post, the barrier finally lifting with Major Daingerfield first away and McChesney second, but in the first strides of the race Redfern took McChesney back and O'Neill dropped into second place just at Major Daingerfield's heels. In the run to the stand, the black horse in front opened a gap of half a dozen lengths, but at that was only cantering, while the two behind him were pulled double under waiting orders, Africander leading "Big Mac" by a scant length, and the trio passing the stand for the first time at a pace so leisurely that only a repressed cheer went up from the waiting crowd. Around the mile track and back to the stand for the second time, there was no change in the positions of the horses, except that the two trailers went a trifle closer to the pacemaker, which led past the stand on the beginning of the last mile by only four lengths. From that point in the race Africander closed on Major Daingerfield with McChesney hanging at his side, Redfern seemingly having no fear of the black pace maker, and timing his effort only by Africander.

Into the back stretch there was never a change, beyond the closing of the trailers on the leader, Major Daingerfield then holding command only on sufferance, and holding it at that only until the far turn was reached. There Africander went out for the lead, and the moment he moved McChesney went with him, the pair swiftly overtaking Major Daingerfield, which to that point had been galloping with his mouth open. The moment that there was an actual challenge, however, Major Daingerfield seemed willing to give it up, and dropped back into last place without even the sign of a struggle, Africander and McChesney flashing past him into the furlong run from the far turn to the middle of the last turn, Africander, first to move, holding the lead at this point, though McChesney still was under a pull and seemed ready to leave him at the moment he was called on.

Entering the stretch for the run home, McChesney's white face was abreast of Africander's, and a whoop of delight went up from the backers of the favorite, in anticipation of the victory that seemed certain, for at this point O'Neill was pushing Africander, and the four-year-old seemed to be doing his best, without being able to shake off the older horse. They were barely straight for the run down the short stretch, however, when McChesney began to lag, and with a dozen lengths between Redfern grew uneasy and went to the whip. O'Neill was sitting down to hard riding on Africander, but the rider took fresh courage when McChesney was driven to the extremity of whipping, and O'Neill, at the beginning of the last furlong, actually steadied his mount, and, with McChesney flogging hard at his side, waited until well into the last half furlong, before he sat down, and hustling Africander out for the finish, shot him a trifle better than a length clear of his rival and won the Brighton Cup and the ten-thousand-dollar stakes by just a little better than a length, while McChesney finished second far off before the tiring and stopping Major Daingerfield.

The time of the race was 3:55, far away from the track record and the record for the race, but the performance of the winner nevertheless was one that fits in exceedingly well with Celtic brilliant record, a record that stands out above all the great performances of American-bred horses in regard to the amount of money the gallant colt has won against horses of all ages. Africander holds a place of his own in turf history, for he won the Suburban Handicap as a three-year-old, and in the same year took many of the biggest and best stakes for three-year-olds, and at four though accounted a cripple, he has raced from the opening of the season until close on the end of the racing year, and has gathered in more than a fair share of the biggest prizes, the Brighton Cup being one of the most prized events of the turf.

Each of the three horses that ran pulled up sound, and Africander seemed actually the best and freshest of the field when he finished.

For the Undergraduate Stakes, at five and a half furlongs, selling, for two-year-olds, there were seven starters, but in point of fact only six actually ran for the race, H. B. Duryea's Bulwark being left at the post. S. S. Brown's Broadcloth broke first, and going straight on made the best use of his advantage, and after leading at all stages of the race, won ridden out by two lengths from Gamara, second, while Dance Music, a long-chance outsider, closed at the finish and got third place.

Only three horses ran for the Chantilly Steeplechase Stakes over the full steeplechase course, the betting being pretty nearly even among the three. Flying Buttress raced out in front most of the distance, and though he seemed to tire in the soft going just before the last jump was reached, came on again when the horses struck the flat, and won rather easily by a length and a half from Amur. THOMAS F. KIELY.
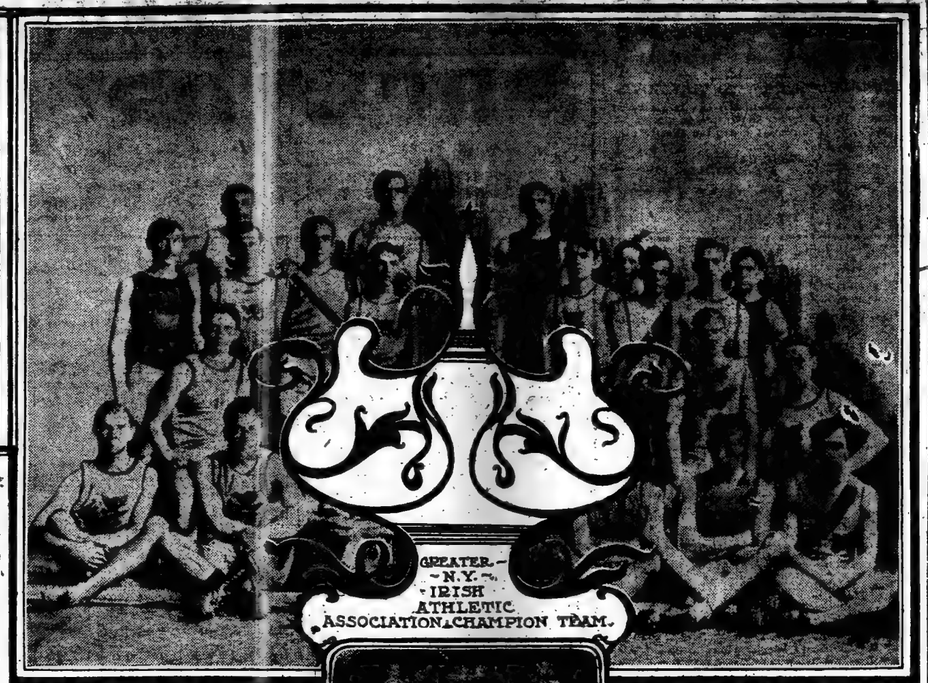
CHAMPION ALL-AROUND ATHLETE.



GREATER N.Y. IRISH ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION CHAMPION TEAM.

CHAMPION OLYMPIC SPALDING TROPHY WON BY N.Y.A.C. WHOSE VICTORY WAS PROTESTED BY CHICAGO ATHLETIC CLUB.

WORLD'S CHAMPION ATHLETE.

Thomas F. Kiely, Winner of A. A. U. Event, Is an Irishman.

Thomas F. Kiely, the champion all-around athlete of the world, was born at Ballyaeal, Carrick-on-Luir, County Tipperary, Ireland, thirty-three years ago, and on his first visit to America won the representative athletic event of the United States, which was one of the chief events of the athletic programme of the St. Louis Exposition.

Kiely arrived in New York only a few months ago, and entered several competitions immediately, but with indifferent success; then he settled down to preparing himself for the all-around championship of the Amateur Athletic Union, which he won on July 4.

Kiely has won over 1,500 prizes in all branches of athletics, running, jumping, and weight throwing. He won the all-around championship of Ireland in 1892-93-94 and '98. He has won the hammer-throwing championship of England six times, and of Ireland twelve times. He has won nine gold international medals in the annual contests with Scotland, besides over sixty gold championship medals in Ireland.

Kiely stands six feet one inch, weighs 196 pounds, and has a normal chest measurement of forty-two inches.

LOCAL ATHLETIC CHAMPIONS.

Greater New York Irish Athletic Club Team and Its Victories.

The Greater New York Irish Athletic Club, whose grounds are at Celtic Park, Long Island City, has made a remarkable showing during the present season, having won four of the five athletic championships of the year. The four victories comprise the junior and the senior championships of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union, both held at St. Louis, and the senior championship of the Amateur Athletic Union, both held at St. Louis, where the honors went to the New York Athletic Club.

The athletic team of the Greater New York Club includes John Flanagan, holder of the world's championship in putting the shot and throwing the fifty-pound weight; Martin J. Sheridan, holder of the world's record for throwing the discus; Myer Prinstein, international champion broad jumper; John Joyce, National ten-mile champion; W. G. Frank, indoor cycling champion; Harvey Cohn and George Bontag, distance runners; E. Robertson, F. Castleman, C. Bacon, W. R. Knabel, E. Schaefa, runners, and E. L. Greene, broad jumper.

ON LOCAL CRICKET CREASES.

New York State Team Beaten in Inter-State Match.

An eleven representing the Empire State in the inter-State cricket match with New Jersey succumbed rather easily in the annual match at the Prospect Park Parade Grounds in Brooklyn yesterday afternoon, this being mainly due to the fact that almost the entire champion team of the Livingston Field Club, the premier organization in the Metropolitan District Cricket League, played on the side of the Jerseymen.

At Branch Brook Park, Newark, the Manhattan II. team suffered defeat at the hands of the Newark Cricket Club by 62 runs. The totals were: Newark Cricket Club, 96; Manhattan II., 36.

C. O. T. had as opponents the Union County Club, which proved the victors by the narrow margin of 9 runs. The totals were: O. N. T., 40; Union County, 49.

By defeating the second eleven of the Paterson Cricket Club at Paterson yesterday the West Indians succeeded in securing the championship of the New York Cricket Association, with a final record of seventeen matches won in nineteen played. The nearest rivals of the colored champions are the Essex Countys of Newark, who, however, have already lost three games, and cannot therefore make up for the lost ground in the one remaining game they have to play. The totals were: West Indian Cricket Club, 66; Paterson Team B, 31.

A game in the New York Cricket Association series between the Thistles and Team B of the Columbia Oval Cricket Club, contested on the Parade Grounds, resulted in favor of the former by 67, for nine wickets, against 16.

A spirited contest was seen in the encounter at Paterson between two veteran teams representing the States of New York and New Jersey, in which the participants were all over forty years of age. The Jersey side was first at bat and compiled the respectable total of 93, thanks mainly to the good work of Capt. T. L. White of Newark, who put on twenty-five before he retired, without losing his wicket. The Rev. C. W. Twinge and J. Ridings, both of Paterson, also contributed doubles. In their turn at the bat the New Yorkers succeeded in passing the opposing total by six runs before stumps were drawn, winning the match with one wicket still in hand. For the winning team F. J. G. Cook was top man with 19. G. W. Barnes added 17, and W. Fenwick, the former Secretary of the Metropolitan League, 11. Extras were responsible for 14. At the conclusion of the game the two teams were the guests of Mayor Hinchcliff. The totals were: N. J. Veterans, 93; N. Y. veterans, 99 for 9 wickets.

Rascal II. Won George Gould Cup.

A special race of raceabouts for the George Gould Cup was held yesterday afternoon by the American Yacht Club off Milton Point on the Sound. Rascal II. was the winner. Seven raceabouts competed. The start was at 2 o'clock, and the course was from Scotch Caps to Execution Light and return. It was a beat out and a run back. The wind was fresh from southwest, and the yachts made short work of it. Rascal secured a long lead in the windward work, and held it to the end. The Kid was second. This is the summary:

THE OLYMPIC CUP IN DISPUTE.

Chicago Athletic Club's Protest Based on Flimsy Technicality.

The Olympic trophy emblematic of the championship of the Olympic games, which were contested in the Stadium at St. Louis a few weeks ago is "hung up," so to speak because the Chicago Athletic Club saw fit to protest the victory of the New York Athletic Club on a technicality which will hardly be sustained when the question comes up for decision before the officials of the Amateur Athletic Union, which he won on July 4.

Chicago protested DeWitt, who won points in the weight events on the strength of the great football captain's ineligibility to represent the New York Club, then seeing that victory still rested with the winged foot organization, protested the latter's tug-of-war team, who withdrew from the competition, after being beaten for first honors, with the consent of the officials who awarded the team fourth place.

The Chicago people claimed that the New York Athletic Club team forfeited the right to the one point, allowed for fourth place, by absenting the contest, and this technicality, if sustained, will make the two clubs tied for the championship. The general impression is that the New York Athletic Club will get the trophy, which is the most imposing offered at the great athletic meet and was donated by A. G. Spalding.

ROWING AT TRAVERS ISLAND.

Oarsmen of New York Athletic Club Hold Their Annual Regatta.

Oarsmen of the New York Athletic Club held their annual regatta over the club course off Travers Island, Pelham Manor, yesterday afternoon, and some interesting contests resulted. The course was about seven-eighths of a mile for the singles, half a mile for the doubles, fours, and eights, and about three-eighths of a mile for the six-oared barge race for the "Huckleberry Indians," finishing in front of the boathouse. A large number of members and guests of the club witnessed the events from the boathouse balcony and the lawn.

The best-contested event proved the single sculls, which had sixteen starters. Handicaps were allotted up to 45 seconds, with B. L. Zimm on scratch. The latter, however, had no chance against the long-mark men, and quit before reaching the finish. R. B. Mann, who had a start of eight seconds, won by half a length from D. Miller, who had twenty seconds while W. W. Swan, with forty seconds, was third.

The eight-oared shells made a spirited race, three crews starting, and the No. 1 boat winning from No. 3 by a quarter of a length. Crew No. 2 did not finish. The barge race for crews of "Huckleberry Indians" had only two starters, but resulted in a lively race, the No. 1 boat winning by a few feet. The pair-oared gigs had five entries and the quadruple sculls six, and consequently both were rowed in heats. In each case the trials were more interesting than the finals, which were won by large margins. The summary:

Single Sculls, Handicap.—Won by R. B. Mann, (8 seconds;) D. Miller, (20 seconds,) second; W. W. Swan, (40 seconds,) third. Time—5:42.

Pair-Oared Gigs.—Won by Crew No. 4, bow B. L. Zimm, stroke C. F. Stewart, coxswain H. Swain; Crew No. 3, bow R. B. Johnson, stroke L. De B. Handley, coxswain P. H. Moore, second. Time—3:51 2-5.

Quadruple Sculls.—Won by Crew No. 5, bow F. H. Moore, 2 D. Miller, 3 H. S. Clark, and stroke R. B. Johnson; Crew No. 3, bow E. R. Reynolds, 2 C. H. Sherrill, 3 S. B. Carr, stroke L. De B. Handley, second. Time—3:21 3-5.

Eight-Oared Shells.—Won by Crew No. 1, bow D. Smyth, 2 J. Steen, 3 G. B. Gibbons, 4 J. Tracy, 5 H. V. Beechinoir, 6 J. Boylan, 7 B. L. Zimm, stroke E. J. Keahm, coxswain W. W. Six-Oared Barge Races for "Huckleberry Indians."—Won by Crew No. 1, bow H. W. Packwell, 2 R. T. Lyons, 3 W. F. Hinsdale, 4 H. W. Goff, 5 E. F. Haubold, stroke E. Weinacht, coxswain E. MacGiff; Crew No. 2, bow F. Perham, 2 R. Stoll, 3 E. J. Benson, 4 C. H. Lieber, 5 E. F. Reynolds, stroke J. J. McDermott, coxswain R. Shubart, second. Time—3:32.

LIVELY POLO BY SQUADRON A.

Freebooters Beaten by One Goal at Van Cortlandt Park.

A spirited polo match was played yesterday afternoon at Van Cortlandt Park between two teams from Squadron A.

The game was tied at 6 goals at the close of the third period. The final period resulted in very lively work, but the scores remained a tie at 7 goals apiece until a few minutes before the call of time. L. J. Hunt, after a long carry up the field, failed to strike the deciding goal when close to the line, but a minute afterward he again got the ball and put it over the line almost at the call of time. The teams lined up as follows:

SQUADRON.	FREEBOOTERS.
1. J. H. Hunt.	1. A. J. Slade.
2. E. Neilson.	2. R. Goldsborough.
3. L. J. Hunt.	3. E. F. Smith.

Back, H. G. D. Douglas. Back, R. C. Lawrence.

SMALL YACHTS IN MANHASSET REGATTA

Every One of the Twenty-seven Starters Finished.

LITTLE VAQUERO LED FLEET

W. Butler Duncan, Jr.'s, Una Won in Her Class by the Narrow Margin of Nine Seconds.

The Fall regatta of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, sailed yesterday on Long Island Sound, was a very successful event, although there were no large yachts among the starters. Nevertheless, there were twenty-seven starters, and, unusual to relate, every one finished and there was not a single sailover.

The course was from the red and black striped buoy northeast of Execution Light to Mattinnecock Point, thence to Scotch Caps, on the north side of Long Island Sound, and back to the starting point. The wind was south-southwest at the start, a moderate sailing breeze, which made the first leg a broad reach, with booms on the port hard; the second leg another broad reach, with booms on the starboard hard, and the last leg a beat.

Soon after the main body of the fleet had started the wind backed to south-southeast, then died out altogether. Later it came light out of the northeast, and finally back to southwest and strengthened to a good sailing breeze. The little 21-footer Vaquero, which was the first boat to cross the line, led the fleet over the entire course. There were some close finishes, and in the 25-foot class W. Butler Duncan, Jr.'s, Una won by the narrow margin of 9 seconds.

The winners were Nike, Una, Jeebi, Vaquero, Tartan, Kenoshi, Plover, Chickeoka, Maryola, No. 7. The Chickeoka was sailed by Guy Standing, the actor, and the Maryola by Frank Bowne Jones, who beat Addison Hanan. Following is the summary:

VETERAN AMATEURS AT HELM.

Old Seawanhaka-Corinthian Members Race in Small Yachts.

The old fellows had their day at the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club yesterday and sailed races that won applause from the younger yachtsmen. Capt. Charles E. Willis, who in 1871 was the First Vice Commodore of the Seawanhaka Yacht Club, proved to the young Corinthians of the club yesterday that though his years number the traditional three score and ten, his hand has lost none of its cunning at the helm of a yacht. With William Foulke, the club's first measurer, as main sheet hand, Capt. Willis sailed the little fifteen-foot one-design boat Cayenne against four others over a seven-mile course in Oyster Bay, and won the race by 27 seconds from the Bairn. The latter was sailed by J. W. Beekman and Frederic de P. Foster, the club's first Secretary. The Sabina, sailed by ex-Commodore Henry W. Eaton and C. A. Sherman, was third; the Chipmunk, with T. S. Young and J. Fred Tams, was fourth, and the Fly, sailed by cousins of the President, John E. and W. Emlen Roosevelt, was fifth.

It was the second day of three set apart for the club's reunion. Lots were drawn for the choice of boats and the teams to sail them, it being understood that in this race, which was started at 11:05 A. M., only members who joined the club prior to 1883 were to man the boats. In the afternoon race, started at 3:30 o'clock, members who joined from 1883 to 1892, inclusive, were the skippers and crews.

The course was the same for both races. From two stake boats anchored off the clubhouse at Centre Island, to mark off Moses Point and Esper's Point, thence to a mark boat in the West Bay and return over the same course, 6¾ miles with five turns. Six of the fifteen-footers started in the afternoon race. There was to have been a race for the twenty-one-foot raceabout class, but there were not enough old members to go around, so it was abandoned. The wind in the morning was light from the westward at the start. When half way over the course the yachts were nearly becalmed, and the latter half was sailed in variable breezes from the west backing to northeast.

The afternoon race was sailed in a good breeze from the west-southwest, which held steady from start to finish. The Cayenne won again; this time by 1 minute and 57 seconds from the Imp. The winner was steered by Robert W. Gibson, with Macomb G. Foster as crew. C. W. Wetmore, who steered the Imp, had Charles A. Sherman at the main sheet. The Sabrina, manned by Colgate Hoyt and Henry C. Rouse, both ex-Commodores of the club, was third; the Bobs, with Anson Phelps Stokes and W. A. W. Stewart, fourth, and the Fly, handled by R. A. C. Smith and Vice Commodore W. J. Matheson, fifth. The Bairn, with Walter C. Kerr and Alfred Ely, fouled a buoy and was disqualified.

It was a beat to windward for the first leg of the course. The Bobs and Imp crossed the line together at the start, with the latter in the weather berth. All six crossed on the port tack. The Cayenne soon took the lead, and she held it to the finish. Spinnakers were set to port for the run home, and the boats made a pretty picture as they crossed the bay. A hundred members and the flag officers, Commodore Arthur Curtiss James, W. J. Matheson, and F. S. Hastings, attended the annual dinner at the clubhouse in the evening.

The summary of the races follows:

VANDERBILT'S FAST BOAT.

Mercedes VI. Goes Over Twenty-two Miles an Hour—Women Sailors.

All the sailing yachts in the regatta of the Knickerbocker Yacht Club yesterday were steered and handled by women, and incidentally there was a power boat race in which William K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s new Mercedes VI. made her first racing appearance. The Mercedes covered the fifteen-knot course in 46:55 at the rate of 19.18 knots, or 22.057 statue miles per hour. She had only one competitor, which she left out of sight, and it was said she was not pushed. The Standard went over the same course last year in 0:55:00.

The winners were Gurnard, Qauananiche, Irene, and Shovonne. Besides the Mercedes the winning motor boats were Esgeka and Dolphin. The summary follows:

EMPEROR'S CUP RACE DELAYED

Small Chance of Entries Given as Reason for Postponement.

BERLIN, Sept. 17.—The transatlantic yacht race for Emperor William's Cup may not be sailed next season, as it is uncertain whether enough yachts would be entered to make a worthy competition. So far as the information here goes possibly only two yachts will be ready to race next Spring. The Emperor has committed the question of offering a cup for next season or the one following to the German Naval Attaché at Washington, Capt. Hedhinghaus; Allison V. Armour, and C. L. F. Robinson, former Rear Commodore of the New York Yacht Club. The Emperor received Mr. Armour Sept. 2. The cup itself is a splendid piece of plate. It will be sent to the United States this year.

After the close of the international yachting match of 1903 Sir Thomas Lipton offered a cup to the Atlantic Yacht Club for an ocean race from Sandy Hook to the Needles, but withdrew in favor of Emperor William when he learned that the latter contemplated making a similar offer. The Emperor was disposed to give the cup into the joint keeping of the Atlantic and New York Yacht Clubs, but the New York Club objected to that arrangement, and the offer was temporarily withdrawn. Recently the Emperor announced that he would give the cup into the keeping of the New York Yacht Club. There are several yachts in this country ready to race for the cup, and they will no doubt be entered promptly on the announcement of a date for the start.

RACES FOR POWER BOATS.

Competing Craft Will Be Started According to Handicap Allowances.

Races for the American Power Boat Association Challenge Cup have been arranged for Sept. 22, 23, and 24, on the challenge of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club to the Columbia Yacht Club. The start will be made at 2 o'clock each day off the Columbia Yacht clubhouse, Eighty-sixth Street and North River, the course being sixteen miles up the river to a mark off Piermont and return.

It has been arranged to start the competing boats on their handicap time. The boat receiving the greatest time allowance will be started at 2 o'clock and the others at the expiration of the time which they allow the first boat. Each contest

YEAR'S TEAM TROTTING RECORD TIME LOWERED

Sensational Performance by Luke A. Burke's Champion Pair

AT N. Y. DRIVING CLUB RACES

Mile Made in 2:14½ Without Running Pace—Princess Pique Defeats Anna Little in Championship Trotting Class.

The amateur team trotting record of 1904 was twice lowered at the matinée races of the New York Driving Club at the Empire City Park, Yonkers, yesterday afternoon by Luke A. Burke's trotting pair, West Wilkes and Elmora. The record was 2:15¼ by the Burke pair, and in the first trial, paced by a running horse, they reduced this by the fractional quarter, going the distance in 2:15. A second trial was made without the running pace and the record was lowered to 2:14½.

In the championship trotting class Thomas B. Leahy's Princess Pique, which had been beaten by John F. Cockerill's Anna Little at the two preceding meetings, recovered her form and won in straight heats, regaining the lead in the series by two points. F. T. Steinway's Lou Mitchell, a newcomer, won in straight heats in the Class C trotting event, defeating C. W. Maury's Leonata and M. Bruckheimer's Bow Rene. The summary:

Amakassin Tennis Finals.

The annual invitation tennis tournament of the Amakassin Club, Yonkers, was brought to a highly successful conclusion yesterday by the final rounds in all the various events. All of the matches were won in straights excepting that of the men's doubles. L. Northrup and Floyd Smith won this final after a most stubborn four-set match with Hugh Tallant and Jova. Summary:

Men's Singles.—Final Round—H. Tallant defeated L. Northrup, 6—1, 6—2, 6—3.
Woman's Singles.—Final Round—Mrs. Clark defeated Miss Mabel Benedict, 6—4, 6—3.
Mixed Doubles.—Final Round—Hugh Tallant and Miss Atkins defeated F. H. Blake and Miss Elisabeth Elting, 6—0, 6—0.
Men's Doubles.—Final Round—L. Northrup and Floyd Smith defeated H. Tallant and Jova, 6—2, 8—7, 6—0, 6—4.

THE THREE LEADING FIGURES IN BASEBALL IN AMERICA.

H. C. PULLIAM. BAN JOHNSON. P. T. POWERS.

THREE BASEBALL RULERS.

Pulliam, Johnson, and Powers Conspicuous in Government of Game.

H. C. Pulliam, President of the National League; Ban Johnson, President of the American League, and Patrick T. Powers, President of the Eastern League, are regarded as three of the principal rulers of the National game. The organizations of which they are at the head are the strongest numerically and otherwise of any of the other baseball bodies operating under the National Agreement, and the laws under which the game is now played were the results of the efforts of the two chiefs of the major leagues and the leader of the Eastern League. Pulliam hails from Pittsburg, and succeeded "Nick" Young as President of the National League. Johnson comes from Chicago, and was the first President of the American League. Powers is from Jersey City, and under his judicious leadership the Eastern League has attained its present high standing in baseball.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Sanctuary Lamp Not an Object of Art—Other Decisions.

That a sanctuary lamp is primarily an article of utility and not an object of art, even though it is the product of an artist and not of an artisan, was the decision handed down by the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday, overruling a protest by the Rev. W. M. Stulz of Minneapolis against the assessment of duty on a lamp imported by him to be presented to St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church at Sleepy Eye, Minn.

The board also overruled a protest by Leo D. Greenfield & Co. of New York against the assessment at 44 cents a pound and 60 per cent. ad valorem, as wool clothing, of a sealskin automobile coat with a woolen lining, the lining comprising one-fourteenth of the total value of the garment. The importers claimed that it was dutiable at 35 per cent. as a manufacture of fur, but Mr. Lunt decides that as the law provides for garments wholly or in part of wool, the coat must pay duty under the wool schedule.

The board sustained a protest by Nicolino Rinando, the master of a vessel, against the action of the Collector at Mobile, Ala., in assessing duty at 10 per cent. as a non-enumerated manufactured article on 450 tons of gravel which he had brought in as ballast. He claimed that it was free of duty as a crude mineral. The board overruled a protest by the American Shipping Company of Chicago against the assessment at 30, 50, and 35 per cent., as manufactures of gross, ornamental leaves, and manufactures of wood, of natural leaves, grasses, wreaths, &c., which had been preserved by a chemical solution.

Protests overruled yesterday were by R. Vogelsang, John Meyer, August Pollmann, the Decorative Plant Company, J. Zimmerman's Sons, and Louis Metzger & Co. of New York; the Daudt Glass and Crockery Company, Toledo; the Oliver McClintock Company, Pittsburg; C. H. Wyman & Co., St. Louis, and Taylor, Young & Co., Portland, Ore. Protests sustained were by Merck & Co., O. Falk & Co., and B. Altman & Co., New York, and H. Moyer, Bangor, Me. Protests by Fensterer & Ruhe and the American News Company, New York, were partially sustained.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

LINA SALOMON.—Lina Salomon, a fur worker, of 13 West Twenty-second Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $2,613 to five creditors, the largest being Helene Ditttel, $1,500, and assets consisting of an expected dividend from the estate of Morris Salomon, in bankruptcy, of which she has assigned $20 of the dividend. The liabilities are for indorsing notes of Morris Salomon. She filed a claim against his estate for $2,340, but $1,695 was expunged, leaving a balance of $645, on which she expects a dividend.

Petition Dismissed.

ISIDOR SACHS.—The petition in bankruptcy filed on Wednesday against Isidor Sachs, stockbroker at 60 Broadway, and restaurant at Eldridge and Canal Streets, by Jacob Katz, a creditor for $392, has been dismissed by Judge Holt of the United States District Court, the claim having been satisfactorily adjusted, and the receiver has been discharged.

Bogart Bank Failure Recalled.

An old-time bank failure was recalled in the United States District Court yesterday when Richard W. Bogart and Alanson M. Wilcox filed petitions and asked discharges in bankruptcy. They are the surviving partners of the firm of O. M. Bogart & Co., which made an assignment on May 4, 1884, with liabilities of $1,446,495.40. In the schedule filed to-day are included all the old bank's indebtedness. The petition says the assignee to whom was turned over all the bank's assets has not yet been discharged, and the petitioners cannot tell the value of the said assets. They were estimated at $1,413,489.52. Bogart and Wilcox are employed as brokers' clerks at 39 Pine Street.

BOOKKEEPER-BOOKMAKER TELLS OF $2,000 BETS

Floyd-Jones's Accused Employe Got Used to Large Sums.

FORMERLY GOT $7 A WEEK

Was Progressing Finely, He Says, When the Police Presented Forgery Charge Against Him.

Frank O'Donnell, the young man who was arrested at the Brighton Beach race track on Friday, charged with having obtained $25,000 from his employer, Edward H. Floyd-Jones, a lawyer at 51 Wall Street, by forgery and embezzlement, was arraigned before Magistrate Mayo in the Tombs Police Court yesterday and held in $5,000 bail for examination on Wednesday. After a futile attempt to obtain a bondsman, he was committed to the Tombs.

Mr. Floyd-Jones, the complainant, was in court. There were also on hand a number of lawyers, some of these representing the Floyd-Jones estate and others several banks interested in the prosecution, chiefly in finding the money which the young bookkeeper is charged with having stolen. As yet all efforts made to that end have been futile. One of the lawyers concerned declared that after an examination of the books, by expert accountants, not yet concluded, it seemed that $50,000 might be missing.

The young clerk, who had been employed at a salary of $7 a week and had been left in sole charge during his employer's protracted absence abroad and at St. Louis, seemed very unconcerned when taken into the crowded courtroom.

After being taken back to the prison O'Donnell met several reporters in the consultation room.

"What did you do with the money?" was the first question asked.

"What did I do with the money?" he said. "Let them prove that I had any first. They charge me with forging checks. They've got to produce the paper before they can prove a case against me. Let me tell you they will never be able to produce any evidence against me."

"Well, who stole the money then?"

"There wasn't any money stolen, as far as I know. Jones lost some money, I understand, but he has no right to blame me for that."

"How long have you been playing the races?"

"Oh, about two years. I went to Sheepshead Bay one day and was very lucky. I don't remember how much I won, but it seemed a lot. My first bet was $2. My biggest bet was $2,000, and lately I have been betting that amount at a clip every time without turning a hair. My biggest day's winning was $5,000. At the last I got soaked good and hard, and I thought I would get on the other side of the line, and that is how I began making book. I had a wad of $1,000 and a pal had the same amount. For the first four days we broke even. After the first week we were able to hold our own, and I would have had them all skinned to death if they had left me alone at it a little longer."

OUR SYSTEM BEST IN WORLD.

Superintendent Says Naval Academy Is a Pattern for Europe.

Capt. W. H. Brownson, the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, returned to this country yesterday on the Cunarder Lucania after two months spent in England, where he has been looking over the system of naval education as presented in that country.

"I am fully satisfied now," he said, "that our own system is the best to be found anywhere. English naval officers a few years ago were picking all kinds of faults in it, and it even was condemned by some of our own retired officers, but I was gratified to learn in England that naval schools are being established on exactly the same plan which is followed at Annapolis.

"Germany, too, is taking up our idea, and it was not a week before I sailed that Prince Henry told me that another Annapolis was soon to be started at Bremen. There are a few small things which might take with profit from both the English and the German systems, but on the whole I think we could not improve our own very much, and I believe that with it we can turn out the best-equipped officers to be found in the world.

LINERS' VARIED EXPERIENCES.

Lucania Had Pleasant Voyage, While La Lorraine Met Nasty Weather.

The two steamships La Lorraine of the French Line and Lucania of the Cunard Line, both of which arrived yesterday, had vastly different experiences during their voyages, though at no time were they separated by more than a few hundred miles. The voyage of the Lucania was as pleasant as any of the passengers could have wished, and was made in excellent time, the ship averaging over twenty knots. La Lorraine, on the other hand, butted high westerly winds all during the voyage, and was prevented by heavy weather from reaching port on Friday afternoon, her usual time. From the time of leaving Havre, a week ago yesterday, until last Friday, the weather was so bad that only the oldest salts aboard ventured out on deck. On Friday the decks were continually awash.

La Lorraine brought over 1,075 passengers, among whom were Mrs. W. Durland, Prof. Albert Guichard, Dr. John H. Huddleston, Levi P. Morton and family, Mrs. John H. Parks, James B. Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Steiner, and Commandant Ferras. The Lucania had 1,321 passengers, among whom were J. Sergeant Cram, the Right Rev. Bishop Ferguson, Walter D. Douglas, Adrian Iselin, Jr., and his family; the Right Rev. B. J. Kelly, Sir William Rann Kennedy, Baron P. von Paungartten of the Austro-Hungarian Legation at Washington, H. P. Phipps and his family, and Prof H. B. Ward.

ARCHBISHOP AT COLUMBIA.

His Grace of Canterbury Will Attend Opening Exercises.

The exercises to mark the opening of the one hundred and fifty-first academic year of Columbia University will be held in the University Gymnasium on Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 28, at 3 o'clock, and will be open to the public. The address will be delivered by Prof. Robert Simpson Woodward, Dean of the Faculty of Pure Science, whose subject is to be "Academic Ideals."

The exercises this year will be marked by the presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, one of whose predecessors in office was the first "ex officio" Trustee named in the original charter of Kings College. Upon the conclusion of the exercises in the gymnasium the Archbishop of Canterbury will formally dedicate to religious uses the site upon which the new university chapel is to be built.

Slovak Soicetie to Honor Apponyi.

Arrangements are being made by the Slovak societies of the city for a reception to Count Apponyi, Chairman of the Hungarian delegation to the Interparliamentary Congress at St. Louis. Anthony S. Ambrose, President of the National Slavonik Society, in speaking of the reception, said that Count Apponyi was regarded as a statesman of unusual breadth of view and extreme tolerance.

R. F. CUTTING OUT OF POLITICS.

That Is, So Far as State and National Campaigns Go.

R. Fulton Cutting arrived yesterday on the steamship Lucania of the Cunard Line, accompanied by his family. They have been away two months on a general tour of Europe.

Mr. Cutting said: "I shall not take part in either State or National politics this year. I went away to get as far as possible from all that sort of thing, and I have not been informed concerning any part of the political doings of the day. I know who are the candidates, and that is about all I do know.

MAN BLOWN FROM OIL TANK.

Fatal Explosion Followed Driving in of a Hot Rivet.

ALTOONA, Penn., Sept 17.—George Bailey, an employe of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company freight car shop, met his death in a singular manner to-day.

While assisting in adjusting a safety valve on the dome of an empty oil tank car he got into the manhole to hold a rivet which was about to be driven. When the hot rivet entered the side of the tank an explosion followed and Bailey was blown out of the manhole and through the skylight in the roof of the shop. The explosion is supposed to have been caused by an accumulation of gas in the tank.

HICCOUGHS KILLED HIM.

Delawarean, Prominent in Ante-Bellum Politics, Dies at Ninety-seven.

DOVER, Del., Sept. 17.—Dr. Henry Ridgely, President of the Farmers' Bank of Delaware, and one of the wealthiest and most prominent citizens of the State, died suddenly at his home here to-day. His death was directly due to hiccoughs. He was ninety-seven years of age.

Dr. Ridgely was graduated from St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Md., and received his medical education at the University of Pennsylvania. In 1856 he was a delegate to the Concinnati Convention, which nominated James Buchanan for the Presidency. The Delaware Legislature appointed him to represent the State in the Peace Congress held in Washington in 1861.

SMALL BOY HOLD-UP.

Twelve-Year-Olds Say Lads Their Own Age Robbed Them.

After walking up Riverside Drive and inspecting Grant's Tomb yesterday, twelve-year-old Arthur Lyon of 314 West One Hundred and Sixteenth Street and Mortimer Sherwood, also twelve, of 224 West One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, thought it would be great fun to climb down the cliff at that point to the tracks of the New York Central Railroad, fifty or sixty feet below, and stroll along the bank of the river.

They made the descent easily enough, and had walked as far as One Hundred and Twenty-second Street, when they met two boys, Mortimer Lempz, twelve years old, of 916 Amsterdam Avenue, and William McCutchin.

Lempz asked the Lyon boy if he had any money, and on getting no reply McCutchin is said to have suggested:

"Let's go through him."

With that, young Lyon charges, Lempz suddenly grabbed him by both hands and twisted them behind his back. Then, he says, McCutchin searched his pockets. All the booty found was a silver-handled knife. This was found on Lempz, the police say, when he was arrested.

Meanwhile young Sherwood was yelling lustily, and his cries attracted Patrolman Brown of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station. He caught Lempz after a chase, but the other boy got away. Lempz was taken to the Children's Society and will be in the Children's Court to-morrow.

OWE LIVES TO MOLINEUXS.

Two Saved from Gas-Filled Cellar by Roland and His Father.

Gen. Edward L. Molineux and his son Roland risked their lives yesterday to save two men from being suffocated in a cellar filled with gas. For several days gas had been leaking from a pipe in the cellar of the paint factory in which the General is interested at Hamilton Avenue and Smith Street, Brooklyn. Yesterday the Gas Company sent three men to stop it. The men were John Gibbons of 522 Fourth Avenue, John Graham of 372 Sixth Street, and John Reddy of 140 Luquer Street. After hunting for some time the men found the leak and were at work on it when the pipe broke, and there was a great rush of gas into the cellar. Gibbons and Graham were almost immediately overcome, but Reddy managed to get to the stairs and to the floor above, where he shouted for help.

Gen. Molineux and his son were at work in the office. With several of the clerks they at once rushed down into the cellar. The rescuing party was almost driven back by the gas, but, led by the General, they kept on until they had reached the two men lying unconscious near the broken pipe. Gibbons and Graham were carried to the floor above and ambulance surgeons were called from the Long Island College and Seney Hospitals. The two men were taken to the hospitals, where they were revived.

In the meantime the gas had filled the entire factory, and the Gas Company had to send another man around to shut off the flow in the street. The rescuers suffered from headaches for an hour or so, but were otherwise none the worse for their experience.

BICYCLE POLICEMAN TRICKED.

When He Caught Auto, Driver Ran Over His Wheel.

When Bicycle Policeman Henry Stuel of Long Island City was riding up Jackson Avenue shortly after 9 o'clock last night, a big red auto, carrying a man and two women, passed him, headed for the ferry, and going, he says, at least twenty miles an hour. He wheeled his bicycle around and started after the machine.

One of the women riding on the back seat saw the bicycle policeman speeding toward them, and she told the man operating the machine. The latter immediately put on more steam, and the chase was on. The auto kept on down Jackson Avenue, turned down Fourth Street, heading for the Thirty-fourth Street Ferry. The bicycle policeman, thinking to head them off at the ferry, kept on down Jackson Avenue, turned down Borden Avenue, one block further than Fourth Street.

When the auto reached the corner of Fifth Street and Jackson Avenue, the lights were put out and the three women got out of the machine and ran into a barber's shop, then out a side door and disappeared. While the machine was at a standstill the policeman caught up to it, but as he was dismounting the man in the auto put on steam again and ran his machine over the bicycle, wrecking it completely. Stuel tried to catch the machine on foot, but had to give up, and the auto was soon lost to view. He says, however, that he has the auto's number.

Major Donald Ross Going to St. Louis.

Major Donald Ross, F. R. S., C. B., arrived yesterday on the Lucania, to be the guest of the St. Louis Scientific Congress, before which he will lecture on the mosquito theory of malaria. Major Ross is an authority on the subject, and his lecture will be one of the leading points of the congress. The Government gave all of the courtesies of the port to Major Ross when he landed, and hastened his baggage through so that he might be able to make a train for St. Louis.

Alphonse J. Stephani Is Now in Hospital for Insane.

KILLED LAWYER IN 1891

Tangled Estates of Father and Mother Straightened Out Finally by Report of Referee.

An appraisement of the Stephani estate filed yesterday in the Surrogates' office shows that Alphonse Joseph Stephani, who in 1891 was sentenced to spend his life in Sing Sing for murder, but who is now confined in Dannemora State Hospital, is entitled to more than $100,000. When Stephani's mother, Mrs. Josephine Stephani, died it was learned that her personal property amounted to $104,292, the net value of it being $83,923. Of this amount she disposed of $25,195 in bequests, and named her son, the convict, as the residuary legatee. The appraisement filed yesterday shows the residuary estate to be $68,727. He is to have the use of it during his lifetime, and upon his death it reverts to his aunt, Marie Hall; or, in case she dies, to Mrs. Stephani's nephew's and nieces.

In addition to this, Stephani will receive about $40,000 from the estate of his father, who when making his will named Mrs. Stephani as his executrix, giving her the use of $40,000 during her lifetime and providing that upon her death the residue of his $150,000 estate should revert to the son. Mrs. Stephani died on April 20, 1902, and as she had never rendered an accounting of her husband's estate, much litigation followed over three clauses in her husband's will, which involved the distribution of the $150,000. Cephas Brainerd was appointed referee to straighten out the tangle, and he reported to the Supreme Court in favor of the estate of Mrs. Stephani. Now the entire controversy will be settled, as the court will confirm the referee's report, and about $40,000 of the estate of Mrs. Stephani's husband will go to the convict son.

Alphonse Joseph Stephani was convicted of the murder of Clinton G. Reynolds, a New York lawyer, in November, 1891. He was sentenced to life imprisonment and remained in Sing Sing Prison until January, 1903, when a board of physicians decided that his mind was weakening and recommended his removal to the Dannemora State Hospital for Insane Criminals. He is living there now in luxury. It is said, his relatives contributing to his support for the reason that he was to inherit two fortunes. He has special privileges in the hospital, and when last heard from was said to be convalescing rapidly. He is thirty-eight years old.

LAW WORKS DAY AND NIGHT.

Magistrate Rejects Excuse of Autoist Who Ran Down Old Man.

Edward Shotwell of 73 West Eighty-eighth Street was a prisoner before Magistrate Crane in the Harlem Court yesterday, charged with having run down James A. MacDonald, aged sixty-three, of 222 West One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street, at Eighth Avenue and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street, while speeding his automobile on upper Eighth Avenue last night.

The police told Magistrate Crane that Shotwell was going at eighteen or twenty miles an hour, and that Eighth Avenue at that point was a favorite racing ground. Shotwell said it was late, and apparently sought to excuse himself on that ground.

"The laws," said Magistrate Crane, "are in operation day and night."

The defendant was held in $500 bail for trial.

YOM KIPPUR BEGINS.

Jews' Day of Atonement and Fast Starts This Evening.

Beginning at sunset this evening the Jews all over the world will begin the celebration of Yom Kippur, or Day of Atonement. In the twenty-four hours beginning at that time orthodox Jews are commanded to fast.

In all of the synagogues the services are practically continuous. They begin at sunset on the eve of the fast. After the prescribed service for Yom Kippur eve, which is known as the Kol Nidre, many of the attendants remain to spend the hours in pious meditation and in reading and expounding the law.

Yom Kippur comes ten days after the Jewish New Year. The days intervening are known as the ten penitential days.

GROUT'S TRANSFERS UPSET.

Clerk Who Was Not "Necessary" Gets Redress in Court.

John T. Birmingham, who was disbursing clerk in the Controller's office until Controller Grout reorganized the office staff and placed Birmingham on the suspended clerks list, obtained yesterday from Justice Clarke in the Supreme Court the promise of a writ of mandamus to compel the Controller to reinstate him and give him back pay for a year.

When the Controller's office staff was reorganized Birmingham's place was abolished as unnecessary, and he was placed at the head of the waiting list of suspended employes, but later the Controller found he needed a disbursing clerk and transferred two expert accountants from the exempt to the competitive class and had them fulfill the duties of disbursing clerk. Justice Clarke decided that inasmuch as there was need of a disbursing clerk in the office neither the Civil Service Commission nor the Controller had the right to make the transfers of the two clerks.

RUSH-HOUR ELEVATED BLOCK.

Two Third Avenue Trains Broke Down —Bridge Platforms Packed.

During the rush hour last evening at the Brooklyn Bridge the Third Avenue elevated system was tied up for about twenty minutes and the platforms were crowded with people. The burning out of fuses of two trains near the Forty-seventh Street station was the cause.

A City Hall train from Bronx Park started the trouble at Forty-seventh Street, and when it started after fifteen minutes' delay the fuse of the train following burned out and there was another block lasting ten minutes. In the meantime the down-town stations became congested with homeward bound persons. At City Hall the station platform was packed and the ticket sellers continues selling tickets. At the Chatham Square and Grand Street stations it was just as bad. It was half an hour before the trains began to run on schedule time.

STONE CUTTERS QUIT ON ASSOCIATION JOBS

Won't Work with New Unions or Non-Union Men.

HARDING FOR CLOSED SHOP

Employers' Representative Says He Never Advocated Anything Else—Doesn't Fear General Strike.

By a unanimous vote the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Union, at a mass meeting yesterday afternoon decided not to work hereafter with non-union men or members of rival unions on any of the contracts of the Employers' Association. The stone cutters will be called out to-morrow on every such contract.

A motion for a general strike of stone cutters to go into effect to-morrow was defeated. It was decided to wait first to see the effect of the general strike ultimatum, which is to be sent to the employers on Wednesday.

In a number of the buildings the work has gone beyond the stage where stone cutters are employed, but on any building where the stone cutters strike the bricklayers will be thrown idle. The stone cutters, though working on buildings where general contractors of the Employers' Association have the work, never signed the arbitration agreement because last year the employing stone trade was not in the Employers' Association. For this reason they were not included in the present lockout.

Since the lock-out started, the employing stone cutters have organized an association which is in the central body, and in case the stone cutters strike a new union of stone cutters may be formed under the arbitration agreement.

Lewis Harding, Chairman of the Press Committee of the Employers' Association, last evening made the following statement:

"We wish to deny in the strongest manner possible that we have, or ever had, any intention of establishing the open shop. We are proceeding as we did last year to organize under the arbitration agreement the unions of trades which will not come to terms. All talk of dual unions is nonsense, as these will be the only unions in these trades we will recognize, and the members of the old unions will have to join them. There will be no open shop with us, and I believe our children's grandchildren will never see the open shop in the New York building trades.

He said he did not regard seriously the threat of a general strike. He did not believe it would take place, and the employers, he said, did not care whether it took place or not.

To Mail Complaint in $100,000 Suit.

On the application of Mrs. Hattie R. Waugh, Supreme Court Justice Blanchard yesterday granted an order permitting her to serve a summons and complaint by letter upon Clara Louise Peters, whom Mrs. Waugh is suing for $100,000 damages for alienating the affections of Mrs. Waugh's husband. The defendant resides at 614 East Capitol Street, Washington, D. C.

SWEETHEARTS HAD DEATH PACT.

Ohio Couple Shoot Themselves and Neither Lives to Tell Why.

ZANESVILLE, Ohio, Sept. 17.—Nellie Geyer and James Bay, sweethearts, committed suicide to-day under circumstances showing a premeditated agreement, although they did not die at the same place and possibly not at the same hour.

The girl left a letter to her mother foretelling the deed and leaving no doubt that there had been an agreement for the double tragedy during the night. Mrs. Parker, with whom Nellie Geyer was staying, was aroused before daybreak by groans, and found that Nellie had shot herself. Later in the day James Bay was found about three miles outside the city, having shot himself during the night while en route home from a visit to Miss Geyer.

Neither of the suicides lived long enough to tell the motive for the deed.

SIMPLE-LIFE APOSTLE HERE.

Will Pay a Visit to Author of "The Strenuous Life."

The Rev. Charles Wagner, author of "The Simple Life," who intends to visit the author of "The Strenuous Life," arrived yesterday morning on the French Line steamship La Lorraine. He was met at the pier by John Wanamaker, whose guest he is to be at Lindenhurst, near Philadelphia.

The author-minister is here for a lecture tour. He left in the afternoon for Ardsley, where he is to be the guest of S. S. McClure. On Sept. 28 he will be the guest in Washington of President Roosevelt.

Mr. Wagner was born in Alsace, the son of a poor pastor, and first preached in the mountains of Vesges. He has studied English only in the last year. Speaking of himself, he said:

"I did not begin writing until I was thirty-eight years old. My writing was because I wanted to address larger audiences. My first book was entitled 'Justice.' I want fatherland to respect fatherland, and I wish for peace in the religious world. We are all one people. Man is not happy for he is not simple. I saw this when I first went to Paris and witnessed the artificial life and the struggles of humanity."

Alleged Wire Tapper Discharged.

Albert Brennan, alias Miller, who told the police of the West Thirtieth Street Station that he lives at the Imperial Hotel, Thirty-second Street and Broadway, was discharged by Magistrate Moss in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday. Brennan was arrested on the complaint of Arthur H. Pritchard of 1,001 Van Alst Street, Astoria, who alleged that Brennan tried to swindle him out of a sum of money on a wire tapping proposition. Magistrate Moss said that there was no charge on which the prisoner could be held, as it did not appear that he personally had taken any money from Pritchard.

CAREFUL CARPET CLEANING CO

PART TWO

The New York Times.

FINANCIAL AND REAL ESTATE

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1904.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Last week started with the largest day's fall the market has had in a long time on an unusual volume of business, and there were three other days of activity with falling prices. Yet the rally was so strong, despite the prominence and persistence of crop damage talk, that the averages were hardly altered at all yesterday. The market was, as it long has been, softest when most active, and hardest when most quiet. What is the meaning of a combination of broad and falling markets with narrow and rising markets, accompanied by depressing intelligence?

At an uncertain time a few months ago there developed a tendency which grew to be something like a unanimous resolution to sell no more stocks until they brought more money, and, as the unhappy conditions which compelled so many to sell against their will had passed, the stock market came almost to a standstill. This left the list to the judges of values, and they began picking up cheap things and taking them away from the Street, with the result that sellers of other people's property had to buy it, and the more they sold the more they had to buy, for there was no fresh stock coming to market.

Last week these conditions were reversed. A series of million-share days with falling prices is not open to misinterpretation. If the market had been of the recent sort the selling of so much phantom stock would only have raised the list. That the market has checked at last is not due primarily to bear selling, although doubtless there has been some. Neither is it true that the market altered for the worse because of deterioration of conditions fixing values. Conditions always have left something to be desired; that has been the unanimous judgment of all commentators; but they have progressed in a normal manner, with hardly more abatement of highest hopes than is to be expected every year. When the worst is said it remains a good agricultural year, and a good agricultural year is all that has been desiderated by judges of values to assure a corresponding price movement. And yet the list suddenly turns weak, or rather loses strength, just when hopes in this respect are on the verge of realization.

To say that the selling overpowered the buying rather states a fact than discovers or assigns a cause. Why did selling overpower buying if conditions underlying values did not justify it? The first and likeliest thought is that it resulted from a mere change of speculative sentiment, a sudden and general resolve to take profits succeeding the previous "strike" against sacrificing properties for under value as well as under cost. If that is correct the market is all the better for it. Weak holders have been replaced by stronger, and sellers at this level are succeeded by those who will not be satisfied to sell again except at a rise. The Street has been full of buyers like suburban commuters who have missed their train, and are delighted to see it backing down into the station which it appeared to have left for good. If they could have had some of last week's prices a fortnight or a month ago they would have jumped at them. If now they climb aboard the market is strengthened by exchanging for passengers who were satisfied to get off at a way station others who want to go through to a further destination, if not to the end of the route.

But some will say this begs the question. The point is, Where is the end of the route, and is it not right here? That is a question of individual judgment, raising one of those eternal crises which are the delight and torment of watchers of the market. Each day presents a fresh problem. Nobody cares for yesterday except as it throws light upon tomorrow; nobody possesses to-morrow, and all action must be in the present. But there are symptoms which may be pointed out for consideration. One is the continued expression of confidence in the future by those who months ago thought stocks were worth buying, not to sell, but to keep. An ironmaster does not light up a blast furnace to produce one ton of pigiron. It is an expensive operation, and the fires once lighted must be kept going to produce profits. That is the significance of what is going on in the iron trade at this moment. To start the fires to produce an impression of activity in order to work off existing stocks would be quite in the same class with the stock operations abandoned so precipitately in the early Winter. The distinction between then and now is that this movement has been predicated upon prospective rather than present values, and with only secondary consideration of stock market strategy. There is better proof of this than information, and it is spread broadly over the records in sight of all. Of course there is and can be no information that this judgment of values is right or wrong. That lies in the future. But proof that this position was taken by the best judges of values and possessors of unlimited resources is scattered over the sales sheets, showing purchases continuous through months, at an ascending scale of values, and without distribution of the accumulated stocks.

That this attitude continues is the significance of last week's business. Comparing the closing averages of Saturday and Friday industrials fell from 57.43 to 57.19, and railways from 108.12 to 107.89, sales aggregating 5,868,908, and following pessimistic views of the crop outlook. Everybody would appreciate the significance of this if applied to the movements of a single stock. If any property falls a point by successive eighths upon sales of a total thousand shares, and then rises a quarter or so upon purchases of another thousand shares, there is no tyro who cannot see that the stock rises with difficulty and falls of its own weight. Exactly the opposite is true of the current movement. Since Spring the market has recovered half of its fall in a twelvemonth, or over twenty points. It has done this in markets which have been a byword for dullness, indicating purchases of moderate volume, and under constant discouragement by memories of recent distress and active prophecies of disaster ahead. Not once before has the market been put to proof of its genuineness until last week, and now upon business of a million shares for each full day the average falls a quarter point. And we are asked to believe that the reaction signifies collapse, and are told that the manipulators are strengthening some stocks in order to sell others. Some manipulators may be doing so.

Some stocks are high enough; others are too high. This is not a discussion of individual movements, but an attempt to discover what the market shows regarding the position of the most conservative judges of value. To say that, assisted by this week's crop scare, they could not if they would have depressed the list more than the record shows is to ask too much to be granted. To have done so would have been not only to spoil the market for all their present stock of distributables, but to spoil the future market for new creations to be taken upon their merits at the time of offering. To say that men playing for such stakes are satisfied with even the generous rise already experienced is to mistake an ocean groundswell for the ripples in a pond. In short, judgment of the outlook must depend upon judgment whether the rise is a stock jobbers' operation—which is almost incredible from its proportions and persistence alone—or whether it is a groundswell of values which will go further, even though like the rising tide its constituent wavelets may at intervals recede. Ultimately that is a question of fact, and it may hereafter appear both that the best judges have taken up a position favoring a long rise of values, and that they were mistaken. But unless an operator knows what is going to happen he takes considerable risk and assuredly has the courage of his convictions in taking a contrary position. Of course, it is different if a man trades not upon opinions and convictions regarding values, but upon information. If a man knows what is going to happen he has no need to wade through statistics showing what prices ought to be. Information about what is certain to be is a sure winner—that is, if the thing happens and information is about the right thing.

Since the market remains a crop market some observations may be offered regarding the outlook. Regarding wheat, little need be said, as the crop is substantially made, and a loss of 100,000,000 bushels as compared with last year must be faced. But there is no special necessity to compare this year with last year or any other large year. No investment proposition is judged by one year's result, large or small, and judged by the average of a series of years this year's crop is adequate to needs, even if more would have been acceptable. The lost millions of bushels are not the loss of anything ever possessed, but are mere abatements of hope, simply corrections of erroneous calculations.

Cotton remains at risk after it is fruited, and until actually picked. Even after the crop is made bad weather in the picking season will suffice to convert a good crop into a poor one. Wet and windy weather will so beat down the plant and mix the staple with soil that the grade will be much reduced, or even much not be gathered at all. And there never is a good crop without a good top crop, about which there is as much uncertainty almost as regarding the main crop. All calculations have been stultified by bad weather following the last visit of the experts to the fields. The crop may have been grown, but it was not gathered, and it is only picked cotton which counts. But it is simply borrowing trouble to assume such experience this year. There is nothing but rare experience to base it upon, and the outlook is good.

Those who have frozen the corn this year have been premature. Early September frosts are not the sort which hurt. In this region the average date for the first killing frost is Nov. 3, and the earliest known is Oct. 15. The Omaha weather station gives Sept. 28 as the date of the first killing frost. Kansas gives the same date. In Iowa since 1878 there have been only five killing frosts earlier than Oct. 1. In Illinois the earliest killing frost on record was Sept. 25. It is not impossible that a frost may do serious damage, but it is not a long shot, as Wall Street reckons, to take chances against crop damage in September. The time of peril is July. Especially must it be remembered that it is not every frost which gets into the newspapers, even if the exact truth is told about it, that has baleful significance regarding the crop yield. Moderate frost is regarded as beneficial in ripening and maturing the kernels which have developed the characteristic dent in the ends. This denting marks the drying out and solidifying of the berry into the flinty state. In the earlier state, the present state for much of the crop, when the berry is still plump and glazed, it is generally thought practically safe against frost killing. It is only in the milky or soft state that frost is destructive, and the portion of the crop in the milk is small and lessening rapidly. When frost catches the kernels in the tender state it works some vital change in the sap. The fodder becomes liable to fermentation and nearly unfit for feeding, while the kernels stop developing, becoming shrunken and light. A bushel may then lose twenty pounds in weight, besides losing grading quality, and so become unfit for sale and good for nothing but fattening stock. It is almost true that one man can guess as well as another what the chance is of an unusually early and severe frost, but the weather sharps have done some figuring in it. In Chicago the Summer was the coolest for thirty-three years, and each of the last three Summers has been below the normal warmth based on an experience of thirty years. The doctrine of averages calls for a surplus of heat to balance a deficiency. In proportion as the Summer was cool would be the probability that the Fall would be warmer than usual. But the succession of cool seasons in the crop regions—it will be remembered that we had a frost scare last year also—lends some support to the theory that the seasons are altering. This is going too far afield for the average Wall Street man. It is a subject on which nobody has any inside information and operators all start on an equality.

At least two results of these early scares are gratifying. It puts the increased money value of the reduced crop where it will do most good. In the farmer's hands this money will not be wasted. He may spend it or he may bank it. In either case it goes into the foundation of values, and cannot be kept out of the channels of commerce. Neither can it be squandered in putting gingerbread mansards upon fantastic "capitalizations of the economies of modern production." And, secondly, the fear of shortage and the certainty of good prices occur during preparations for next year's Winter wheat harvest. Conditions have been ideal, and on the long look ahead, such as is now buoying the market, there is no fear of wheat enough in that most excellent year which everybody hopes for, or rather expects, after the election is over.

EDWARD A. BRADFORD

CORN CROP FAILURE OF 1901.

Present Conditions Do Not Resemble Those of That Year.

Now that the first frost has gone by without doing damage to the corn crop, the latter may be considered as assured, and it becomes possible to recall the last failure of the crop without touching any sore point in present conditions. It was in the Summer of 1901, in fact early in July, that a great hot wave rolled over the country. July 4 fell on a Thursday, but the Exchanges were closed until Monday, the 8th of the month, partly because of the slack business due to the heat, which had then lasted several days. During this holiday reports of damage by heat to the corn crop came in from the West, and consequently when the market opened on July 8 general weakness developed. The heat continued, and thus the reports of damage to the growing corn, which became graver with every day, had a cumulative effect which resulted in slowly but surely depressing the stock market, the Granger shares especially being affected, so that by the end of the third week in July a decline of over 20 points had been recorded. Atchison went down from 88⅜ on July 1 to 67¾ on July 22. In the same period Missouri Pacific sold down from 121⅛ to 96¼, St. Paul from 177¼ to 151½, and Union Pacific from 115½ to 89½. While stocks were going down the price of corn rose sharply from 49⅝ cents to 62 1-3 cents. When at last the drought was relieved the corn crop had been hurt so seriously as to reduce the crop to the smallest since 1894.

From this short description it will be noted how entirely and intrinsically different in market influence and crop returns are early damage by rains or drought and late damage by frost. The former is a grievous matter, as was again demonstrated in the Winter wheat crop this year. Even though its realization comes gradually its effects are lasting. Late crop damages by frost are generally spasmodic and short lived. They rarely are serious enough to materially affect the crop, and consequently their influence on the market makes itself felt more in a sudden quick reaction of a few points than in a steady continued decline.

Another week of favorable weather will remove whatever doubt regarding the crop may be remaining, and then the Granger shares which have been laggards during the last few days, free from specific influences, may be expected to rejoin the rest of the market in whatever direction it may take.

GOOD PRESIDENTIAL YEARS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think your view of the depressing effect of Presidential years is more traditional than accurate. How about 1872, 1876, 1880, and 1892, all exceptionally good business years? The years 1872, 1880, 1892 were what are called boom years; 1884 had a Wall Street panic, but ordinary business was not in the least affected. My experience reaches as far back as 1857, and I have found that legitimate business is only seriously disturbed by unsound currency conditions. I paid in Wall Street 3 per cent. for gold in the year 1893 to pay duty; ordinary currency was refused at the Custom House.

The present year will be another good business year, in my opinion. T. F.

Philadelphia, Sept. 12, 1904.

AMERICAN METHODS ON ENGLISH RAILWAYS.

In an editorial on the half year's working of those English railways which have already announced their dividends, The Birmingham Post says that "After vigorously protesting against the introduction of American methods as being unsuitable, if not impracticable, on English railways," British "railway managers are evidently profiting by American experience to the extent, at all events, of cheapening the transport of merchandise and minerals by means of more careful loading, the employment of trucks of larger carrying capacity and engines of greater hauling power, and the discontinuance of superfluous trains, more particularly on branch lines. In many cases, also, they are increasing the carrying capacity of their passenger coaches without adding materially to the cost and weight of the trains, and utilizing motor cars in country districts as feeders for their railways. A good deal still remains to be done in the way of staff reorganization and the compilation of really instructive statistics for the guidance of managers and directors, and but little improvement is apparent yet in the handling of passenger traffic, so far as regards the working expenses. But the work of reform has evidently begun, and the period of depression through which we are passing will not have been without its compensations if it serves, as we hope it will, to stimulate and strengthen the reform movement."—From United States Consul Halstead, Birmingham, England.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR COTTON.

Ramie, a plant extensively grown in India and China, is advocated by a writer in The British Trade Review as a substitute for cotton. D. Edwards-Radclyffe, who has made an exhaustive study of the plant, says that it is the textile of the future, as it is more cheaply cultivated than cotton and is not subject to the ravages which are likely to devastate cottonfields. Ramie is a long-stemmed reed varying in height from five to seven feet, and the outer skin or pellicle of which makes a fibre which when properly treated and freed from gum is said to lend itself well to the making of all kinds of cloths. As yet there are no machines for the proper treatment of the fibre, but Mr. Edwards-Radclyffe says that he is prepared to put such machines on the market as soon as there shall be a demand for them.

MANIPULATING THE MARKET

Tricks of the Trade Employed to Influence Prices.

POOLS ACTIVE ON BULL SIDE

Making Money by Selling and Buying at the Same Time—When to Get Out.

During the bull market of the last few weeks much has been heard of active manipulation of prices, pool operations, and other speculative methods which, from the way they are spoken of, would seem to be considered as illegitimate offshoots of the Wall Street game. They are phrases which are generally heard only during an advance in the market, for when stocks are declining in unison the news is generally of such a kind as to make unnecessary extraordinary efforts to hasten the collapse. But when general conditions are not exactly glowing, and yet the market takes an upward swing, or when a stock intrinsically not attractive is to be "distributed," the genteel term for selling out to the dear public, then it is that the ability of the manipulator is called on, that pools are formed to facilitate the bidding up of the price, and that the other paraphernalia for booming the market are taken out of the closet and dusted up.

There are of course various methods for accomplishing these same ends, and to decide which of them is the more successful one must be left to those who have tried them both. In recent years some of the biggest men have found it profitable to put the market up by the sheer force of their buying, regardless of the amounts of stocks they accumulated in the process, and relying on the tremendous following which their activity attracted to enable them to take profits. This method, however, while successful in a big, broad bull market was found to entail disaster when that market was deserted by the public and only the professional element remained on which to sell out, an element which is generally too quick to detect such efforts at unloading to make them profitable. During the present bull campaign the methods employed were more subtle, following the lines laid out by Charles Woerishoffer and James R. Keene.

The way the thing was accomplished was about like this: In the early Summer it was found that money was so plentiful that it could be borrowed at merely nominal rates. This being an essential necessity preliminary to any bull campaign, further examination of conditions revealed the fact that the Presidential election for once would not prove a disturbing factor, that general conditions had improved, and that their continuance seemed assured because of the expectancy of good crops. With this basis those big interests which had been hampered in many schemes of development by the decline in the stock market and the impossibility to sell securities at reasonable prices, decided it was an auspicious time to make a market. Thereupon came the first step in the preparation of the upward movement, and this was the formation of pools in various stocks. These pools were not all formed with knowledge of each other's existence; on the contrary, it is more probable that they were formed independently as the result of the same conclusion having been reached by different sets of men. At any rate they were formed, and each one of them took from fifty to one hundred thousand and more shares out of the market, accumulating them very quietly if they had not been previously purchased. A pool in a stock involves an agreement among the members not to sell except when the word is given by the manager, for every pool has its operating head who is something of an autocrat and does what he thinks best to secure an advance in his stock.

The formation of the pool having been completed, the pool manager began to buy openly, making no secret of the purchases, but taking pains to disguise the identity of the purchaser, for a little mystery is desirable, as it makes things more attractive. By employing brokers who have generally been identified with those in control of the property, or brokers of some big interests which might want to control the property, this object is accomplished. Of course the big buying movement requires some explanation, and so the rumor mills are started up, and they grind out stories of acquisition by other companies, increased dividends, rights to shareholders, large earnings, new big orders, acquisition of some other valuable property, and a score of varied reports all calculated to make the higher quotations appear plausible and yet not definite enough to invite absolute denials from the management, a possibility which is further circumvented by the taking into the pool of some influential member of the Board of Directors.

While thus advancing the market through open purchases, the wise manager also sells as much as possible in order to avoid the accumulation of the entire capital stock in the endeavors to advance the market price. This selling, however, is carried on with as much secrecy as the buying is public, and although every professional in the street knows that this is being done, yet every one permits himself to be deceived by the belief that the pool's object has not been accomplished, and that prices will advance further. Wherefore even the wise professional element, or the talent, as it is sometimes called, often gets landed with stock when the pool is liquidating.

The manner in which these purchases are managed is like this: The pool manager distributes orders to a series of brokers. To one of them he gives an order to buy a large lot, say, ten thousand shares at the best, that is, at the lowest price he can get. Then he distributes stop orders, that is, orders which must be executed when the market reaches a given price, or at as nearly that price as possible. If the stock is quoted at 40, he gives an order to the first broker to stop 500 shares at ⅛, to another at ¼, to a third at ⅜, and so on up to the price which it is desired to establish for the day.

The broker with the 10,000-share order begins to bid, and gets his first lot of perhaps a thousand shares at 40. Not getting any more, he bids ⅛, and, of course, is at once joined by the broker with the stop order at that price. Perhaps 1,000 shares more are purchased at that price, when the first bidder raises the bid to ⅛, and at this figure the third broker joins in the bidding, and so the price gradually advances, the first broker bidding all the time and the stop-order brokers falling in line, until half a dozen men are bidding for the stock. This lively bidding is sure to attract a following from the traders on the floor who want to get a share of the profits in the advance, and very soon there is an active market established.

After this reasonably heavy buying has lasted a few days, long enough to charm the speculative community, much as the pied piper charmed the children, they begin to sell more than they buy. This, of course, would be impossible were it not for the fact that a big, broad market had been created in the previous days' transactions, with the public and the speculators eager to buy, and in which many thousand shares could be sold without overfeeding the demand. To prevent the market from selling off in such a way as to frighten the speculators, buying orders are put in every time a declining tendency develops. In such a market the buying by one broker of several thousand shares will be generally sufficient to offset the selling of three times that amount in small lots by other brokers not identified with the upward movement. The selling in small lots will make it appear as if there were short selling by outsiders operating on the theory of a decline, and this impression is further strengthened by the pool operator actually borrowing stock for delivery. This apparent short selling encourages real short selling by speculators, and these are then squeezed and driven in the next day by a few vigorous buying orders. The stocks borrowed for delivery by the pool can be, of course, returned out of the holdings of the pool, without the necessity of buying it in, while the outside shorts will have to bid for the stock, and thus help running up the price.

And thus the merry game goes on until the pool has sold out at a handsome profit. Then gradually the activity will diminish. Those who have been landed with the stock will sell and lower the price, thus enabling the pool, or some other pool, to start all over again should it feel so inclined. A good part of the stock, however, will have been bought for investment, on the strength of the many favorable rumors, and this will probably be held for some time before it finds its way back to the market, for the investor is slow to take losses and prefers to wait until his stock advances again.

Naturally, it is impossible to call attention to all the tricks used to influence prices. Often buying orders are put in to advance one stock for the express purpose of detracting attention from the simultaneous selling of some other issue. Often stocks are purposely depressed to permit accumulation. In fact, in the variety of its moves the market resembles those of the chessboard; the combinations possible to achieve the end are as varied as those of the cards in whist, and the nerve, bluffing qualities, and practices of deception of the operator are as essential as they are to a good poker player.

Some have thought that is what has been going on in the Street for the last eight weeks, and the question which everybody is now asking is how long will it be kept up and will it last long enough to establish permanently a higher level for securities. For no matter what the speculator may do the investment level has been gradually advancing, and will continue to do so, with occasional reactions, as long as the country keeps on growing.

RAILROAD EARNINGS SHIFT.

Month of August Marks the Turning Point.

Last week's reports of current railroad earnings completed the exhibit for the month of July and also gave a fairly clear picture of the showing which may be expected for the month of August. The figures for July are not of the most cheerful kind. Indeed, if those who believe in higher prices had rested their faith on the showing made by the railroads for that midsummer month their wisdom would be in grave doubt. Fortunately the market is based not on what has been, but what is expected to be, otherwise prices would surely go down.

Dividing the railroads according to territory in geographical groups, it appears that out of seven divisions only one shows an increase in gross earnings, and that is the group covering the Northwest and the Pacific Coast. But even here the increase in gross is of only negative encouragement, for the heavy increase in expenses nearly if not quite wipes out the gross gain, leaving net earnings practically stationary. The Middle West and Mexican roads alone show an increase in net earnings, but this is due entirely to a decrease in operating expenses and not to a heavy gain in gross earnings, the latter, on the contrary, also showing losses.

Still less cheerful is the exhibit of the aggregate results of all the railroads which have reported their earnings. This shows that gross earnings in July decreased 5.8 per cent., expenses decreased 4.9 per cent., while net earnings decreased 7.5 per cent. In fact, the only part of the lesson which conveys the slightest degree of satisfaction is the very general decrease in operating expenses. These decreases are uniformly heavy and give promise of a continued saving, thus by their silent showing indorsing the policy of liberal expenditures for improvements which has been the earmark of American railroad management for the last fifteen years, and which has been severely criticised in many quarters, and not only in England, as a policy of foolish extravagance.

	1904.	1903.
Gross	$93,261,190	$99,021,881
Expenses	62,602,762	65,861,068
Net	$30,658,428	$33,160,813

While thus the review of July results is anything but encouraging, the showing made for August is the exact opposite. So far only returns of gross earnings are at hand in sufficient number to warrant the drawing of conclusions, net earnigs and operating expenses having been reported by only a few railroads. But even from the meagre figures at hand it is impossible to deduce a denial of the belief that August will mark the turning point in the course of railroad earnings which have now been downward for about a year.

Expressed in percentages it appears that fifty-four railroads reporting gross earnings for the entire month of August show increases of 3.3 per cent., while forty-four railroads reporting for the fourth week in August report increases of 9.5 per cent. From this it would appear that the last week of the month had been the most profitable, demonstrating a tendency toward further improvement. Taking the reports of fifty-four railroads for the first two months of the new fiscal year, it appears that their gains in August gross more than wiped out the decreases for July gross, leaving an increase over the same two months of last year of 0.4 per cent. For the first week in September only thirty-eight railroads have reported gross results, but these show increases of 4.1 per cent., suggesting that the improvement noted during the month of August is likely to continue during the month of September.

There were also made public last week several annual reports, notable among them being the reports for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Reading, and the Jersey Central. It speaks well for the management of these properties that in a period of business depression they were able to make the best showing in the history of their roads. The main features of operation in the case of these railroads are not much different from those of other companies, the annual reports of which have been discussed heretofore. If, as is to be expected, the coming year shall bring no further general advance in wages, it is only reasonable to express the belief that the results of the year will excel even the fine showing made during the last twelve months.

Told 'Round the Ticker.

NORTON SQUIRE, junior partner of the Exchange house of Williamson & Squire, is now back at his office, after a five weeks' vacation spent in New England. Mr. Squire was quite successful in golfing, at which he is an expert, but his most interesting experience was in automobiling. One night while out on one of the country roads in a big touring car he suddenly noticed a small animal in the road ahead, but before the power could be turned off there was a collision, with dire results to the occupants of the car. It needed no investigation to tell them that they had run down a skunk. The automobile had received a perfume bath, necessitating a thorough washing down before further use could be made of the machine.

GEORGE MULLARKEY, a well-known curb broker, created something of a stir among his confreres of that market the other day by showing up in their circle suddenly and unexpectedly adorned with as beautiful a set of whiskers as ever graced Tittlebat Titmouse or the Czar of Russia. To judge from their exclamations of surprise some of the brokers took his hirsute adornment for spinach, while others thought it corn tassel. It escaped damage only because its owner threatened personal violence to trespassers. The crop was grown during a protracted stay in the woods of Maine.

CHARLES M. SCHWAB, the former President of the United States Steel Corporation, who has crossed the big pond four times during the present year on business, is about to undertake his fifth voyage. He will embark early in October, to be gone three months.

A. J. CASSATT, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, appeared at his desk last week for the first time in several months, he having been away on his vacation. He arrived in Philadelphia in his private car and went straight to his office without first stopping in at his home.

"CHARLEY" GATES is credited with the following story about a large holder of the Steel shares. This gentleman, desiring to get rid of some of his holdings in the expectation that he could get them back cheaper, advised a number of his friends to buy the steel issues for a rise. He intended to sell his shares to them, and as his friends acted on the tip he had no trouble in getting rid of his shares. He has not been able to get them back at a lower price, but his friends are deeply grateful to him for the good tip, and they come around every few days with some fiery coals in the way of expressions of gratitude.

George B. Harris, President of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; A. B. Stickney, President of the Chicago Great Western, and President Elliott of the Atlantic Coast Line, were in town last week, and all three expressed themselves with considerable enthusiasm regarding the crops and the general business outlook in the sections of the country traversed by their respective railroads.

HUGH F. McELROY of Miller & Co. lays claim to a curious discovery. He says that the first killing frost always comes four weeks after the Jewish New Year. Last year it came on Oct. 18, and this year he expects a killing frost about Oct. 8. He explains the affinity between the apparently disconnected events by the fact that the Jewish holidays are regulated by the moon, and that the phases of the moon have the greatest influence on the weather.

CHARLES H. STITT has transferred his membership in the New York Stock Exchange to James A. Rankin of Pringle, Fitch & Rankin of Chicago. Among the memberships posted for transfer is that of B. C. Williams, the purchaser being Kenneth B. Schley, whose sponsor is George F. Baker, Jr.

SAMUEL P. COLT, President of the United States Rubber Company, who has been away in Europe on his annual vacation, has returned and is now back again at work.

H. K. BURRAS, the Stock Exchange member of the firm of H. K. Burras & Co., returned to the Street early last week after an extended tour in the West and Southwest, where he had an opportunity to observe personally the prosperous condition of those parts of the country.

W. K. VANDERBILT is expected to return to this country from Europe by the latter part of this month, according to those of his friends who are best informed as to his movements.

LAWSON LOOSE AGAIN.

Jabs the Boston Exchange with Some Picturesque Language.

Thomas W. Lawson, the irrepressible, has broken loose again with a letter to the Boston Stock Exchange repeating his oft asked question as to what that eminent body was going to do about certain things. He published a letter on these lines some weeks ago, whereupon the firm of Lawson, Arnold & Co. was requested to drop his name from the title. His present outbreak is on the topic of Massachusetts Gas, and some of the language is too picturesque not to merit more general circulation. Says Mr. Lawson:

"In my coming chapter of 'Frenzied Finance,' I say, 'Fate hangs no red lights at the cross-roads of a man's career,' but I would have your members know that in my opinion in this particular case there is one swinging across the Boston Stock Exchange at the present time that looks to me bigger than a locomotive headlight.

"Still—

"It may be my vision is defective, and that the Boston Stock Exchange cannot see in the frauds that are being perpetrated within it anything that even resembles a glowworm resting on the further side of a red toy balloon."

Incidentally, he accuses unnamed members of the Boston Exchange of bucket-shopping, and he further declares that certain members "openly and in an elephantine manner 'wash' stocks upon the floor of the exchange for the purpose of defrauding the public," and that they "make false entries in their books and present false statements of accounts to those who have dealings with them." Particularly are these frauds, he says, practiced by a member of the Governing Committee.

A TRUST COMPANY THAT FEATURES SMALL LOANS

Unique Field Chosen by New Brooklyn Institution.

FOLLOWS BANK OF FRANCE

Remarkable Success of Plan Abroad Commends It on This Side—Opportunity for Public Service.

The new Home Trust Company in Brooklyn, which ex-Borough President J. Edward Swanstrom and a number of others are organizing for the accommodation of small merchants, particularly among the large Scandinavian population, is an experiment of more than local interest. It is the first attempt in this country or England to conduct on a large scale the variety of banking in which the Bank of France has made such a distinct success, not only in Paris, but in the entire republic.

Such an institution necessarily must be one of tremendous detail. It is this feature more than any other which has prevented the establishment of a similar bank or trust company in any of the larger financial centres before this time, if one may judge from the tone of comment with which the annual reports of the Bank of France are received. From common knowledge of the ways of banking institutions here, also, it is well enough known that none of them would bother for a moment with a loan proposition involving a sum anywhere from $5 to $100 in twenty or thirty-day terms.

Yet this is just what the Bank of France does as its speciality, and with excellent profit. The enormous detail is readily appreciable in the figures for any given year. For 1902, for instance, the total of productive operations of the bank amounted to 10,670,737,500f. The discounts of the Bank in Paris and all its branches amounted to 9,555,893,900f. on a total of 17,454,223 bills. In other words, the average amount of all these bills was 547f., or approximately $109.50 in our money, the average length for which they ran being twenty-one days.

Still more is the minuteness of many of the individual transactions apparent when it is considered that in Paris alone there were 90,606 bills discounted which ranged from $1 to $2 in amount, 1,434,594 which ranged from $2 to $10, 1,169,832 ranging from $10 to $20, and 3,568,289 of $20 and over.

A trust company here could not, of course, have the circulation which is the most popular feature of the system of the Bank of France, and ties to it strongly what may be called the financial sympathies of the middle classes. Yet its ability and willingness to cater to the commercial needs of a portion of the population who are at present quite without banking facilities of any business value to them at all are bound to draw a clientèle almost from the time it opens its doors.

On this account it would appear not overwise to announce that the Home Trust Company is intended primarily for the Scandinavian population of Brooklyn, even though its organizers are for the most part of that origin, for the field within which it can be of very great service is by no means confined to the 125,000 people of Scandinavian stock. The company, if well conducted, as seems probable from the character of the men who are going into it, will be able materially to improve the business methods of many people. It will tend to encourage the creation of bank accounts as replacing the "old stocking" method of saving, for a storekeeper who is able to finance his buying for such period as the accommodation many be necessary, will find it unneedful to keep on hand more ready cash than is required for his over-the-counter business.

If, furthermore, he is able to start a small account, say, of $100 or $200, he does not have the embarrassment of drawing into it every time he makes a purchase to replenish his stock. Beyond this, the knowledge that a reasonable credit is obtainable on a business basis will do much to keep people of this class out of the clutches of the loan sharks, for whom they are particular prey because their store and stock, or home and its furnishings, represent something tangible against which foreclosure may be had with an absolute certainty of realizing. On all of these accounts, therefore, the experiment of the Home Trust Company seems likely to meet with success, or at least to deserve it.

The closest analogy to the method of the Home Trust Company, on this side of the water at least, is a scheme which has been under consideration here for some time past of financing bills of exchange as between merchants and manufacturers. This was intended to work on a large scale and to do away with the jobbers' or middlemen's profit. In the case of the Home Trust Company, such margin as the middleman makes in handling goods between the manufacturer and merchant is fairly represented by the loss to the small dealer who, without commercial rating, is obliged to take care of his purchases either by drawing direct on his savings or paying extravagantly for accommodation.

This margin ought to be large enough for the Home Trust Company of Brooklyn to earn a reasonable return on its own capital investment and at the same time leave enough for its customers in the way of saving to commend itself to them. There is one final consideration about the project. It will discourage the feeling that there is something disgraceful about a small loan simply because it is small. The man who wants to borrow $20 to pay for four barrels of sugar is in no way different, except in degree, from the man who goes to his bank for $10,000 to meet an invoice of a carload of stuff. That one is poor and the other presumably well-to-do is the only difference between them, and if the Home Trust Company can demonstrate that the relative respectability of the two depends upon their relative honesty, it will be performing a public as well as a private service.

In this respect it is not a little like the bonding companies that have been so distinctly a product of the last decade or two. Time was when if a man required a bond for the performance of some specific task, it was necessary to go around to his friends—an embarrassing and not altogether grateful operation. To-day it is quite possible for him to go in a business way to a company which makes a business of that very thing, not as a suppliant for alms, but as a customer. It is easier for the man wanting surety and far easier for his friends, and it does not require a great stretch of imagination to picture relief for certain borrowers and their friends through the operations of the Home Trust Company.

ST. PAUL'S FIGURES ON STEEL.

The annual report of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul contains some very interesting statistics bearing on the steel and iron industries. Its freight statistics show that there was a decrease of 28,7[illegible] tons in the amount of coke hauled, while the tonnage of iron and other ores handled decreased 494,615 tons, and the haul of iron and steel products decreased 90,023 tons. So far as the consumption of steel and iron by the road in maintenance of way is concerned it is shown that it spent $782,320 less for rails and $230,917 less for bridges.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Heavy; Call Money Nominal, 1 1-2 Per Cent.

A Poor Bank Statement Overcomes Encouraging Weakness in the Produce and Cotton Markets.

The standing gibe that stocks have been strong under bad news and weak under good news, and so have been unreliable either as an index of facts or a prophecy of the future, cannot be fairly applied to Saturday's business upon the Stock Exchange, for the day's news was inconsistent with itself. London was on holiday, and so was not a factor, but the corn, wheat, and cotton quotations were all favorable to prospects of larger yields and so stimulating to stocks. But the bank statement was poor enough to obscure those influences. The money market was less responsive than the yielding price list, but a Saturday money market is a poor affair at best, and next week's money market may be of another sort. And perhaps not. The fall of the surplus in a month from $58,613,075 to $29,300,000, making a decrease equaling the remnant, is indeed food for thought. But upon reflection the deterioration is more apparent than alarming, and there are counter considerations.

The demand for cash to move the crops may be supposed to be reflected in the loss of $25,600,000 from the reserves. Such a considerable demand is not consistent with any idea that there is any serious shortage in the crops to be moved. And so far as that demand has been satisfied it is extinguished, for the requirement is not an indefinite quantity, and once satisfied is not renewed. The rise of loans to a new maximum, with a corollary of $41,000,000 greater requirement of reserves against the resultant deposits within the month mentioned, accounts for the rest of the loss of surplus. Certainly it would be better if the loans were more moderate, but there are no omelets without broken eggshells. Nobody thinks that the average value of the stock list can be raised 20 points without making legitimate demands on the banks. There may be a difference of opinion whether the rise in the stock market is worth a closer money market, but the holders of the negative will be few. Bank officers certainly will not agree that buoyancy and cheer are dearly bought when the penalty is no worse than the reduction of the surplus to the very substantial figure of $29,300,000. The existing situation certainly is not disquieting. The trouble is ahead, if indeed there is to be any at all. It must be remembered that as soon as the money market warrants the trust companies in making loans, the increase of loans, now exaggerated in the bank statement, will be minimized. That is to say, the trust companies will make loans in part from their own resources and in part from deposits withdrawn from the banks. Thus a portion of the loan account now thrown into the limelight will be obscured, and it may be that loans will be reported smaller, although they are actually decreasing; and the reduction of deposits will reduce the requirements of reserve, which may increase under conditions apparently better than the present, but intrinsically worse. Such a possibility is derisory regarding our knowledge of the banking situation, but such are the facts. Upon the appearance of the statement prices yielded a fraction, with larger losses for Erie second preferred and Reading.

ON THE LONDON CHANGE

Easy Money Serves to Keep the Stock Markets Cheerful.

But the Public Continues Timid—Japanese Bonds Considerably Lower—Americans Recover After a Sharp Setback.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Easy conditions continued to prevail in the money market this week, with no indications of a return of stringency in the near future. This situation served to keep the Stock Exchange cheerful, but did not cause any notable increase in the volume of trading or any pronounced upward movement in prices.

The public still remains timorous and apprehensive that if it should invest freely at the present moment it soon might encounter a squeeze in the money market and find itself holding a lot of depreciated securities. This feeling is illustrated by consols, which, in spite of the great abundance of money, closed one-eighth lower than last week, most other home and colonial Government stocks sympathizing with them.

Other gilt-edged securities were fairly firm, but that is about all that can be said of them.

Foreign Government stocks made a fairly good showing at the close, but no remarkable advances were recorded. Japanese bonds were weak and considerably lower as a result of the closing of bull accounts on the failure of the attempt to surround Gen. Kuropatkin's army and force it to surrender. Russians, on the other hand, were strong and a trifle higher.

British rails were very dull at the beginning of the week, but improved somewhat later, so that only one or two of them were unable to show gains at the close.

American rails had a similar experience. There was a sharp setback on Tuesday, the bank statement and crop report being regarded as discouraging. Then came a recovery, with rather active buying, especially of Denver and Rio Grande, Erie, Pennsylvania, Southern, and the Pacifics. New York Central closed 3⅜ above last week's price.

Mines continued in the dumps, the price tendency being generally downward.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—To-day is a holiday on the Stock Exchange.

Bar silver steady at 26¼d per ounce.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—The advance in prices continued on the Bourse to-day, except in the case of Russians, which were inactive, Russian bonds of 1904 were quoted at 502.00. Russian Imperial fours were not quoted.

Three per cent. rentes, 98f 35c for the account; exchange on London, 25f 21½c for checks.

BERLIN, Sept. 17.—The tone on the Boerse to-day was somewhat firmer.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 41½ pfennigs for checks.

Discount rates: Short bills, 2 per cent.; three months' bills, 3¼ per cent.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Market Declines with Decreased Activity on the Bank Statement.

The market was inclined to sag yesterday with pronounced weakness in some issues, even though weather reports continued favorable. The chief feature was the bank statement, which was about as bad as they make them, and which was followed by renewed declines. In this respect the market differed from that of the previous Saturday, when another unfavorable bank statement was followed by a regulation bear panic. The total transactions were only slightly in excess of half of those for the previous Saturday, yesterday being the first day when any sign of decreasing activity was discernible.

Strength in Chesapeake.

About the only strong stock on the list was Chesapeake and Ohio, which advanced on heavy transactions to 43⅝, closing at the highest. The stock has been somewhat neglected in the rise, but the road is said to be doing exceedingly well. The advance yesterday was said to have been accomplished without any aid from the pool in the stock which it is understood was formed several days ago.

Little Leather's Movement.

United States Leather common displayed early strength, but the movement did not excite much interest. Some of the traders said that it was rather a bad sign, as activity in "Little Leather" generally came at the tag end of a bull market.

United States Steel.

Both Steel common and preferred established new high records for the year, accompanied by great activity, the stocks being the most active in the list, but at the end they sold off with the rest of the market for net declines of 3, ⅝ of 1 per cent. in the common, and ⅛ of 1 per cent. in the preferred. It was said that many men prominent in Street affairs who had expected a rise in the shares up to a certain point, and who then found that point was reached, were much surprised to see the shares keep on advancing. The movement has not yet been satisfactorily explained.

Big Vault for Mutual Life.

One of the largest private safe deposit vaults in the country, if not in the world, has just been installed on the second floor of the Mutual Life Insurance Company's Building, at Nassau, Cedar, Liberty, and William Streets. The vault is 15 feet 1 inch in length, 21 feet 7 inches in breadth, and 10 feet 3 inches in height. The vault will be used to store about $200,000,000 of the company's securities.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

The University of Michigan has established a course in fire underwriting and fire insurance engineering under the direction of Prof. W. Glover, its Assistant Professor of Mathematics.

The Security Fire Insurance Company of Baltimore has been licensed to do business in Louisiana.

The National Life Insurance Company of Vermont has been licensed to do business in the State of Texas.

As a result of a $700,000 fire loss on the new warehouse of the Corning Distillery Company of Peoria, Ill., fire protection engineers are suggesting that the warehouse of a distilling plant should be surrounded with trenches so arranged as to carry off the alcohol in case of collapse, in order to prevent the spread of the fire to other buildings.

The German Insurance Company of Freeport, Ill., the St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company, the Westchester Fire Insurance Company, and the Law, Union and Crown Insurance Company have been elected members of the Southeastern Tariff Association (fire underwriters).

C. G. Whipple has been appointed special agent of the Queen Insurance Company in Kansas, Indian Territory, and Oklahoma.

John S. Aldehoff & Co. have been appointed Texas State agents of the Aachen and Munich Insurance Company.

George I. Gorham of Minneapolis has been appointed Minnesota State agent of the Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania.

C. W. Higley & Co. have been appointed Chicago agents of the Girard Insurance Company.

The State Life Insurance Company of Indiana has been licensed to do business in the State of Illinois.

George E. Haas has been appointed Kentucky and Tennessee special agent of the Atlas Assurance Company of London, with headquarters at Memphis, to succeed Claude F. Snyder.

Jesse E. White has been appointed Texas executive special agent of the Hartford Insurance Company.

The McAnnich-Parsons Company has been appointed Cleveland agent of the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company.

The Brewer, Du Four, Ring & Pinkney Company has been appointed general agent of the Houston Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Texas for the State of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Rhode Island.

The reports of the fire insurance companies doing business in the metropolitan district to the New York Board of Fire Underwriters show their total premium receipts for the first six months of the present year were $9,377,325, as against $9,055,653 in the corresponding months of 1903, $7,979,878 in 1902, $7,423,342 in 1901, $5,158,690 in 1900, $5,868,151 in 1899, and $4,556,556 in 1898. The foreign companies regained the lead which they lost three years ago. Seven companies took in over $250,000 each in premiums, as follows: Liverpool and London and Globe, $675,041; Home, $522,940; German-American, $467,957; Royal, $319,535; North British and Mercantile, $298,434; Hanover, $250,136, and Continental, $272,746. Lloyd's agencies collectively took in nearly $197,300.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 17.—Local conditions were unchanged to-day, the course of prices taking their cue from New York. Little interest was manifested in the dealings outside of Reading common and the Steels, in which the movement was disappointing. Most stock showed fractional recessions at the close. Total sales, 24,119 shares; $35,000 bonds.

DAY AND NIGHT SESSIONS.

AN OLD SCHOOL—A THOROUGH SCHOOL.

A Boy That Failed

to make progress at a noted New England academy entered the Groff School recently with several having had similar experiences at other large schools. They were all put into Yale and other large colleges the following September without a condition, one year ahead of their former classmates, and their present standing at college is very high. Mr. Groff's experience with these boys is typical of the success he has had for ten years.

THE GROFF SCHOOL,

228 West 72d St., New York,

now occupying the most handsome school quarters in New York, is ideal and exceptional as a boarding and day school. School home conducted somewhat as a fraternity house.

No young and inexperienced teachers to experiment with students.

Individual attention, the number being strictly limited to 25. No very young boys admitted. Handsome study parlors, billiard room, electric elevator, and full and free use of skating rink, bowling alleys, fencing hall, gymnasium, &c.

Proper and judicious supervision of the daily life of all students of the school, but all foolish school discipline, military drill, and consequent taste eliminated.

Term begins Sept. 29th.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Although almost wholly limited to professional dealing, business last week was generally of more satisfactory and more promising character. Buying of vacant property showed a wider range. While some purchases of this sort were purely speculative, a comparatively large number were for improvement, and in several others, in which building loan operators were the buyers, the properties will undoubtedly be turned over to builders in the near future. There were at least signs of a reviving interest in lots in various districts which have lain dormant since the speculation of last Spring, and from one section—Morningside Heights—two deals were reported which, it is expected, will prove to be but the forerunners of a very considerable movement in that neighborhood.

Despite its admirable location and its general fitness for apartment house construction, the Morningside plateau has had its growth very much retarded solely through its inaccessibility. To divide a journey between elevated road and surface cars, or to follow the elevated and then walk half a mile up hill—neither alternative has possessed any great attraction for New Yorkers. With the exception of Washington Heights, there is no section destined to receive direct benefits from the subway than Morningside Heights, and it will be surprising if within a year there is not a large amount of new construction under way for that territory which heretofore has been kept back, owning wholly to its lack of transportation facilities. Two prominent corners, the northwest and southwest, at Amsterdam Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-second Street, changed hands last week, and, in the case of one of these properties, negotiations for a resale to builders are said to be well advanced.

The group of transactions reported yesterday, including a plot on One Hundred and Forty-third Street, near Lenox Avenue, a block front on Eighth Avenue, and corners on Macomb's Dam Road and Bradhurst Avenue, made it appear that dealing in these vacant properties in the northerly part of Harlem has been infused with considerable new life. The speculation all over this area last Winter and during the early Spring months was based upon the expectation of a season of active building. That this hope was only partially fulfilled has not led to any decline in prices. According to competent authority present figures are considerably higher than those of six months ago for the same property, and John D. Crimmins is said to have refused for his remaining square block a much larger offer than he accepted for the one which he sold.

In many respects the most extraordinary of recent sales was that of the dwelling at 838 Fifth Avenue by Mrs. Mary Bell. When this house and the one adjoining it were put up they were far and away finer than anything that had been attempted by speculative builders—a distinction which, for that matter, they are likely to retain for some time. With an asking price of $500,000 on each one, they represented a standard fully $150,000 above that of the most costly residences erected up to that time, purely as market ventures. That they found buyers so quickly in the first place—Frank J. Gould for one and Mrs. Bell for the other—occasioned no little surprise, but what shall be said when Mrs. Bell, having exercised the feminine prerogative of changing her mind, finds little difficulty in reselling her mansion? Surely, nothing could illustrate better the uncertainties of the real estate market.

LATEST SALES BY BROKERS.

H. G. Paine, Jr., has sold the four-story dwelling 311 West Seventy-fourth Street, 22 by 70, opposite the new mansion of Charles M. Schwab.

John Karsh has bought the four-story American-basement dwelling 169 West Ninety-seventh Street.

John J. Kavanagh has sold for Catherine L. Smith 411 West One Hundred and Forty-sixth Street, a three-story dwelling on lot 16.6 by 99.11. The same broker has leased for Caroline W. Slade, to Samuel E. Jacobs, 49 East Seventy-fifth Street, a four-story dwelling.

William D. Sloane Takes Title.

Properties on Fifth Avenue, near Fifty-second Street, title to which has been held for some time by the New York Realty Corporation, representing W. D. Sloane, were transferred to Mr. Sloane yesterday. The properties are the two marble-front dwellings between Fifty-first and Fifty-second Streets, adjoining the Union Club, and the vacant plot, 65.5 by 100, on the east side of Fifth Avenue, 50 feet north of Fifty-second Street, part of the former site of the Langham Hotel.

Paul Mayer has sold to Maurice Ringler the plot, 75 by 100, on the north side of One Hundred and Seventh Street, 200 feet west of Central Park West.

Flats and Dwellings Sold in Harlem.

Mrs. D. Fry has bought from Sundel Hyman the three-story stone-front dwelling 2,011 Fifth Avenue, 18 by 80.

Benjamin Harris has bought the five-story flat 21 West One Hundred and Eighteenth Street, 25 by 100.11; also, the similar property 21 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street.

Mack & Tuthill have sold 56 Lawrence Street, a twenty-five-foot flat, to the same client who bought the adjoining property, 54, through them last week.

The house bought by the Godspeed Realty Improvement Company, through the firm of Lionel Froelich, was 14 West One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street, not One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street.

Upper Park Avenue Purchase.

Mrs. Max C. Baum has bought 1,384 Park Avenue, between One Hundred and Third and One Hundred and Fourth Streets, a five-story brick double flat with two stores, on lot 25.11 by 80.

Barnett & Co. have sold for A. Garmise the five-story triple flat 238 East One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street, 25 by 99.11.

Buyer for 19th Street Dwelling.

J. W. Jones & Co. have sold for Mrs. E. Teller the house 318 West Nineteenth Street, on lot 25 by 95. The same firm has leased for the Oliver Farren estate the house 159 West Fifteenth Street to H. Kuhlmann for a term of years.

Operator Sells in Dyckman Tract.

Max Marx has sold a plot of eight lots, 200 by 100, on the north side of Elwood Street, about 150 feet east of Sherman Avenue.

Bronx Corner Changes Hands.

Henry Ehlers has sold the northwest corner of Franklin Avenue and One Hundred and Seventieth Street, 44 by 95.

M. F. Kerby has sold for Mary F. O'Brien the frame cottage 1839 Bathgate Avenue, and for C. B. Gillette the frame cottage 2,045 Bathgate Avenue.

A. Shatzkin & Son have bought two lots on the south side of Shiel Street, east of Fourth Avenue, 47 by 100. The same firm has sold to S. Fazarack a lot on the south side of Anthon Street, east of Fourth Avenue, 25 by 100, and to I. Albert a lot on the north side of Two Hundred and Sixteenth Street, east of Sixth Avenue, 25 by 109.

Another meeting in the interest of the establishment of a Bronx Board of Brokers will be held on Sept 28 at the North Side News Building. The following committees have been appointed, and will probably report at that time: Organization—J. Clarence Davies, Henry Hass, John Weiss, Virgil T. Hervey, and Waltar Whewell; by-laws—Morris Marx, William Stonebridge, and W. F. A. Kurz.

Leases of Dwellings and Stores.

Whitehouse & Porter have leased the five-story dwelling, 11 East Sixty-first Street, for Almerie Paget to Mrs. H. Mortimer Brooks for a term of years; also, 269 Madison Avenue, for Francis H. Leggett to T. H. Watkins; also, 213 West Seventieth Street, for F. S. Rook.

Renwick C. Hurry & Co. report the following leases of business property: 365 Fifth Avenue, store and basement, for Charles F. Wetzel and G. B. C. Hogan to David Seid, furniture dealer; also, 1,370 Broadway, southeast corner of Thirty-seventh Street, store and basement, for Robert Hoe to William Wilson; also, Thirty-first Street, for Robert Colt to Abel Rose; also, 12 West Thirty-ninth Street, a five-story business building, for Gen. Howard Carroll to Mme. Zelenka, and, under a sublease, the store in the same building to Edwin & Co.

The same brokers also report leases of residences as follows: 16 West Thirty-seventh Street, for Mrs. Martha Fitch to Mrs. Isabel Hamilton; 31 West Forty-sixth Street, for Mrs. Francis D. Casey to the Comstock School; 10 East Forty-ninth Street, for Andrew McKinley to Guy Phelps Dodge; and, in conjunction with W. E. & E. B. Taylor, 6 East Forty-ninth Street, for Mrs. Eliza W. White to Rev. D. Stuart Dodge. Mr. Hurry has recently incorporated his business with a capital of $50,000 under the name of Renwick C. Harry & Co, and has removed from 428 Fifth Avenue to his new building at 6 West Twenty-eighth Street.

Sales and Leases at Bernardsville.

Post & Reese have sold for Caroline E. Cendict her country place at Bernardsville, N. J., with Colonial cottage and stable and about ten acres of land. The buyer is Robert D. Graham. The property is stuated on the highest part of Mine Mount and adjoins the residence property of Senator John F. Dryden. The same brokers have leased, at Bernardsville, N. J., for the Fall season, commencing Oct. 1, the cottage of George B. Post on Claremont Avenue to Arthur C. Train. Also, for Charles F. Squibb to Schuyler Skaats Wheeler, the cottage on the highway from Bernardsville to Far Hills, near Mr. Squibb's own residence.

Ex-Chief McCullagh in Real Estate.

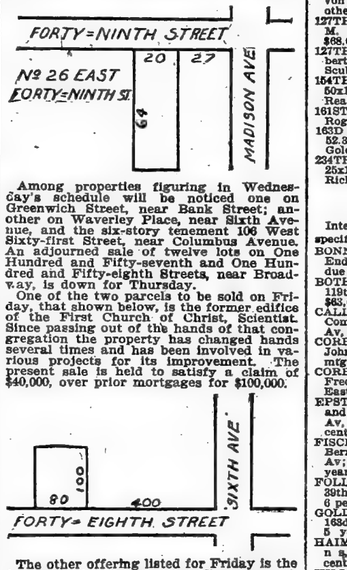
John McCullagh, ex-Chief of Police and at one time Superintendent of Elections for the Metropolitan District, will hereafter be identified with the real estate business. He has formed a connection with the new firm of E. Tanenbaum & Co., 656 Broadway. Although Mr. McCullagh's activities have been largely in other directions, he is said to have had long experience in the handling of property and is considered an expert on west side values.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

Of last week's voluntary offerings the dwelling 961 Madison Avenue found a buyer at $41,600. The Clinton apartment houses on West Eighty-fifth Street, near Broadway, were withdrawn when no higher bid than $100,000 could be obtained. Of the foreclosures the only parcel bought by a disinterested party was the dwelling 344 Lexington Avenue, near Fortieth Street, for which $27,500 was paid. According to competent authority present figures are considerably higher than those of six months ago for the same property, and John D. Crimmins is said to have refused for his remaining square block a much larger offer than he accepted for the one which he sold.

The list for this week is again of insignificant proportions, consisting of only a dozen offerings, but a number of these are somewhat above the average in point of location and speculative possibilities.

The dwelling shown in the following diagram, adjoining the southwest corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-ninth Street, will be put up on Tuesday at the stand of Auctioneer Day. The incumbrances include a $12,000 judgment growing out of the present foreclosure and $30,000 in other mortgages.



Among properties figuring in Wednesday's schedule will be noticed one on Greenwich Street, near Bank Street; another on Waverley Place, near Sixth Avenue, and the six-story tenement 106 West Sixty-first Street, near Columbus Avenue. An adjourned sale of twelve lots on One Hundred and Fifty-seventh and One Hundred and Fifty-eighth Streets, near Broadway, is down for Thursday.

One of the two parcels to be sold on Friday, that shown below, is the former edifice of the First Church of Christ, Scientist. Since passing out of the hands of that congregation the property has changed hands several times and has been involved in various projects for its improvement. The present sale is held to satisfy a claim of $40,000, over prior mortgages for $100,000.

The other offering listed for Friday is the four-story dwelling 40 West Ninety-seventh Street, 18 by 100.5, between Central Park West and Columbus Avenue.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR THE WEEK

There were recorded last week 286 mortgages, for $7,422,075, of which 145, for $4,090,495, were at 6 per cent.; 1, for $3,500, was at 5½ per cent.; 111, for $1,885,880, were at 5 per cent.; 25, for $779,000, were at 4½ per cent., and 5, for $643,200, were at 4 per cent. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 234 mortgages, for $2,850,322, of which 80, for $996,055, were at 5 per cent.; 223, for $1,195,060, were at more, and 31, for $659,207, were at less.

SLOW REBUILDING OF FINE BROADWAY BLOCKS

Retarded Development Opposite Post Office and City Hall Park—How Future Influences Will Operate—Prices in Recent Transactions.

Considering their commanding location the blocks on Broadway between Vesey and Chambers Streets contain a relatively smaller number of modern improvements than can be found within the same space anywhere along the lower part of the city's great highway of business and travel. A comparison in this particular with the territory south of Fulton Street is hardly necessary, but even north of Chambers Street one would have to go a considerable distance before finding six successive blocks with so little new construction as there is in those shown in the accompanying diagram.

The buildings between Murray and Warren Streets and the Broadway Chambers are the only new structures that have been put up during fifteen years of skyscraper building, and it would doubtless tax the memory of oldest New Yorkers to tell of the erection of a good many of the four and five story buildings still standing on lots facing the Post Office and City Hall Park.

This almost total lack of modern improvements may be assigned to a number of different causes. A good deal of this property is held by estates. Some of it has not changed hands except by inheritance for nearly a century—a condition which has made sales and building projects very difficult of accomplishment, if not, in many instances, absolutely out of the question.

For example, a corporation which a year or two ago was considering the northwest corner of Broadway and Park Place as the site for a new building was balked early in its negotiations by finding that one of the small parcels at the rear on Park Place, which was to be included in the enterprise, was incumbered by a provision in the will of the late owner that $500 out of its income should be paid annually to a certain charity.

But even though these Broadway block fronts had been in more progressive hands it is not certain that their improvement would have been much more rapid. North of Fulton Street, or, to be more exact, north of Park Row, Broadway loses a large part of its activity. So far as business is concerned it becomes a one-sided street; a large proportion of its traffic, probably more than one-half, leaves it in the direction of the Brooklyn Bridge and the east side elevated roads, while the kinds of business which would furnish tenants for its tall office buildings are very much fewer. These are the conditions which have kept down the amount of new construction along the blocks north of the Park Row junction and have outweighed the mere facts that the properties are on Broadway and have great and permanent advantages in the matter of light, air, and outlook.

Two changes, one of them in the near future, are likely to have vital effect upon these blocks. The opening of the subway, with the entrances to the City Hall Station within a hundred feet or so of Broadway, will probably divert to the latter a large volume of travel that has hitherto been landed on Park Row and has followed that thoroughfare down to Broadway. On the other hand the proposal to erect the new Court House up town, although this perhaps is as yet a little too remote and indefinite to be reckoned with, cannot but have an unfavorable influence, since proximity to the present structure has been one of the chief recommendations of the new buildings in the neighborhood of City Hall Park.

What few transfers of property there have been within the last decade along Broadway opposite the Post Office and City Hall Park show values in the neighborhood of $100 a square foot. About three years ago Gherardi Davis paid $280,000 for 241 Broadway, fifty feet north of Park Place, on a lot 25 by 100. It should be noted that this price was practically no advance over figure recorded in 1894, when the Home Life Insurance Company bought 257 Broadway, 25 by 108, for $250,000.

The lease of the site of the Postal Telegraph Building at Murray Street, made in 1895 by the Trinity Church Corporation to the late John W. Mackay, states as the annual rental $52,000 and taxes, which, as the lease was made on a 5 per cent. basis, represents a fee value of $1,050,000. The plot containing a little over 12,000 square feet. The Importers and Traders' Bank bought the site at the southwest corner of Murray Street in 1859 for $100,000, title being taken by the then President of the institution, Lucius Hopkins.

Around the southwest corner of Broadway and Park Place Gov. McCullough of Vermont is said to have paid $300 a square foot for a plot 25 by 100, and the Mercantile Exchange Bank is reported to have paid $250 a square foot for the adjoining plot, 25 by 100. Both of these transactions were made about three years ago. Two years ago the Mercantile Exchange Bank bought the adjoining plot, 25 by 100, on the north side of Park Place, for $200 a square foot. Of the substitutes who promise to make a good showing this year Phil Mills is probably the first. Last year he was only prevented from playing regular fullback by the fact that Harvard already had in Schoellkopf one of the best line plungers and ground-gaining backs on the American gridiron. This year he will certainly play at full or at end. At present the end seems the right place for him, for Harvard already has two other strong candidates for fullback in Hanlon, the famous Boston Latin School player, and Harrison, who won his "H" in the Penn game two years ago. With Mills on one end and Montgomery,

COLLEGE TEAMS OPEN FOOTBALL SEASON

Carlisle Indians and Chicago University Both Win Easily.

COLUMBIA'S GOOD OUTLOOK

Yale and Harvard Hunting for Strong Candidates—Dashiel in Charge of Naval Cadets.

Football practically opened its playing season yesterday by a match between the Carlisle Indians and Lebanon Valley College at Carlisle, Penn., the Indians winning handily by 28 to 0. In the West, Chicago University opened the season by meeting Lombard College on Marshal Field. The latter scored once against the Chicago team, the final score being 40 for Chicago to 5 for Lombard. Active practice is well under way with most of the other college teams, and a number of games will be played this week.

Columbia's football eleven is to have the greatest number of coaches in its history this year. William R. Morley is head coach, and he will have as assistants Harold H. Weekes, Columbia's famous half back; "Johnny" Wolff, a veteran end; Edward B. Bruce, centre for four years; James R. Knapp, tackle in '99 and 1900, and in addition D. R. Smythe, tackle on the eleven for two years, who is to return to college and play football again this season and who will probably do some coaching with the new men.

Morley will have charge of the general tactics of the team, while Weekes will direct the practice of the half backs and try to instill into them some of the ability that made him so valuable to the eleven. Wolff will help with the ends, positions in which Columbia the last two years has been weak. Bruce will coach the centre men, while Smythe and Knapp will instruct the tackles. It is also possible that Jack Wright, Columbia's veteran guard, will be on hand for part of the season.

In a hot sun the Blue and White players took two hours' hard practice yesterday morning and some lighter work in the afternoon. Morley gave his charges vigorous practice. They were first put through the usual routine of elementary work, and following that had a brief chance at running through signals in preparation for the scrimmage play which will begin to-morrow.

One of the significant features of the practice was the good work shown by Metzenthin at quarter back. With the probabilities that Jones, last year's excellent quarter, will not play this year, the lack of an efficient quarter has been a source of worry to the Columbia football authorities. Metzenthin last year showed some of the qualities in the way of speed and dodging ability that made Harold Weekes famous. The next likeliest man for quarter is Donavan, who plays substitute last year.

The position of full back, made vacant by the graduation of Capt. Richard Smith, is another place for which until yesterday there was much uncertainty. It now looks as if Capt. Stangland would be tried there. As Stangland is heavy, a hard line plunger, speedy, and has previously had some experience at full back, he will probably be called upon to play full back, where he will be of more use to his team than on the line.

In yesterday's practice three more men reported for the eleven. They were Algeltinger of last year's squad, who played in some of the minor games; Sam Smythe, who played on the 'Varsity, and Goldstone, a new man. Smythe is a brother of David Smythe, who is to return to the eleven as tackle this season, and he is accounted a good man for centre. Morley says that the week of practice just finished is the best Columbia has ever had in her history for this time of the year.

Yale's football season began last Friday, when eighteen men turned out in answer to Capt. Hogan's call for the first practice of candidates for the '04 team. With the exception of the veterans, no new men have as yet appeared, and Trainer Murphy is not hopeful that Yale can this year turn out a winning eleven. There seems likely to be a dearth of heavy line candidates.

Yale will have as a nucleus six men who have won their spurs in Eli football—Capt. Hogan and Kinney, tackles; Bloomer, guard; Horaback, centre; Shevlin, end, and Rockwell, quarter back. Besides these there will be three other men who have played in Yale games—Hare, end; Owsley, half back, and Bowman, full back. Otherwise the choice of men to fill the vacant places will have to be made from prtecically new material.

Cartwright, a freshman centre two years ago, is to try for that position on the 'Varsity, but is inexperienced. Tripp of the University of Chicago eleven three years ago, Irwin, a substitute last year, and McMay, the Georgetown pitcher, may be tried at guard or tackle. Andrews, one of the best men in sight for the second string last year; Lawrence, a heavy and fast man, and McMahon, of the Georgetown full back, may try for tackle. Gates, the Andover Captain; Neale, an old substitute of ability; Stillman, and Turner may try for ends. In the back field Mills, Stevenson, Quill, and Levine are as yet the only men in sight. The season's hard work will begin to-morrow.

Harvard's football season will begin to-morrow afternoon, when Capt. Hurley will put his men through their first practice on Soldiers' Field. The outlook for a good team at Harvard this year is far from encouraging, inasmuch as only three of last year's players from last year's team are available. They are Capt. Hurley and Don Nichols, half backs, and Harry Le Moyne, the big guard. Several substitutes will again be in college, and with one or two freshmen

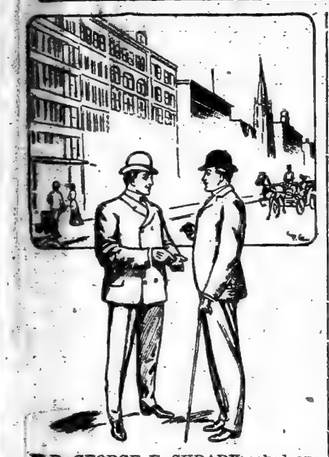
THE MAN IN THE STREET

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES COMPANY.



DR. GEORGE F. SHRADY asked another medical man at a recent meeting of a number of the fraternity if he had ever heard of a three months' old baby talking.

"Oh!" said the other, "of course it is very unusual, but I was called once to attend a sick infant of that age. The case was desperate and past all hope of relief. I was sitting watching for its last gasp when the mother said:

"'Doctor, is there nothing that can be done to save my baby?'

"And I replied: 'Nothing, absolutely nothing.'

"Just then the baby opened its eyes and said nothing, absolutely nothing, and died."

THAT comedy occasionally blends with romance in the stellar sciences is illustrated by the following incident which Prof. Simon Newcomb tells as having occurred during a recent visit paid by several young Western women to the Washington Observatory.

"I had done my best," said the eminent astronomer, "to answer with credit to the Government and to myself the running fire of questions which my fair callers propounded. I think I had named even the remotest constellations for them and was congratulating myself upon the outcome when one of the younger members of the party interjected:

"'But, as it has never been proved that the stars are inhabited, how do the astronomers ever find out their names?'"

CHAUNCEY DEPEW credits one of his latest stories to an employe of the Vanderbilt lines who once attended an old-fashioned camp meeting. The brethren and sisters were giving their experiences, each in the language of his own craft. First a sailor got up and told how he was going to heaven at the rate of 20 knots an hour, before a fair wind. He was followed by a railroad man, who told how he was on the way to heaven on a perfectly ballasted track, behind the newest type of engine, and was making sixty miles an hour, including stops. Finally, a decrepit old woman got up.

"Brothers and sisters," she said, "I have been walking there for the last twenty years, and my rheumatism is so bad that I can't walk very fast. But, brothers and sisters, let some of these fast goers look out or I'll get there first. They may bust their b'llers if they crowd on too much steam."

SIR WILLIAM RAMSAY likes to tell about his first meeting with Prof. Ira Remsen, President of Johns Hopkins University, back in 1871. Both were students at Tübingen University, Germany, but did not know each other. Sir William lost his way. Ringing for a long time at a door in the rear of the laboratory, he was finally answered by a man with dirty face and hands, and still dirtier overalls.

"Können Sie mir sagen wo die Vorlesungszimmer?" queried Sir William. This was shocking German, but he had done the best he could with his phrase book.

"Vas ist?" inquired the man of toil.

The question was repeated. Finally a light broke upon Prof. Remsen. "Oh," he said, motioning to a building across the yard, "I guess you want the recitation room."

A SOUTHERN doctor of divinity in New York on his vacation was speaking of unusual prayers he had heard. One was made by a young lawyer who, through innate piety or from a desire to advance his political fortunes by being identified with the church, besought the preacher to call on him for prayer in the weekly prayer meeting. Suspecting that politics and not piety was at the bottom of the lawyer's desire to pray in public the preacher did not call on him until one rainy night, when the attendance was slim.

Then Brother H., being asked to 'lead us in prayer,' began his supplication. In great detail he mentioned the various situations, personal and general, in which the divine guidance was desired, and it seemed as if he would never stop. Finally, however, he hesitated as if he had forgotten anything else to say. He showed signs of confusion, and then, in a despairing tone of voice, continued:

"In conclusion, your Honor, I might mention many other things, but these will suffice for to-night. Amen."

The story of the "your Honor" prayer was told over the State with a titter, but it never interfered with the lawyer's success in politics, because he has lately completed a term as Lieutenant Governor of his State and is being mentioned for still higher honors.

WALLACE MACFARLANE and Col. Robert G. Ingersoll opposed each other in a lawsuit in Pennsylvania in the early eighties, and in its course heat and acrimony developed. Mr. Macfarlane, it is hardly necessary to say, retained the dignity for which he is justly celebrated, although sorely tempted to retort harshly to the shafts of wit of his gifted adversary. Presently, after Col. Ingersoll had in his pleading been more irritating than before, Mr. Macfarlane broke in with:

"Have a care, have a care, Col. Ingersoll. Remember your theology; recall the story of Ananias and Saphira. Have a care, I say!"

"I well remember that story," retorted the Colonel. "In fact, I have been considering it every time you spoke, expecting to see you drop."

IN the great Boston Public Library there stands on a pedestal in a corner of Bates Hall, the main reading room, a bust in very dark bronze of Oliver Wendell Holmes, the patron saint of Boston. As Lindsay Swift, the Assistant Librarian, was walking about keeping an eye over his charges the other day he saw two old ladies who were wandering about the building approach the shrine, and to his astonishment and horror overheard the following words as both the good dames critically examined the likeness:

"Why, I never knew," remarked one to the other, drawing back a little, "that Dr. Holmes was a negro!"

LEW FIELDS, the comedian, was reading a Western newspaper in his office the other day. Suddenly he burst into a roar of laughter. Turning to his partner, Fred Hamlin, he exclaimed:

"What do you think of this for newspaper writing? How's this for a mixed metaphor?" And he read aloud from the account of a shipwreck:

"'We were clinging to the shrouds, forty miles off Portland Harbor, when suddenly a giant wave broke over us and five poor sailors bit the dust.'"

"Humph!" grunted Hamlin. "Somebody ought to have swept that ocean with a telescope."

HAMLIN GARLAND relates the following, which shows that sometimes a prophet doesn't get all the honor due him, even outside of his own country.

The author sat beside a schoolgirl on a train in Western New York. Glancing at the book she was reading, he saw it was one of his own novels. Naturally he was delighted, and, with an ingratiating smile, said:

"I beg your pardon, Miss; but do you like that book?"

"Oh, yes, Sir. I like it very much indeed!" she replied.

"Is there any particular reason why you should like it?" asked Mr. Garland.

"Well, I find it is a splendid book to read, because there are so many pages I can skip."

Then the novelist put on his thinking cap and gazed thoughtfully out of the window.

GEORGE ZIMMERMAN, the publisher, recently made a trip through Kansas and Oklahoma, a region that he had not visited for more than thirty years.

"I suppose that you noticed many changes out there," remarked a friend.

"Yes, indeed," replied Mr. Zimmerman. "When I first visited that country there were many red men there without a white. On my recent trip I saw many white men without a red."

CONGRESSMAN RICHARD BARTHOLDT of Missouri, Chairman of the Congressional committee which acted the rôle of host to the visiting peace delegates, is an old New York newspaper man. From 1878 until 1884 he was a reporter in this city, and a good one, too. In discussing the political situation in his State the other day he was reminded of an incident in his newspaper career. It was apropos of the perfect control of affairs in St. Louis by the Democratic machine.

"Things in St. Louis are very much as one of the Tammany representatives in the Legislature would have had them in New York, back in '80," he said. "This particular brave, to the great surprise of his colleagues, took the floor one day and made an impassioned appeal for a law to provide for non-partisan Election Commissioners.

"'I want four non-partisan men in each district,' he declared earnestly.

"One of his brother members interrupted him, scenting something wrong.

"'What do you mean by four non-partisan Commissioners?' was asked.

"'Four Democrats, of course,' came the somewhat unexpected reply.

PROF. CHARLES H. CHANDLER of the Columbia University Chemical Department, acting as toastmaster at a banquet given to the celebrated foreign chemists last week, told the story of the Appraiser's troubles over a small package of yeast that was imported into New York some months ago.

"Is yeast subject to a duty, and, if so, on what grounds?" the Port Appraiser inquired of his departmental chemist.

The chemist analyzed and reanalyzed the yeast, and looked up the chemical history of the product. Finally he reported:

"I find that chemists for a thousand or so years have been debating whether yeast belongs to the vegetable, mineral, or animal kingdom. After mature deliberation, I am forced to decide that this package may enter the country without duty on the ground that it is to be classed as animals brought in for breeding purposes, under Section — of the Federal Statutes."

ONE of Simeon Ford's latest stories is about a Pennsylvania Sunday school. A young lady with philanthropic motives was teaching a dozen or two little ones in the mining district.

"Now, where did I tell you the Saviour was born?" she asked one morning.

"Allentown!" shrieked a grimy twelve-year-old.

"Why, what do you mean, Johnnie? I told you He was born at Bethlehem."

"Well," replied Johnnie, "I knowed 'twuz some place on de Lehigh Valley Railroad."

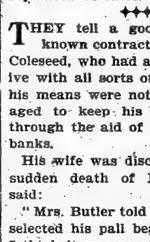
CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary of the Senate, tells of an amusing encounter between a new member of Congress from the West and a Washington newsboy.



Upon his first appearance at the capital the new Representative had some difficulty in finding his way about. One day he accosted a shrewd and alert newsboy, to whom he said:

"Boy, I want to go to the White House."

The lad gave a scornful look at the newly elected statesman. "Very well," he replied, patronizingly, "you may go; but don't stay more than half an hour."

SPEAKING of Custom Houses," said Charles Kurtz, art connoisseur and head of the Art Department at the St. Louis Exposition, "once in traveling through Italy I was stopped on the outskirts of Florence, where they examine the possessions of the festive foreigner before they allow him to enter their gates. They proceeded solemnly to search my baggage, but found nothing dutiable until they at length came upon a little bottle of Chianti that I had bought in Switzerland. It was half full.

"'We shall have to collect duty on this wine,' they declared pompously.

"I got out of the cab, sat down by the roadside, drank what wine was left in the bottle, and threw the bottle away; whereupon they were forced to permit me to carry the wine, minus duty, into the town."

JULIE OPP tells a story of an American bud in London. She was slender, pink, and almost transparent. Enjoying her first ride in a Piccadilly coach she did not realize that she could not own the coach for a few pennies.

A blunt Londoner came in and pushed her toward the edge rather roughly in taking his seat. She looked indignant. Another came in and did the same thing. A third attempted a like incident, when she exclaimed:

"Can't you see there's some one in this seat?"

"No, ma'am," was the reply of the last passenger. "I thought as how you were a painted ad on it!"

THEY tell a good story of a well-known contractor in Chicago, named Colesead, who had always been very active with all sorts of schemes. Although his means were not large, he had managed to keep his head above water through the aid of pretty nearly all the banks.

His wife was discussing with him the sudden death of Herman Butler and said:

"Mrs. Butler told me that her husband selected his pall bearers before he died. I think it was so nice of him, my dear; if you were taken before me, who would you like to have act as pall bearers?"

Colesead thought a moment and then said: "Well, dear, ask the Presidents of the eight leading banks of Chicago. They have carried me all my life."

WILBUR F. WAKEMAN of the American Protective Tariff League, whose first voters propaganda has attracted the attention of political managers all over the country, sometimes runs across a snag.

The other day there was returned to him one of his circulars asking Postmasters to furnish him with the names of the first voters in their districts. It came from a Maryland town, and penciled across the bottom of it were the words:

"No use. The young men down here are all Democrats and will vote for Parker."

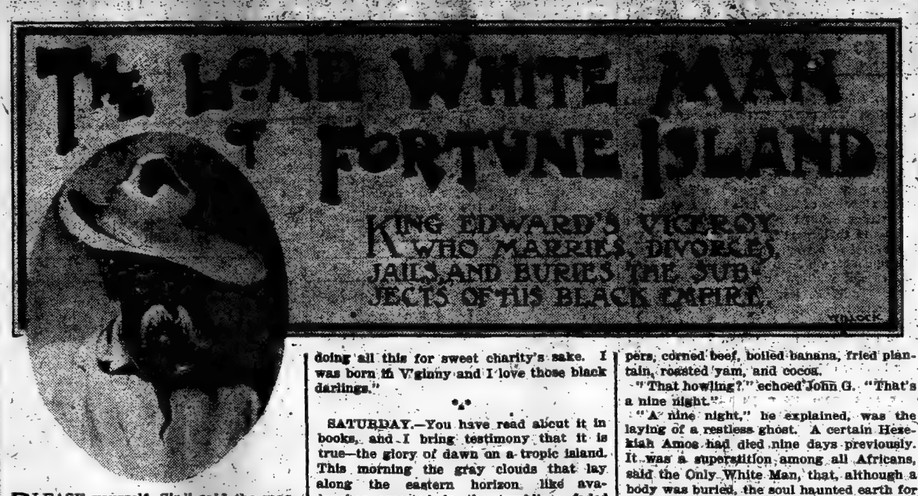
ANENT the widespread division of opinion and sympathy in this country as to the triumph of the Japanese or Russian arms in the Far East, a number of younger officers in the Department of the East were engaged in a heated controversy a few evenings ago in a leading Broadway hostelry. One of the stringent rules of the service is that neither officers nor men in the regular army shall offer any public opinion of the merits or demerits of a foreign military power.

From a war of words the controversy was bidding fair to reach alarming extremes when Col. George Pettit, in command at Fort Myer, sobered the company and brought the hot-headed ones to a fuller realization of the issue by remarking quietly:

"They are fighting over there to establish or encourage one of two things—civilization without Christianity or Christianity without civilization. Before wasting any more words, a choice between those two desiderata ought to be considered."

Needless to say, the controversy came to an abrupt conclusion.



"PLEASE yourself, Sir," said the master of the steamer. "Your passage is booked 'Kingston, Jamaica, to New York,' but if you want to maroon yourself on Fortune Island—go ahead! The joke's on you!"

It was the name of the little strip of land rising out of the horizon over our starboard bow that excited my curiosity.

Only a short time ago I had been reveling in the romantic charm of a pirate novel by Stevenson, and now—here was a real Fortune Island.

"Put me ashore," I said to the Captain.

"That's all right," he replied; "you lie down in a deck chair under the awning and you'll feel all right to-morrow."

I explained to the Captain that I was not seasick; that I had been for a trip through the Indies and had found nothing new or wildly exciting; that I wanted to be sent ashore with the negro laborers, who are picked up by a vessel outward bound and dropped on the homeward trip at Fortune Island, and that I would like to experience the sensation of being alone with 200 blacks on a Caribbean island. The other passengers grinned extensively. The Captain tried to humor me.

"Well, you won't be quite alone, my friend. There's one white man there."

"Good. He'll tell me history. What is his name?"

The Captain rubbed his chin.

"I—I forget," he said. "Say, steward, what's the Only White Man's name?"

"Chon' Chee," said the German steward.

"Oh, a Chinaman?"

"No, an American," said the Captain; "John G. I think—John G. Something-or-Other."

"Well, I am going," I said. "The steamer that touches next can take me aboard. You carry my trunks to New York. Now, I'll pack my suit-case. That is, of course, if you—"

"Go ahead!" said the skipper, "only remember—the joke is on you. And here's another thing to remember: This is Friday morning, and you'll have to keep tally on the days, so as to be ready to get aboard the steamer touching next, unless you want to play Robinson Crusoe for the rest of your life."

"Thanks," I said.

Here is the "tally" on the days:

FRIDAY, 4 P. M.—I am in the house of the Only White Man—John G. That isn't his real name, but John G. is going to stick; it seemed so natural when we met on the beach. When the steamer hove to in the little bay around which the village of Fortune Island is situated, my suit case and I were carefully lowered into one of the many flat-bottomed boats that come off for the home coming population. These boats were packed with negroes, all happy in their earnings, all ecstatic in their drunkenness. They had been with the ship, loading and unloading, all around the West Indian and Spanish Main ports, and the girls were waving them a bandanna'd welcome from the beach of Fortune Island. Do you blame the men for being happy—and drunk? Some folks can be one without being the other; some can't; some won't!

The little island looked picturesque. Presently, as the big American-bound steamer shoved her nose northward, leaving me, a lone orphan white man in an overladen rowboat, the fascination of Fortune Island waxed stronger. The low, white beach, pounded by a sea that looked unreal in its gradations of color, from the Gulf's ultramarine losing depth with the ocean to electric blue, then an opal shade fading into green as it ran inshore to the sandy strip that glared and glistened against the green of the brush and cocoanut palms. Under the shade of the graceful fronds nestled the wattled, thatch-roofed huts of the Fortune Islanders. Here and there was a more dignified edifice, boasting finished lumber walls, painted yellow, and a galvanized roof, painted red, and over all was the great blue dome of the Caribbean Sea. This was Fortune Island.

As the boats drew into the surf I observed standing on the beach a short man dressed in a white duck suit and with a grass hat pulled well over his ears and eyes. One of the boats grazed on a coral reef. The man put his hand to his mouth and made remarks irrelative to the issue.

"That's the Only White Man!" I decided promptly.

As the boat plunged ashore on the crest of a comber I staggered to my feet, and attempting the dignity of a Dr. Livingstone, said:

"John G., I presume!"

The Only White Man glanced at my hands and face, his jaw dropped, then snapped together to the words:

"John—Gee! Say—com'n' have a drink!"

That's why John G. sticks.

FRIDAY NIGHT.—Over a bottle of West Indian rum John G. told me things about Fortune Island. It was, he said, one of the Bahamas. It was called Fortune Island because pirate treasure was supposed to be buried on a little mountain that graced the middle of the place.

"Of course, I tried," said John G., irritably, in reply to the stereotyped question. "But I only found an empty rum bottle and a divining rod."

The island was, of course, British, and he, John G., was, of course, an American. He represented the steamship company that employed the natives as cargo-slingers.

"Incidentally," John G. said, with a yawn, "and Edward Rex being busy, I am Law, Order, Religion, and Education here. I marry 'em, divorce 'em, jail 'em, and doctor 'em."

"There's money in it?" I ventured.

"Not a bit," said John G., firmly. "I'm doing all this for sweet charity's sake. I was born in Virginny and I love those black darlings."

SATURDAY.—You have read about it in books, and I bring testimony that it is true—the glory of dawn on a tropic island. This morning the gray clouds that lay along the eastern horizon like avalanches arrested in the tumbling, faded into bars of speckled amber as the sun sat up on its under-sea bed, yawned, shivered on the chilly edge of day, and decided to get up. Presently the sea, which had been placidly awaiting developments for some hours, wrestled with little breeze-ruffles, full of light-shaft, shadow, and color. The fronds of the cocoanut palms stirred uneasily as if loath to be awakened. A splash of light that had been dancing along the top of Fortune Island's little mountain glided steadily down toward the beach, leaving a trail of luminous red, until its shaft glinted on the topmost frond of the tallest palm over John G.'s house. Then crimson became silvery white; the sandy beach blinked and presently glared; the sea breeze playfully rushed through the palms. The fronds noisily awoke and the breeze drove them curved and resisting against the galvanized iron roofing of John G.'s palace. The Only White Man awoke, called for me and a lime, brewed a West Indian punch, and, lo! it was officially day at Fortune Island!

MIDDAY.—I lay on the beach for ten minutes this morning. Every grain of the white sand seemed to have wings, a bite and a sting. I made a couch of fronds and lay down for thirty minutes watching a number of natives mending nets—silently. Here man doesn't seem to have the right or the desire to speak, with the lulling hum of the far sea, the wash of the near surf, and the melancholy, lyre-like murmur of the steady breeze overhead. Only one man seemed to have no sentiment this morning. He was the Grand Old Man of Fortune Island. He was black, half-naked, and half dead, being feeble and white-haired, but he had eyes like an eagle's and a voice like a parrot's. Tottering around—leaning on a young tree for a staff—he jarred the peace of Fortune Island with a weird profanity, for he knew but one "swear word"—damn. Seeing me lying on the front couch trying to arrange an eyeshade with a hat-rim, the Grand Old Man exploded in this wise:

THE GRAND OLD MAN.

"An' look at dat! De gem-man deadin' ob de heatment an' you dam' wo'tless brutes—porpus (paupers) niggahs—a'lyin' dere like de Gub'nor ob de whole dam' Wes' Indies a-smokin'and a-chewin' like dam' sugar mill an' cyan't get up like gem'men an' make li'l house foh keep sun off'n him gem'manly head! Yoh dam'—wot'less—brutes!"

Although the G. O. M. raved and stormed and "dam'ed" while the "worthless brutes" cut down some palm fronds, (which were presently canopied over my head,) nobody minded. The sea curled and splashed on the white beach; the eolian lyre of the palms sang on; now and then a sea bird screamed, and John G. (whittling a stick on the piazza railing) occasionally called for a fresh lime. And I wondered where the rest of the world was, without caring one of the G. O. M.'s denunciations where it might be.

Under terrible threats one of the worthless brutes brought me a young cocoanut, full-breasted and brimming with milk. As I drank the juice John G. cried sleepily:

"Ever try rum in it?"

Ah, home was never like this!

5 P. M.—John G. threw a pebble at me. I sat up.

"That's a schooner," said he, inclining his head to windward.

"What is she—cocoanuts?"

"Yes—San Blas to the East River. You know—pier above South Fer'—"

"Shut up!"

"Wait," said John G., sagely. "It's all very well now, but"—looking vaguely at the schooner—"you'll get the disease sooner or later. 'Ve a drink?"

9 P. M.—"What's that howling for?" said I to John G. over a dinner of fresh snappers, corned beef, boiled banana, fried plantain, roasted yam, and cocos.

"That howling?" echoed John G. "That's a nine night."

"A nine night," he explained, was the laying of a restless ghost. A certain Hezekiah Amos had died nine days previously. It was a superstition among all Africans, said the Only White Man, that, although a body was buried, the soul haunted earth for nine days. On the night of the ninth day it was the duty of relatives and friends of the decedent to howl themselves hoarse. Would I like to see it? I smiled.

Down the one and only street of Fortune Island we went—two alien figures on a moonlit, sea-washed island, wearing clothes and hats that were strange to the half-naked Fortune Islanders, whose voices greeted us on all sides in soft, lazy accents. As we drew near the wattled hut whence the howling came I could hear one strong voice distinctly, others in a curious wailing and mumbling.

"Oh, Lawd, we'se mis'able 'fenders!" howled the Strong Voice.

"Yee—ow! But dis is a strong ghos'!" wailed another.

"Sing de Hundred Psa'm!" cried a third.

"Pass de rum, yoh cocohead!" roared the Strong Voice. "How me to lay dis bred'ren's spirit if I don' get no rum an' me' voice get hoarse? Pass—dat—rum! Hymn Numbah 206—'Lead, Kindly Light,'" the Voice concluded, with a smack of the lips.

The thatch hut was illuminated by one kerosene lamp, made from a condensed milk can and a piece of wick. Around the dim light circled a crowd of ghost layers. The faces of the women were muffled in bandana handkerchiefs. The men had decorated themselves as conceit dictated. Some wore coats turned inside out. The Strong Voice was gorgeous in a sash of red cotton, with an apricot tin stuck like a crown on his head. The G. O. M. was there to see that the ceremony of laying the ghost of that "porpus nigger," Hezekiah, was conducted in an orderly fashion by those "dam' wo'less brutes."

All were provided with books, but none could read. Some had hymn books, Bibles, or prayer books; one woman had (Heaven save us) a copy of Matthew Arnold's poems, which she held upside down. Most of them sang different hymns to one setting; others observed an independent policy and mumbled words to any or no tune, but all drank of the balm that made Jamaica famous, gladdened the heart of Morgan and Teach, and inspired John Esquemeling, the pirate bard. The peace of the ghost of Hezekiah Amos demanded the vile, red sacrifice.

"God rest the soul of Hezekiah Amos," said I as John G. led me away.

"We'll do our best to help," said John G. holding a bottle against the moon.

MIDNIGHT.—The sea has dropped to a dead calm and silence broods over Fortune Island—silence enriched by the eloquence of the moon, the mocking ripple of the Caribbean on the beach and the thud of a cocoanut falling on the sand. The "nine night" is over, but I still see that inverted Matthew Arnold in the black mourner's hands. I am not wondering how that volume came to Fortune Island. Chance loves to do incongruous things. But is it chance that brings to my memory—here, on Fortune Island, with the stars above and the wide sea separating me from the wide world—the lines of the master, Arnold:

For most men in a brazen prison live,
Where in the sun's hot eye,
With heads bent o'er their toil, they languidly
Their lives to some unmeaning taskwork give,
Dreaming of naught beyond their prison wall.
And as, year after year,
Fresh products of their barren labor fall
From their tired hands,
. . . . . .
Death in their prison reaches them,
Unfreed, having seen nothing, still unblest.

SUNDAY.—"Well, this is Sunday," said John G., as he came pyjama'd and yawning along the piazza.

"Is it different to other days?" I asked, noticing that the Only White Man was squeezing the early lime.

He paused and thoughtfully swept the horizon in search of a sail or a stream of smoke.

"Well," he said, half apologetically, "nobody works on Sunday."

"Does any one ever work on Fortune Island?"

John G. uncorked the main element of the punch.

"We're not heathen, anyway," he said, irritably, "and we've got to have a Sunday at least once a week."

"Well, this is Sunday, anyway," I reflected.

"That's just what I said before you started your fool questions," said John G., with a sigh of relief. "Say when!"

From morning until dinner time we slept more or less. But we invariably woke at the same time—a solemn promise extracted at 11 A. M., when John G. squeezed a lime while I slept. Sunday on Fortune Island is a waking dream and a paradise of sleep. During one of the waking dreams John G. said:

"Say, we've only two quarts left, and no steamer for two days. What's to be done?"

"There's a bottle of Scotch in my dress-suit case," said I.

"A b-bottle of—what?" stammered the Only White Man.

I explained. John G.'s eyes blazed indignation upon me; then he held out his hand.

"If you had told me that when you came," said he, "we'd just have had two quarts, all the same."

"Exactly!"

"Let's go and look at it."

At 1 P. M., while the Fortune Islanders were holding a little prayer meeting, John G. looked at the frond-barred moon and said, softly:

"That moon—that moon, you know—always sorter makes me—makes me—think o'—the amount o' stuff it took to make me."

The lack of sentiment, poesy, and romance in John G. jarred me, for at that moment I was quoting in my mind:

Oh, moonlight nights on the tropic seas,
How the soul mounts away from scenes like these.

"You'll get over that," said the Only White Man, brutally. "There'll come a time, if you stay here long enough, when all you'll want in this world will be—not the palms and the moonlight and the surf and the beach and the smell o' the sea—but a smoots counter, a place to hoist one foot on, and a white man in a white jacket asking you what you'll have."

And John G. was not drunk when he said that—only prejudiced.

MONDAY.—John G. was very melancholy this morning, but brightened remarkably when he found, on consulting a notebook, that a vessel of the company might be expected to-morrow to drop a few laborers at the island on her passage from Haiti to New York.

I spent the morning writing my diary and the afternoon with the Grand Old Man, who took me to the little mountain in the middle of the island. Here he explained to me the mysteries of growing yams, (white and afoo,) cocoas, chochos, plantains, and bananas. Incidentally the G. O. M. has appointed himself Master of Ceremonies at a wedding which is to be celebrated to-morrow night. I told John G. about it. The Only White Man smiled, and said he would try to cancel one of his many engagements and be present at the wedding.

TUESDAY.—John G. in despair. The Haiti steamer has not appeared. I spent the day under my palm shelter on the beach. The Only White Man came to me at 5 o'clock and said:

"Well, I've canceled my opera engagement with Lady Gaunt and the Dowager; so let's call the damned landau and go to the wedding."

We went.

11 P. M.—Whether there was a legal ceremony or not I neither know nor care, but when John G. and I arrived at the big booth, (built of palm fronds on a barbecue, or coffee-drying, terrace,) we found the assembly awaiting our arrival. The assembly was dressed in its best, which was its worst. The G. O. M. arose, cleared his throat, and said:

"Gem'men," and added as an afterthought, "an' ladies. We has met here dis night fe (to) cele'rate de weddin' bondage ob our fren's, Augustus Jones an' Mayrian Septimus. Sit down, Uriah Gordon—you porpus nigger—dam' you!"

The explosion was sudden and expected. When the G. O. M. opened mouth, no dog barked.

"Him can make a speech," some one returned, hoping to mollify the old tiger.

"Yes, you wo'tless brute!" screamed the old man; "I make a splendid speech at you dam' porpus fader's fun'ral."

He became calm suddenly, of course.

"Yes, me fren's," he said, "I is dam' proud fe say dat—I—is Mas'r of Ceremonies." [Loud applause.] "Before leavin' of yoh midse an' goin' away I wold ax you as gem'men an' ladies to behave you'selves in a deestant fashing. I would now ax each gem'men fe take up one female foh a set of lansters."

The G. O. M. withdrew in triumph, for he knew that nobody had ever heard of "lancers." But in earlier days the Grand Old Man of Fortune Island had traveled much, even unto Nassau. However, the band struck up and the guests shuffled through a native dance. The orchestra was managed by three men and a boy. Big drum (kerosene can,) kettle drum (pear can,) a second-hand flutina, (which nobody could play,) and a file and cocoanut grater, (native shuffle music.) I asked John G. what the dance was.

"'A mento," said he.

"Oh, what's that?"

"Same as a marengo."

I gave it up. John G. and I watched the dancers for some time, then left. On the way "home" we passed a young native couple walking hand in hand.

"You is a sweet gal," said he, "an' if you wi' marry me Ah wi' dig you yam-groun' foh you."

He was offering his all, just as millions have done before in this little old world of ours.

WEDNESDAY.—At an early hour this morning the company's steamer from Haiti came in sight and bore down upon Fortune Island. The moment the G. O. M. brought the news the village was convulsed with excitement. A steamer was coming! Lovers were coming home laden with much rum, news, and calico from the great islands of the south. The great flat-bottomed boats were made ready and manned so that the steamer (which carried the Haiti mails) would not be delayed longer than was necessary for the disembarking of the Fortune Island laborers.

John G. turned to me. I confess I was looking at the steamer with mingled feelings. I hated it, for its appearance changed Fortune Island, placing it on the map, connecting it with the world. But again I loved the steamer, because—man cannot live by dreams alone.

"You'd better pack your bag," said John G.

I nodded, but did not fail to notice the fall of a cocoanut on the galvanized roof of the Only White Man's palace.

In five minutes I was standing on the glaring, white beach for perhaps the last time.

"Good-bye, John G."

"Come again," said he, "and—say—"

"Yes?"

"Don't forget to hoist your foot, and mine's a gin rickey."

"They're out of fashion, John."

"That so?". And the King turned sadly to his palace.

The boats shoved off. The G. O. M. sat near me. Presently his crackeli voice began a West Indian chantey which was taken up by the other boats.

G. O. M.—Oh, my darlin', how am Ah to go?
Second Boat—Oh, my darlin', how am Ah to go?
G. O. M.—Oh, my darlin', how am Ah to go?
All Boats—Never mind, Charlie, if de good win' blow!
G. O. M.—How am Ah to go?
Second Boat—How am Ah to go?
All Boats—Neber mind, Charlie, if de good win' blow!

Over the side and before me the grinning passengers. Over the side and behind me the long, low-lying island, the white beach, the green palms, the red, white and yellow houses, and on the shore—John G. T-r-r-ring! from the engine room, and presently far astern faintly arose the chorus:

How am Ah to go?
How am Ah to go?
Neber min', Charlie, if de good win' blow!
Good-bye, Fortune Island!

STEPHEN CHALMERS.

A TRUE STORY.

EX-JUDGE THOMAS F. NOONAN of Jersey City was describing his experiences while traveling across country to his mining property in Arizona, and told how the party, while on one of the ledges of a cañon, descried three wild ducks wabbling along, shoulder to shoulder.

"We'll have those for breakfast," said Joe Ray, a famous cracksman of the frontier; and Aquila Nebeker, President of the Utah State Senate, who is equally handy with a gun, seized his rencaster to take a crack at them.

"You don't intend to kill 'em one by one?" Ray objected. "Bring 'em all down with one shot."

Nebeker waited till all three necks were in one range, and let fly.

"And would you believe," Judge Noonan asked his friends, "that he cut off all three heads with one bullet?"

"Well," returned ex-Judge "Al" Dayton, hesitatingly, "if you say so!"

"Well," Noonan concluded, "I won't say it. This is a true story. He missed all three."

John Arbuckle, Fighter

Won from Sugar Trust the "Right" to Refine 5,000 Barrels a Day and Now Tackles Towboat Combine—His Two Personalities.

JOHN ARBUCKLE, fighter, does not look the part. If you go to see him at the New York headquarters of the great sugar and coffee firm bearing his name, down at Water Street and Old Slip, and are fortunate enough to find him there, you will probably be somewhat astonished when the simple-mannered, mild-spoken old Scotchman who has been stepping a bit nervously about the ground-floor offices comes over and courteously interrogates you: "Well, Sir?"

He has already sized you up, although you may not have known it. He noticed when he came down stairs a few minutes ago that there were two, or possibly three, persons in the offices who were not connected with the house; saw that one, from the way in which he was looking at the trays of raw coffee on the window sills, was in the business; figured that the blandly smiling woman who had been asking everybody for ten minutes back when Mr. John Arbuckle would arrive was either a canvasser or solicitor of some "worthy cause," and made some mental note or other about yourself of which you were quite unconscious.

When the boy took your name to him, as he turned away from the ticker where one of his partners stood with a couple of heads of departments watching the coffee market's close, he looked at you again, nodded, and then walked with that springy step of his over to greet you with the inevitable "Well, Sir?"

The woman solicitor just before you had seen him shake his head and turn back to the ticker, and she, being versed in the ways of busy men, gathered herself together and smilingly departed.

John Arbuckle is yet a powerful man despite sixty-odd years of the hardest kind of work—work that has begun in the morning early and has ended not until evening. He stands there a little stooped, and so does not look his six feet of height. The frame that used to carry two hundred and twenty pounds of muscle is not so heavily weighted down in these later years, and the beard is become a little scraggly. His features are small, his face weatherbeaten, his hair like his beard is streaked liberally with gray. He is dressed not over-carefully in a well-worn cutaway suit of black with the black string tie that might be expected to go along with the costume.

It is the man's eyes that impress most the one who is talking with him. They are utterly lacking in the suggestion of fire, and men who have seen him under all sorts of business conditions say that it is a most unusual thing for them to be otherwise. To be sure, the eyes are very bright, and their glance one that travels rapidly, but they look at the casual visitor, as they have been doing at the partners in the firm of Arbuckle Brothers, in fashion that is almost apologetic in its inquiry.

Yet this is the man who fought the Sugar Trust until it was glad to change the bitterness of industrial warfare for friendly competition, who is now engaged in a battle with the towboat combination for Hudson River trade, and as a side issue has on hand a project for the construction of a great freight terminal for the central section of Brooklyn, between the old Brooklyn and the new Manhattan Bridge. All this, of course, is quite aside from the real business of the man—that of selling coffee and the sugar which he has won from the Havemeyers the "right" to refine at the rate of some 5,000 barrels a day.

A very natural question how it is all done is answered by the reply that John Arbuckle himself makes to all queries save those in regard to sugar and coffee. If, for instance, the towboat war or the freight terminal project be mentioned he will say at once:

"Oh, you will have to talk to my nephew about that—Jamieson, William A. Jamieson—he has that entirely in charge," and then, having disposed of the matter at hand, he bows and turns to something else.

It would be the same way if the caller had a business proposition to propound, instead of being a simple seeker for information, and it would not make any difference whether the sum involved were one dollar or a million. The answer would be: "You will have to talk to my nephew about that. He has the matter entirely in charge."

It might be, of course, one of the other partners—W. V. R. Smith or James N. Jarvey, who stand next to Mr. Arbuckle in the firm, or W. G. Gilmore, the junior member. The four men together constitute the John Arbuckle of the business world, only his is the controlling mind and his the final decision. The other partners are the body and limbs and substance of the firm. They are very much a part of John Arbuckle, incorporated.

Business and financial men and men of affairs generally who know him say that a large measure of John Arbuckle's genius is in getting around him others of unusual ability in their particular lines. The division of labor among the various members of the corporate John Arbuckle is one that bears examination on this hypothesis. After W. V. R. Smith, the senior of the four members mentioned, comes James N. Jarvey, banker, a man pointed out by the more substantial members of the financial community as an example of what a financier having old-fashioned ideas about business honor and great talent may achieve even in these days when the spectacular in Wall Street is that which attracts the lion's share of attention.

Then comes W. A. Jamieson, he who just now is charged with the terminal and towboat projects—a man with a tremendous faculty for handling detail, yet with great breadth of view, who spends his day till 4 o'clock in the refineries on the Brooklyn side of the river, and then hurries over to New York to meet the other members and talk over the day's affairs, or advise with the administrative heads of departments.

He can tell in a moment's ciphering on a card that the approximate annual tonnage which will have use for the new central Brooklyn freight terminal will be some 1,000,000 to 1,200,000 tons, or can state with equal readiness the number of towboats that can profitably be employed during their idle Summer months in the Hudson River barge traffic between New York and Albany—this because he has thoroughly canvassed the elements of each problem, and to answer any specific query has but to put together whatever factors are pertinent and announce the result.

The junior member of the corporate John Arbuckle is W. G. Gilmore, the "outside" man, who handles the advertising of the business, among other things, and besides this has the widest sort of general acquaintance in the Wall Street district as well as among coffee and sugar men. These four—or more exactly the last three mentioned—make up the John Arbuckle with which the business world has to deal in person. The real John Arbuckle it knows as the simple-mannered, kindly old Scotch gentleman, about whom it is necessary to remember the accomplishments of the corporate being, in order to realize what he is and stands for in the way of enterprise.

There are comparatively few of his business associates whose acquaintance goes further back than the time when he came here from Pittsburg in the early seventies. There, he had been in the general grocery business; here, or rather in Brooklyn, he undertook to make a specialty of roasting coffee. The business grew until the day when the coffee specialty became a business in itself.

Twenty-five years of work may easily be spoken of when they are gone, and success has crowned their effort. Only the man who has put in the long days and nights, with self-denial and the strictest economy, knows and shows the cost. John Arbuckle shows it in the stooping frame and weather-beaten skin. It may be also that the gentleness of manner is its result; certainly his simple mien and homely dress come from no other source, and the dogged perseverance with which he pursues his purposes until absolute demonstration has been made of their wisdom and practicability.

Perhaps the American Sugar Refining Company did not weigh the personal equation in this man, its old customer, when it started somewhere back in 1897 to demonstrate to him its control of the refining business. It knew that he had found time along with his coffee trade to put its product up in two-pound bags stamped "John Arbuckle," and was able to sell to retailers at a profit over the cost of purchase and handling because people liked to buy sugar in a convenient package. It had considered the enterprise a fad, the passing whim of the successful coffee man, and so did not take very seriously his entry into the refining business.

When it realized that a competitor had arrived in the field, the trust, with its allied companies, now the National Sugar Refining Company, merely told Arbuckle that if he continued refining it would not sell him any more refined sugar for the two-pound-bag trade. Arbuckle, or the particular member of the corporate person upon whom the duty fell, replied that it did not make any particular difference whether the trust sold to him or not; that he was going to refine sugar anyway. So the war began with a cut by the trust as soon as the Arbuckle sugar began to reach the market, continuing until there was a difference of less than half a cent between the cost of crude sugar and the wholesale price of refined. Men said that John Arbuckle was a fool; that nobody could refine sugar at that rate of profit and come out square, and that the trust could stand it long enough to put him, even with his coffee millions, out of business.

At present there is comparative peace in the sugar world. But the difference between the cost of crude sugar and the selling price of refined is but a small fraction more than half a cent a pound, and John Arbuckle has made money—presumably the trust also, else it would not have accommodated itself to the new conditions. In other words, John Arbuckle has taught the Sugar Trust that it used to make a greater profit than it was entitled to in handling a public necessity, because it had stifled competition, which he has now reintroduced.

The towboat war in its serious aspects does not differ much in kind from the sugar war. It happens that with a business like that of Arbuckle Brothers there is need for a good many more tugs in Winter than in Summer. So the detail partner, the "Nephew Jamieson, William A. Jamieson," set his head to devising some profitable field for employing such tugs as might be idle. The Hudson River traffic appeared to be such a field, and the next question was, What opportunity is there in it for profit?

At the rate at which the Cornell Towboat Company had been conveying barges between Albany and New York—$50 for the round trip—there appeared a little more than a fair profit. So the Arbuckle tugs offered to take the barges for less money. The towboat company cut prices, and then the Arbuckles cut, and so on, as already known. The only difference between this and the sugar war is that the Cornell people have not yet discovered what sort of a man—corporate and personal—they are up against. Meanwhile the canalboat folk are glorying in a rate of $5, which will remain until the Cornell Towboat Company learns the same lesson about competition that the Sugar Trust learned.

The central Brooklyn terminal project is somewhat of a different order, being non-competitive, but that, like the others, grew out of the necessities of the Arbuckle business. The terminal will cover some four blocks from Jay Street, north to the Kings County Electric Light and Power Company's plant, and is intended to give to that section of Brooklyn, with its million tons or more to be moved every year, better terminal facilities even than South Brooklyn or Williamsburg enjoy. This is strictly an enterprise of the corporate John Arbuckle, with the real John Arbuckle as master mind. The latter individual, of course, does not bother himself about the details any more, thanks to the "Nephew Jamieson, William A. Jamieson," who has them "entirely in charge."

It's a natural thing to wonder what the real John Arbuckle does in these days, when his corporate person is so skillfully managed by its four members. Whether he spends his mornings in his library and his afternoons behind his horses, or days and weeks at a time away somewhere on a yacht or country place. He does none of these. His mornings he spends as he has spent his mornings for thirty years, at the plant of Arbuckle Brothers, in Brooklyn, encompassed by the details of refining sugar and roasting coffee. About noon, or a little earlier, as the case may be, he goes over to the New York offices and stays there immersed in more details until 4 or 5 o'clock. Then he goes home and stays home until the next morning, unless, perhaps, a social affair of the Plymouth Church calls him out in the evening.

And all during this long day—on Saturday afternoons, also, when he personally inspects a good part of all his plants—John Arbuckle, the fighter, would hardly be recognized by his personal associates. To them, in hours of business as in social chat, he is John Arbuckle, the kindly old Scotchman, who distributes to his friends in the financial district such cards as this:

> Politeness is the cheapest commodity on God's earth. It costs nothing and will carry you further and pleasanter through life than any other ticket you can travel on.

The Sugar Trust people are among those who have received these little cards, for those high in authority among them have known John Arbuckle always as their old customer, the real John Arbuckle, and not the corporate John Arbuckle, fighter.

No doubt he would be glad to send similar cards to the towboat combine if it cared to receive them.

England Excited Over Strange Miscarriage of Justice

Adolf Beck, Convicted Twice and Once Imprisoned for the Crimes of His "Double"—Home Office to Investigate.

THE sentence of five years' imprisonment imposed upon William Thomson, alias John Smith, at the Old Bailey, London, last Wednesday, lowers the curtain upon another act of a play that has in it all the elements of comedy and the effects of tragedy. While Thomson, or, as he is commonly called, John Smith, goes to his well-earned imprisonment for obtaining money and jewelry under false pretenses, Adolf Beck, an unfortunate Norwegian, takes exception to the King's pardon and refuses a solatium of $10,000, both of which were offered as a balm for the sufferings he underwent while serving five years' penal servitude for crimes committed by John Smith, for whom he was mistaken, tried, and twice convicted.

The story is "strange but true," and bears a similarity to many features in "l'affaire Dreyfus." George R. Sims, the author and dramatist, through whose individual efforts an inquiry will be instituted into the persecution of Adolf Beck, has been compared by the French journals to "M. Bernard Lazare, the eloquent champion of the prisoner of Devil's Island."

The "affaire Beck" began as far back as 1877, when a clever and smooth-tongued swindler appeared in London under the description of "Lord Willoughby of Abbey Road, St. John's Wood." His "Lordship" was one of those whose intentions make good paving stones; in fact, his generosity depleted his own bank account and that of everybody with whom he came in contact. He was so irresistibly handsome that when he said he wanted a housekeeper for his home in St. John's Wood he experienced no difficulty in getting many.

Out of the goodness of his heart his "Lordship," who hated to disappoint sixteen of the seventeen housekeepers who applied, allowed them all to make out a new wardrobe list, the expense of which he munificently incurred, forgetting, perhaps, that he had no account at the Union Bank, upon which he drew the checks. He also borrowed the rings of the seventeen housekeepers, saying that he intended purchasing finer ones, and, of course, needed the sizes. With his usual forgetfulness his "Lordship" omitted to return the rings, forgot the Abbey Road address, and was promptly arrested by a policeman named Spurrel.

"Lord Willoughby" then said that his real name was John Smith. He was tried at the Old Bailey on a charge of obtaining money and jewelry under false pretenses and sentenced to five years' penal servitude. The prosecuting counsel in that case was Forrest Fulton, who played a prominent rôle in the fiasco that followed.

John Smith, alias "Lord Willoughby," came out of prison in due course, and for fifteen years nothing was heard of him. In 1895, however, there began a series of robberies, the methods employed being characteristic of John Smith, alias "Lord Willoughby." The 1895 swindler called himself the "Earl of Wilton"; he was always looking for a housekeeper for his place in Abbey Road, St. John's Wood; wrote fluent, delightful, encouraging letters to his applicants; bought them new clothes; issued checks on the Union Bank, and borrowed rings. The fact that on one occasion the 1895 swindler signed himself "Lord Wilton de Willoughby," and on all occasions forgot to return what he borrowed, convinced the police that John Smith had come out of the "Winter of discontent," and that the sooner he was back in prison the better.

Where Beck Entered.

In December, 1895, the minions of London justice brought in a prisoner who looked uncommonly like John Smith, alias "Lord Willoughby." The prisoner, however, indignantly denied this, describing himself as Adolf Beck, a Norwegian, of fair means, engaged mainly in mining operations in Scandinavia. The police, however, were elated over the capture, and refused to believe that Beck was not "John Smith." The Norwegian was arraigned before a Magistrate and held for trial at the Old Bailey on the evidence of Policeman Spurrel, now a pensioner, who declared that Beck was "the same John Smith" whom he had arrested while on the force in 1877.

By a curious coincidence that might be called "the irony of fate," the Judge who presided at the trial of Adolf Beck on a charge of obtaining money and jewelry under false pretenses was Sir Forrest Fulton, who as plain Forrest Fulton had conducted the prosecution against the real John Smith. Whether Forrest recognized Beck as Smith, or recognized the error, no one but himself knows, but it is a fact that no attempt was made by the prosecution to identify Beck as Smith. On the contrary, Spurrel was not called as a witness, and when the Treasury's handwriting expert was about to testify that the documents and letters in the robberies of 1895 were in the same hand as those of the 1877 series of swindles, the prosecuting counsel objected, ruling that the question whether the prisoner was or was not the man convicted in 1877 was inadmissible.

Strange as it may seem, this ruling was fraught with terrible consequences for Adolf Beck. Had the prosecution tried to prove his connection with John Smith, Adolf Beck could have broken down their case, for three witnesses—one of them a Gentleman of the Chamber of the King of Denmark and a personal friend of Beck—came to court prepared to swear that the unfortunate Norwegian was in Lima, Peru, while John Smith was picking oakum in prison!

Conspiracy Suggested.

But this alibi was of no service to Beck, who was convicted and sentenced to five years on the identification of a number of women, who said that they had been robbed by the prisoner. A fact that suggests a conspiracy against Beck is that only one of the women who appeared as witnesses raised a point of doubt as to the identity of Beck with Smith. She said Beck was like the man, except that he did not have a scar that she had observed on the face of the real swindler.

This point in favor of the prisoner seems to have carried as little weight as others did. It was "immaterial" whether Beck was Smith or not. Yet, now that the history of the affair has come out, it is strange that in prison Beck was labeled Smith, and his prison clothes were stamped "D. W.," the first letter of which combination means in prison language "Convicted in 1877, and the second "Convicted in 1896." And it is one of the strangest points in the whole case that after he had been tried as Beck and imprisoned as "Smith," he should still remain "Smith" when it was found upon physical examination that the bodymarks of Beck and Smith did not correspond!

For a time the incident was closed; it was only a matter of court record. While the innocent Adolf Beck wore his life away—not in penitence, but in indignation and vain protest—in Wormwood Scrubs, Chelmsford, and Portland, the real criminal was writing his encouraging letters to would-be housekeepers, but, realising his advantage, operating his swindles without undue ostentation.

Then a ray of hope came to Beck. He learned while in prison that his bodymarks did not correspond with those of John Smith. It is a fact that John Smith was a Jew; the prison records showed this; and it was also a matter of record that Adolf Beck was not a Jew! The unfortunate man immediately petitioned the Home Secretary. The Home Office had disregarded previous petitions of his, but on learning that Smith was a Jew and Beck a Christian the Home Office ordered the "D" to be taken from Beck's prison clothes. This action of the Home Office will in all probability be subjected to rigid investigation by the commission of inquiry appointed by the present Home Secretary, Mr. Akers-Douglas, for while Beck was officially declared to be not Smith, he was still held in prison guilty of a series of crimes the exact duplicate of Smith's.

A Ruined Man.

The persecuted man was released on a ticket-of-leave in July, 1901, broken in health and spirit. He attempted to gather up the lost reins of business, but presently realized that his sufferings were not over. Wherever he went his business associates regarded him as an ex-convict! He was ruined financially and socially. For the next three years he lived on the money which he realized from the sale of his mining shares. He led, perforce, a quiet life, and during those three years his best friend was George R. Sims, the novelist, who believed in Beck, with whom he became acquainted in 1885. The man was broken down with the ignominy which had been heaped upon him, and to add to his misery, shortly after his arrest his mother, the widow of a retired sea Captain, had died of a broken heart over the fate of her only son.

In the early part of the present year the real John Smith got to work again, and again Adolf Beck was arrested, charged with the same offense.

The Old Bailey once more, and the persecuted man found himself regarded in the light of an "old-timer out on ticket-of-leave"!

Again women identified him "positively"; again he was convicted. Justice Grantham reserved the decision that would have sent Adolf Beck to prison for the rest of his natural life.

In the interval between the two sessions a dramatic climax occurred. Lying in Brixton Prison, Adolf Beck wrote a letter under date of June 6, 1904, to Chief Inspector Froest of Scotland Yard saying that he (Beck) was again a victim; that his double must exist somewhere or the persecution was a diabolical plot. To the communication Inspector Froest naturally enough did not reply, receiving, as he does, scores of letters every day from "outraged innocence." The Chief Inspector must have sat up suddenly in his chair when news was brought to him that John Smith was back at his old game! Why, wasn't John Smith in Brixton Prison?

The truth was out. With the forgetfulness that had been peculiar to "Lord Wilton de Willoughby" throughout the whole fiasco, John Smith had overlooked the fact that he could not commit robbery while his scapegoat was in prison!

The real man, the John Smith of 1877, was caught red-handed and imprisoned. While in jail an honest policeman recognized him as the convict of 1877. The Jew confessed everything. Inspector Kane, one of the best officers on the London force, set to work to unravel the Smith-Beck tangle; George R. Sims became the Emile Zola of the hour; less famous scribes followed his example; the press of the British Empire, the tongues of the British public, howled indignation. The long-vaunted "English justice" was at stake!

Beck was immediately freed., He received the King's pardon, and the Treasury offered a solatium of $10,000. Beck replied tersely. He objected to the use of the phrase "not of grace" in the King's pardon; he refused the $10,000!

Sims and other scribes took advantage of the moment. Every paper in London approved Beck's refusal; one journal said it would give the £2,000 should the Treasury withdraw the offer. But the public was not satisfied with that. Beck must have more, but—and this was more important—the Home Office must begin immediately a searching investigation into departmental conditions. The questions that convulsed London and all England were these:

English Justice in Question.

Had English justice become so lax that a man might be arrested, tried, and imprisoned for crimes committed by another man?

Why had the court refused to listen to the alibi that would have cast ridicule upon the possibility of two different men writing duplicate, thinking duplicate, acting duplicate, and using even the same phraseology when the arrest of the real culprit showed that the two men were not in any way alike?

Had it come to this, that the police procured convictions at the expense of truth, and Judges sentenced to save trouble?

Why had the prison officials branded Adolf Beck as "John Smith, D. W.," when he had been tried and sentenced as Beck, and the question of his identity with Smith had been ruled "inadmissible"?

Why had he been branded "John Smith, D. W.," when the absence of certain bodymarks proved beyond doubt that Beck was neither "Smith" nor "D"?

Why, when Beck petitioned the Home Office and offered to prove his own innocence in open court, had that petition been pigeonholed?

Was this stupendous blunder the result of departmental carelessness or the work of conspiracy?

In either case the London press and the British public wanted to know. Beck himself petitioned the Home Secretary praying for an inquiry, but received no reply for some time. The public asked if that petition had been pigeon-holed also. One London daily printed the following in every issue:

"Mr. Adolf Beck is still without a reply, either from the Home Secretary or the Home Office, to his request for a public inquiry into his two unjust convictions. This request was forwarded —— days ago."

It is probable that Mr. Akers-Douglas, the present Home Secretary, shirked the task of raking over a predecessor's work or of starting an inquiry that would undoubtedly fix a blot on the history of English justice. Be that as it may, the Home Office has recently been forced by the insistence of public and press to start an investigation of the circumstances that surrounded the arrest, trial, and penal servitude of an innocent man. This result has been obtained mainly through the efforts of George R. Sims and Sir George Lewis, the eminent English lawyer, who is counsel for Adolf Beck.

American Manufacturers Reply to Sir William Ramsay

Not Behind the Germans in Applying the Results of Scientific Research.

AT first, manufacturing chemists in and around New York were disposed to criticise, if not to resent, the statement of Sir William Ramsay, made in THE NEW YORK TIMES last Sunday, that American chemists, as well as English, are far behind Germans in enterprise and chemical research. On calmer consideration they admitted it was true, and gave reasons therefor. Some of them declared that Sir William may find reason to revise his opinion to a certain extent after his American tour is completed, but that is what Sir William himself said in the interview. At the time he spoke merely from general knowledge as an expert familiar with his subject.

The local manager of Parke, Davis & Co., who have laboratories in all parts of the globe, said: "The Germans employ more chemists along special lines of work than American manufacturers do, but their laboratories are no more complete than ours. This company has just put up a laboratory in Detroit that cost upward of $200,000, and has been described as a model in the German press. It was not built for commercial purposes, but for the standardization of our products. We can do as fine and as rapid work there as they can do in Germany, or anywhere else in the world. Sir William will visit this laboratory before his return to New York.

"American manufacturers want quicker results than the German, and are not willing to spend so much time or along special lines of investigation. I do not know of a manufacturing concern on this side of the water that would have any use for seventy chemists, which Sir William said was a number to apologise for in Germany. If we develop an idea along certain lines, and find it does not pan out, we drop it and try something else. The Germans would stick to the idea and develop it to its logical results, regardless of profit. It is in persistency that they are ahead of us. Perhaps it is a quality born of age. Chemical science, particularly organic science, is very young on this side of the Atlantic. If an American manufacturer wants to employ seventy capable chemists he would find no difficulty in securing them. We have experimented with artificial camphor over here, and are still experimenting with it. But as we cannot get rid of its turpentine smell, the product is not valuable for commercial purposes.

"Some American manufacturers spend large sums for chemical experiments. I can mention the Standard Oil Company, which, by the way, contributed $5,000 for the entertainment of the visiting foreign chemists. Not long ago the Standard Oil Company got hold of a crude oil they could not use because of its vile odor. They sent for a good chemist and told him he must purify it; no negative answer would be taken. The desired result was obtained. When the Cambria Iron Company wants to find out what it can do with two specified pieces of metal it engages a chemist and sets him to work. Experts are paid extremely well for this sort of enterprise. Sometimes it is necessary to sink a ship to drive the rats from her. One of our chemists was told to experiment with a vaseline that would mean sure death to the rats. He got the results he was told to get. I don't know that the discovery has any commercial value, I mention the incident to show that American manufacturers are making experiments."

At the office of J. H. Baker & Co. the manager said: "We have a staff of clerks who read all the scientific magazines and suggest experiments. If they find anything suitable to our ideas we go ahead with it. If not, we drop it. In Germany a man will plod over an idea for half a lifetime before he gives it up, regardless of the commercial value of the information he is seeking. We have no time for that. We manufacture products we can sell. It might surprise Sir William to know that American manufacturers have spent $250,000 in trying to make good artificial camphor since the scarcity caused by the Japanese war. What they have produced is all well enough for the laboratory—say a lump of two or three pounds—but it cannot be produced in anything approximating a commercial value, so far as I know. When a man comes in here now and begins to talk about artificial camphor I get my gun. It is unquestionably true that the Germans are ahead of us in certain lines of chemical investigation, but that they are more prompt to make use of what they learn I am not ready to admit. The conditions of the work are different."

A member of the firm of Roessler & Hasslacher said: "American manufacturers know all that is going on in their world of science. We are getting ideas from Germany all the time, and she is getting them from us. The Germans pursue lines of investigation we would not care to take up. We can get the results from them. I think Sir William's criticism applies more to English manufacturers than it does to American. The Englishman is as self-sufficient in chemical manufactures as he is in other lines of industry. If you do not like things done in his way, you may go elsewhere. He is not going to change the habits of a lifetime to please you. I think Sir William will find American manufacturers have progressed more than he thinks before he concludes his Western visit."

Dr. T. J. Parker of the United Chemical Company said: "Sir William will probably be glad of an opportunity to revise his opinion. Labor is much cheaper in Germany than it is here, and manufacturers can afford to employ seventy chemists along special lines of investigation if they require them. So large a number is not required here. We, on this side, devote ourselves more assiduously to manufacturing things that are in actual demand in the market, and not simply to stock up our warehouses. Take aniline dyes, for instance. It does not pay Americans to experiment with them in the 200 or 300 combinations of colors. It is cheaper for us to import them. Germany has made a great study of anilines.

"On the other hand, we are far ahead of them in the bromides used so much in photography, because of our proximity to the raw supply in Michigan. We have the bromide market of the world. They go in for organic chemistry in Germany much more than we do here. Our experiments are more in the way of inorganic chemistry. Moreover, the American chemical industry is young."

LITTLE LIARS OUT of SCHOOL

The Teacher's Life Not All a Happy One—Victims of Slanders.

THE woman who teaches boys and does not murder them deserves a great deal of credit for her forbearance."

Such was the startling assertion of an educator of many years' experience. And then he went on:

"I have sometimes, as School Principal, been reminded of what I once read of as having taken place in the good old times on a Mississippi steamboat. A typical backwoodsman was aroused late at night by a gambler who rushed into his stateroom and threatened to shoot himself then and there unless the other would supply him with the wherewithal for carrying on his game of poker.

"'Shoot and be what's-his-named,' was the curt reply.

"'But, argued the other, 'If I am found dead in your stateroom it will naturally be supposed that you shot me, and you will have to face the consequences.'

"'Oh, that's your little game, is it?' said the aroused sleeper. 'Well, if I've got to hang for killing you, you bet I am going to have the fun of the thing.'

"And, whipping a six-shooter from under his pillow, he soon had the intruder begging for his life.

"Now, these school ma'ams, old and young, have so often been charged with cruelty by the little rips that they have to manage that it seems to me they would sometimes be provoked into deserving the bad name that they get when little liars tell made-up tales out of school. Why, I have known a chap to tumble over a pile of cobblestones and bruise his face, and then go home and tell his people that his teacher hit him there. There was a row made about the matter, and it might have gone hard with the teacher (a puny little woman, with no more strength than a kitten,) if the boy's playfellows hadn't had conscience enough to tell how he came by the bruise.

"If I had been in that teacher's place, after that pupil had lied about me in such a fashion, there would have been a bruise on his other cheek which he might, with truth, accuse me of putting there. I earnestly implored his mother to give him a good hiding for his sinful slander, and she promised to do so, but I am convinced she did not keep her word. In fact, I suspect she stuck to her belief in the boy's story, in spite of the inherent improbability of the thing, and in the tenement where she lives the teacher is, no doubt, spoken of freely as 'a holy terror.'

"Talk about being possessed of the devil! Why, some of the boys that weakly little school ma'ams have to contend with are just running over with him.

"One afternoon, after school had been dismissed, I found one of the lady teachers so used up with palpitation of the heart that she had to be sent home in a cab. She told me what brought it on. She had kept a boy in for disobedience and he had got into such a rage that she had to hold him back by main strength to prevent his throwing himself out of the window.

"'Why didn't you let him jump?' I asked. 'There are plenty of boys to spare in this city.'

"'But if he had been picked up from the pavement alive, you know he would have vowed and declared I pushed him out,' she said, 'and I don't care to be sent up for assault with intent to kill.'

"And that's just where the trouble comes in. So far from being able to stop the lies that were born in them, school teachers cannot even prevail upon some of their pupils to tell them grammatically."

NOT ALWAYS.

A MUSICIAN, well known in Baltimore, went with a friend one day to a concert, at which a rival of his played a Bach prelude. This involved much difficult pedaling over which he blundered sadly.

Turning to his friend the musician muttered drily: "I always thought an ass was a sure-footed beast."

Changing Off.

Gout—Not always. Sometimes I swear at him.

THE aspect of Lhasa—the Forbidden City, which for centuries has baffled the curiosity of the enlightened world—has been at last graphically described by the correspondent of The London Times who accompanied Col. Younghusband and the British mission which succeeded in entering the city, the seat of the strangest Government in the world. This correspondent's illuminative letters are printed below.

In a cable dispatch dated Lhasa, Sept. 10, via Gyang Tse, Sept. 15, it is announced that in accordance with the treaty between the British and the Tibetans, signed Sept. 7, prisoners on both sides were released.

The ceremony was a picturesque one. Some of the prisoners released by the Tibetans had been in captivity over twenty years.

One old man, who was imprisoned for assisting Sarat Chandra Das, had been kept in a dark dungeon and had gone blind. He at first refused to believe that he was receiving his freedom, and thought he was being led out for torture.

LHASA IN SIGHT.

TO-LUNG, Aug. 2.

The Potala, all the afternoon a sharply defined mass of maroon buildings crowning a low hill in the middle of the spur-indented plain before us, is now a disappearing blur in the rain and the gathering twilight.

There is a spot on the road two miles back where an adobe chorten and a pyramid of pebbles—heaped one by one by the pious wayfarers to Lhasa—mark the point from which the first view of the Grand Lama's palace is to be had. As one rides along, the northern slope of a hill slowly disengages itself from the last concealing spur on the south, and a gleam of gold from the height of the square heavy building astride the crest reveals the Potala across a green sea of unripe barley, across the low, thronging willows that here and there stretch a darker line of foliage along the more vivid carpet of the marsh. Such is the plain fact as to the first sight of the Lamaic Vatican from the west, and it is strange that previous travelers have at times given such inaccurate accounts. But even so no glimpse of Lhasa itself is to be had, nor can the town be seen till the actual knife-edge is climbed which joins Potala and Chagpori, the twin guardian hills immediately to the west of the sacred city.

At nine miles' distance the two peaks stand out strongly, but the first view of the buildings upon them is perhaps disappointing. One was hardly prepared to find so plain a back view. Only a smaller white outline beside the dark red mass and a zigzag turning the side of the hill in its descent gave promise of what the steep face of the rock was hiding. On Chagpori there was but a square squat tower to be seen, like any other of the half-dozen ruined jongs we had passed on the way.

Since I wrote last from Chaksam—or "Iron-bridge"—Ferry, we have come on thirty-five miles in three days, and little by little all the way the road we traversed took on the dignity that becomes the last stages along a Via Sacra. There is not indeed, even so close to Lhasa as this, the multitude of chortens which besets at regular intervals the first few stages of the road which leads from China to Potala, but what there is is significant. Always in Tibet, at the summit of a pass, at the entrance to a village, at a cleft in the rock-side which looks a likely home of devils, at the crossing of a stream, one is accustomed to find the flicker of a rain-washed string of flags or a gayly decked thicket of tall—foot willow sprigs. But along the road which deserts the lazy levels of the river-side—the main track that has been driven, the innumerable mantras cut in light relief upon every offering surface betray a pilgrim's road. Chortens increase in size and frequency, sometimes, as on the river bank opposite Nam, boldly disposed in the open, more often shrinking into a recess of the mountain scarp from which their almost invisible stones were hewn. More than all, the deeply incised images of the Master become the common consecration of every rocky prominence, smiling inscrutably through half-closed eyes over the folded hands and the begging bowl on the lap.

The Roof of Debung.

The river widens out at Nam. A glitter of gold is seen as the corner is turned, and perhaps most pilgrims think they have at last sighted Lhasa. It is, however, only the roof of Debung or of the Oracle House close by—the sacred city does not so easily yield them even a glimpse. At Nam we halted for the night by the side of the wide curve which the steady volume of the Kyi Chu has eaten and is still eating out of the alluvial flats. On the next day, still following the difficult track along the indentations of the hills, we emerged at last into a wide, well-cultivated plain, and along a sunken road between great fields of peas and wheat, made on to the well-wooded village of Ne-thang, the last stage of pilgrims, and itself interesting as the residence of the great eleventh century Buddhist teacher and reformer Atisha. But, if the truth were to be told, one doubts whether even the most learned devotee has had leisure at this last hour to meditate upon the local attractions of Ne-thang. The nearness of Lhasa is the dominating thought, and we were not to stay. Four or five miles ahead, as the village willows are left behind, the valley ahead seems closed by the dark spur which has for a day been the chief barrier hiding from us the sight of the Plain of Milk on which Lhasa lies. To meet it another spur runs in from the southern hills, and in the space between the two a great rock, shaped not unlike a small Gibraltar, seems to allow scant room on either side of it for the waters of the Kyi Chu. Lhasa is shrewdly hidden.

The dark blackish spur ahead changes color as we approach. It is now a fissured mass of ravines crowded with sharp pinnacles, bearing here and there, where it may find foothold, a stretch of coarse vegetation. Between it and the isolated rock the road passes, and immediately to the left on the inner face of the spur looking toward the still hidden city is a great forty-foot image of Gautama, cut in three-foot relief in the raw rock, and bedaubed coarsely with yellow and blue and red. A heap of stones stands before it, pilgrim-raised, to celebrate their entrance into the plain. But one has still to go nearly two miles, past curious formations of gneiss jutting out like huge armor plates from the hillsides, past an interesting example of the strange cupped stones which occur mysteriously all the world over from Mexico to Japan, and past swampy stretches of vivid grass growing on soil more water than earth, before the still intervening spur from the Tungo La on the south is outridden, and at last Potala sails out from its point into the blue distance.

Ta-lung is chiefly the bridge, a wall-built stone-pierced structure with forty-foot sterlings upstream, and a containing wall of first-rate masonry on either side extending a mile or more up to the hills. Without these walls a bridge would be well-nigh useless here, for the swamp begins again only a few hundred yards to the east, and the volume of descending water is very great. Here a deputation came this afternoon, the Tsarong Kalon the Ta Lama, and the abbots or keupoh of the three great monasteries. (These three—Sera, Debung, and Ga-den—are unwilling to sanction so simple an exchange of courtesies as the formation of a market outside our lines. They seem more like sulky children than responsible officials.

AT THE GATES OF LHASA.

Aug. 3.

To-day we have come in under the very walls of the Forbidden City. This is perhaps only a conventional expression, for Lhasa has no city walls. They were pulled down in 1721 by a depon named Karpi, and the sand embankment, which was built at the same time by him to protect the western gate from inundation, is one of the first things that attract the eye as one rides in toward Potala. The road runs straightly in from the West. It passes the high white and red wall which incloses Norbuling, the Summer palace of the Grand Lama, about 600 yards on the right. A little further on it runs beneath the tangled and overgrown plantations attached to Kundeling Monastery, which stretch out green and cool beside the gusty Ling-kor, the little worn lane which has become famous throughout the Buddhist world. Even as one approaches it, two trabas, one of them of extreme age, come along twirling their prayer wheels and muttering incessantly the one phrase of Lamaism as they go. From the heights of the neck above, which almost joins Potala and Chogpore, there is to be seen at last the great view of Thasa, to the traveler the most fascinating and, perhaps, also the most beautiful, city panorama in the world.

A Splendid Spectacle.

There is almost nothing missing from this splendid spectacle. Architecture, forest trees, wide spaces, rivers and streams, mountains, everything lies out before one looking down from the height upon Lhasa immediately at one's feet. Nor is this quite all the charm. There has been nowhere along the journey a hint of what the end was to be. The dark forbidding spurs and ravines of the valley interlocking one behind another promised nothing of this, and the delight of Lhasa's beauty is doubled by its utter unexpectedness.

It is true that we had passed through green fields and marshes cloaked shoulder high with rushes; it is true that here and there a densely matted plantation had moved out to view from behind a projecting spur, or been near had slowly grown in size beside the road as we came along. But there was nothing—less, perhaps, in the maps of Lhasa than anywhere—to promise us in the heart of a city these wild stretches of dense wood, this close-cropped grazing land, and this marshy grass, ringed and delimited by high trees, or the lazy streamlets of brown transparent water over which the branches almost meet.

In Lhasa there is this belt of woodland interposing a mile-wide green belt between the palace and the town. Round the fringes of the town itself, and grouping up between the houses of the village at the foot of the Potala, there are more trees—trees numerous enough to give it a reputation as a garden city. But in this stretch of green, unspoiled by house or temple, and almost roadless, Lhasa has a feature which no other city on earth can rival. It is all a part of that splendid religious pride which has been the making, and may yet prove the undoing, of Tibet. It was right that there should be a belt of nature around the palace of their incarnate King-deity, and there the belt is, wrapping the Potala inside the city.

Between and over the fields and woodland the City of Lhasa itself peeps, an adobe stretch of narrow streets and flat-topped houses cosigned here and there with a blaze of golden roofs or gilded gyantsen. But there is an actual difficulty in looking at it.

A Marvel in Stone.

Inside was the Potala drawn the eye of the mind like a lodestone. For, indeed, the Grand Lama. It would dominate London; Lhasa it simply eclipses. By European standards it is impossible to judge it. There is little to which comparison can be made. Perhaps, in the austerity of its huge stretches of blank, unveiled, unornamented wall, and in the flat, unabashed slants of its tremendous southeastern face, there is a suggestion of the massive grandeur of Egyptian work, but one only thinks of the likeness to dismiss it again. This is not only a product of Lamaism, but of Lamaism as it could only be exhibited in the capital of the faith. The contrast of color is no small part of the spectacle, and it also is as unlike Tibet and the gaudy preferences of its inhabitants as could be imagined. The vivid white of the buttressing curtains—each a wilderness of windows and the home of hundreds of the crimson-clad dwarfs who stand in the sun at the stair heads, or, pygmy-like, man the roof-tops—strikes a clean and harmonious note with the sea of green which washes up to their bases. But one is hardly ready for the perfect taste which not only decided for the rich maroon color of the central building resting—three times as large as Stafford House—upon and between its white supporting bulk of masonry, but added, with the sparing hand of the old illuminator, the golden finials which recompose the whole from roof to roadway. It is in such perfect taste that the glistening tops of the Jo-kang, visible enough a mile away across the trees, seem a trifle overdone, and even a trifle vulgar in comparison.

The topmost gyan-tsen of Potala is 400 feet above the ground. The extreme width of the main building, exclusive of the outlying portions, is about 900 feet, and it may thus be possible to conceive the mere dimensions of a pile of masonry which it is almost impossible to describe, in spite of the simplicity which, after all, remains its most imposing feature. And imposing it is; in Lhasa there is nothing else. In a way it recalls the domination of the Shwé Dagon over Rangoon, though in every aspect of construction, ornamentation, and surroundings it would be hard to imagine two buildings more entirely distinct and different in every detail than the two greatest erections of modern Buddhism.

The utter disproportion between the palace and the town remains a wonder, but a wonder devoid of a trace of ostentation. The petty town which peeps out between the trees a mile away only emphasizes the tremendous guilt that in Tibet yawns between the people and their priests. The fearful sanctity which hedges the person of their mysterious ruler receives in Lhasa an optical illustration that must impress the dullest pilgrim. The weapon which the Pope in the Vatican, overlooking the magnificence of Rome, has used with doubtful success the Grand Lama had long known and incorporated in his armory.

Policy of Isolation.

The policy of isolation has in Lhasa received a justification startling in its sufficiency, and the devotees of the Potala are perhaps more flattered by their inability than by anything else. Perhaps to his fellow-politicians of the Tsong-du the Dalai Lama has become of late to loom with less important sanctity; but, if so, the secret has been well kept, and the yoke of the priests presses no less on the neck of the wretched "laimen" in the fields.

But under the three sun of to-day and the almost undefended city of Lhasa it is not easy to find fault with the great, however narrow and merciless, which has built the Potala. It may be the caption of expression, but its victims have not yet protested; it may be a barrier in fact to any improvement in the peoples upon whose superstition it flourishes, but an attempt to judge a country whose contemporary history is still a chapter of the Dark Ages is foolishness. A Hindu we have not been able to ask what it is our clear duty to do in India, as it may be. But, meanwhile, Lamaism has harbored upon mance in which it has for so long been wrapped.

Outside the green confines of the Ling-kor, which lies below one like a thread, betrayed here and there by a gap in the leafage, the turquoise Kyi Chu—river of delight—moves lazily between its wide dunes, here elbowed out of its course by a spur of the hills, there "shorn and parceled" by a heavy outcrop of waterworn stones and the miniature cliff of a dazzling white sand-bank. Across it are yet more of the gardens and plantations which ring Lhasa round on every side, planted here and there all the way up the side valley to the foot of the enormous sand-blown hills to the south. For all the "Plain of Milk" is but a marsh jagged and indented all round by the sharp projections of high, barren hills each as lofty as Mount Blanc, and in Winter the scene must be as terrible as in August it is beautiful.

From Chagpori there are few highways to be seen in Lhasa. Only the Yutok road stretches across, dividing the green spaces with a rarely seen strip of white, unfenced, unmetaled. The turquoise-roofed bridge, from which both an ancient family and it take their name, is clearly seen 200 yards from a little squat opening in the wall, which is the gate into the inner town. Beyond that again it is lost in the crowded alleys. One can distinguish by its isolation the famous willow opposite the Jo-kang, which grows from a hair of the Buddha, but all else is speculation. Even the Amban's house to the southeast is completely hidden in trees, and one's eyes turn back again from the undistinguished herd of adobe structures to the Potala. There is nothing else to see when one has once looked upon it, a new glory to be forever added to the great architecture of the world.

WITHIN THE CITY.

LHASA, Aug. 5.—Yesterday Col. Younghusband went into the city to return the Amban's formal visit of the day before. Preceded by twenty crimson-clad halberdiers, lent by the Resident himself, and escorted by nearly three hundred rifles, the procession was a long one. We went in by the Pargo Kaling, or western gate, between the two guardian hills of Lhasa. It is a squire opening underneath a gilded chorten, with a protective railing of timber along both sides of the passage, and a blue deity in his most "terrible" aspect painted on the left-hand wall.

Once inside, one has an instant view of the whole length of the Potala slanting away gigantically on our left. But no view throughout the day approached in splendor the first sight from the 300-foot peak from which I saw Lhasa yesterday. We went on past the squalid suburb crouching beneath the mighty walls of the Potala, and found the monolith pillar put up in 1728 by the Emperor Kang Hsi to celebrate the pacification of Tibet. It is curious that upon it the Teshi-Lhunpo Lama's name precedes that of the Dalai Lama.

Leaving the Potala behind, the road now lay, across and through the marshes and fields of the great central park, and at last brought us to the Tsiok Bridge, or Turquois Bridge. This is regarded by the Chinese as one of the Five Beauties of Lhasa, but there is not much to justify such praise, though the roof itself is picturesque enough with its weather-beaten, overlapping tiles. They are, perhaps, more beautiful in their present state, in which the underlying red fights with the worn glaze, than when they were new. Almost immediately after-ward the road, leaving the swamps and water-grass sergeants which necessitate the Tsiok Bridge, rises beneath the plain, uncultivated and undefended doorway—I do not think there is even a door—which admits one to the town of Lhasa itself.

The First View.

The first view—and perhaps one may as well say at once the last view also—is anything but impressive. Great pools of black-coloured water flooded the wide, uneven space into which we emerged, and over the Chinese quarter to the right of us ban's residence herds of black pigs grouted in rubbish heaps, which were more than usually repulsive in composition.

To the left the houses of a few Ragyabas, or professional scavengers, were betrayed by the famous horn walls which no visitor to Lhasa has ever failed to notice. Perhaps the sight of these walls reminded one of that other duty of the Ragyabas—the cutting up and distributing to animals of the corpses of the dead. The cemetery is only a few steps away, and the reputed food of Lhasa pigs became in a flash a disgustingly probable reflection.

Across the square, splashing through the water-pools, we cavalcaded, and, after the explosion of bombs of honor and the performance by hidden musicians of the only tune known in the East, Col. Younghusband and the mission staff made their way through courtyard after courtyard, past the inevitable gigantic "lions" on either side of the great entrance. The durbar that followed was chiefly an exchange of compliments preliminary to business, but the Amban proved to be a shrewd and sensible man, though a reference to the assassination in Tibet of two of his predecessors may perhaps have betrayed his relief at our presence in Lhasa. As the representative of the suzerain power—however nominal the dependence of Tibet may have become—he is a factor of importance in Tibet, and it is satisfactory that he shows himself willing to do all in his power to bring negotiations to a speedy and satisfactory ending. To this he may perhaps be additionally persuaded by the fact that he has obtained leave to return at once to China as soon as the present difficulty has been settled.

A Poorly Built Town.

Leaving the Residency, Col. Younghusband returned home by the northern road, after making an inspection of a house suggested for his occupation on the south of the city in a pretty and well-wooded inclosure. On the way, the comparative insignificance of the town of Lhasa as compared with the Potala was well shown. Even the Jokang proved to be but a huddled structure, of which the lines are entirely lost in the multitude of public offices and private houses which lean against it on all sides, like those which incumber the exterior of Santa Sophia in Constantinople. The famous willow tree was the less imposing because it was carefully walled up to a height of ten feet, and even the Doring looked neglected and insignificant. This is a stone slab on which the treaty concluded in 1792 between China and Tibet is bilingually inscribed, and it remains to this day as beyond rivalry the oldest document of the Tibetan race.

The main street of Tibet is filthy under-foot and the houses are poor. Across an opening the Mulu gompa was seen. Somewhere in the immediate vicinity the Capuchins twice established a Christian chapel, in 1708 and 1740, but the last remains of it appear to have vanished, and in the last century Mr. Hodgson received from the Grand Lama every scrap of property belonging to the extinct mission. Most of it was given to the Pope, and is now in the Vatican library.

The road now turned west, and a wide road, or rather a continual puddle, running between the adobe walls of two well-wooded gardens, brought us back to the foot of the Potala and the Pargo Kaling gate.

Physically, the town of Lhasa must be admitted to be a poorly built and badly drained town, of a type similar to and hardly better than that of other less favored towns in Tibet. The magnificence of the Potala and the beauty of the wide belt of trees and marshes remain, however, and the perfection of the panoramic view from the spur of Chagpori remains, therefore, as well. But if picturesqueness were all, it might be better never to descend into the narrow and mean lanes of the town itself. To-day I again went up to see Lhasa from the spur, and the beauty of it was enhanced by the quick changes of sun and shadow across the woods and houses and fields and by the shout of small-colored rain in the hollows of the hills beyond. The Kyi Chu sparkled in half a dozen "cuts" in as many miles, and the splendid white of the Potala alone of man's dim hand down in pearl gray to the blue slope of the dusky shower of rain fell heavily in the face of the Ling-kor.

But, after all, the beauty of the glorious central park, and the splendor of the Potala, are the only things which Lhasa has to show. Within the city there is nothing. Its streets are filthy, its houses squalid, its people unwashed and unkempt. Even the Tibetans who have come in with us from the north, and who have been living in the open for months, are cleaner than the townsfolk. Its glory is centred in the Temple of the Grand Lama—a marvel in stone—and its approach to the city.

People Who Sponge on Department Store Edibles.

"YES," said the woman who demonstrates in the grocery department, "the modern department store seems to be about the only home some poor wretches have. They use it as if it were a hotel, in a way. They come into the place almost as soon as the doors are opened, freshen up a bit in the commodious dressing rooms provided, and then leisurely wind their way upward to the grocery department, which answers the same purpose as a dining room.

"There the demonstrators are already at work. You see we are able to tell at a glance whether a person means to purchase or not. Long years of experience have taught us that much at least. It is not hard to tell whether the 'sampler' has had breakfast or not. These poor unfortunates begin at the various coffee exhibits and try all the brands until they have had enough. Sometimes, if they look sufficiently worthy, and if the demonstrator has a tender heart, the cup given them is a generous one, not the small ones usually used for samples.

"After that they try the different cereals, biscuits, crackers, and breads. By that time the poor souls are somewhat comforted and ready for rest. So down the stairs they go to the parlors, and some of the stores, you know, provide couches with screens around them. They are not a bit backward in taking advantage of the opportunity these couches offer. After that they go out into the streets again refreshed and ready to look hard for the elusive 'job.'

"At lunch time they try another store, or do without any food. But at night, just before closing time, they are back again. This time those who know the game have a really elaborate meal. They begin with soup, have an oyster cocktail, try some prepared meats, finish off with a dainty dessert, a cup of tea or coffee or malted milk, or sometimes all three. These are the needy ones, and there are many such.

"Then there are the thrifty ones, who just come in for lunch. They come very regularly. I try to think they need it, but sometimes I seriously doubt it. These are generally women whose husbands are away at lunch time. Indeed, I knew of one case where the husband worked near the big store. The wife used to meet him regularly at noon, and together they did the rounds of the shops. In appearance they were a prosperous couple set on a shopping tour, and occasionally they would order some of the goods home, but not often. They were so sorry about it that I had to console them.

"'Yes, dear,' he would say, after sampling, say, some cocoa. 'It is very good. But do you not think that Blank's is good enough?'

"'Well,' the woman would say, and she would apparently stop to think, 'perhaps you are right. This is a little nicer.' This with a smile at the demonstrator. 'But if you like Blank's best, that's all there is to it,' and, rarely blessing, she and her husband would trot off to another counter and sample something else. Funny, isn't it?

"We demonstrators are comparatively helpless with this pest, and unless we are positive that they are making a business of it we cannot interfere. This they know, so they are perfectly human about it.

"There are a great many demonstrators in New York, and they are kept busy nearly all the time. There is never a day when demonstrators are not going on somewhere, so it becomes a comparatively easy matter for these people to get something for nothing. This, even I mentioned first the 'needy' ones. In fact, some of them become known to us by sight, if they remain in that town for any length of time. When better times come for them they stop coming. The regular ones, we always have with us."

Which?

A very bashful lady asked a friend what position he would give her were she a man.

"Well," he said, "I should say that you would be a good wife for a man who wanted a wife."

"Thank you," she said, "but I don't want to be a wife. I want to be a man."

"Then," he said, "I should say that you would be a good man for a woman who wanted a man."

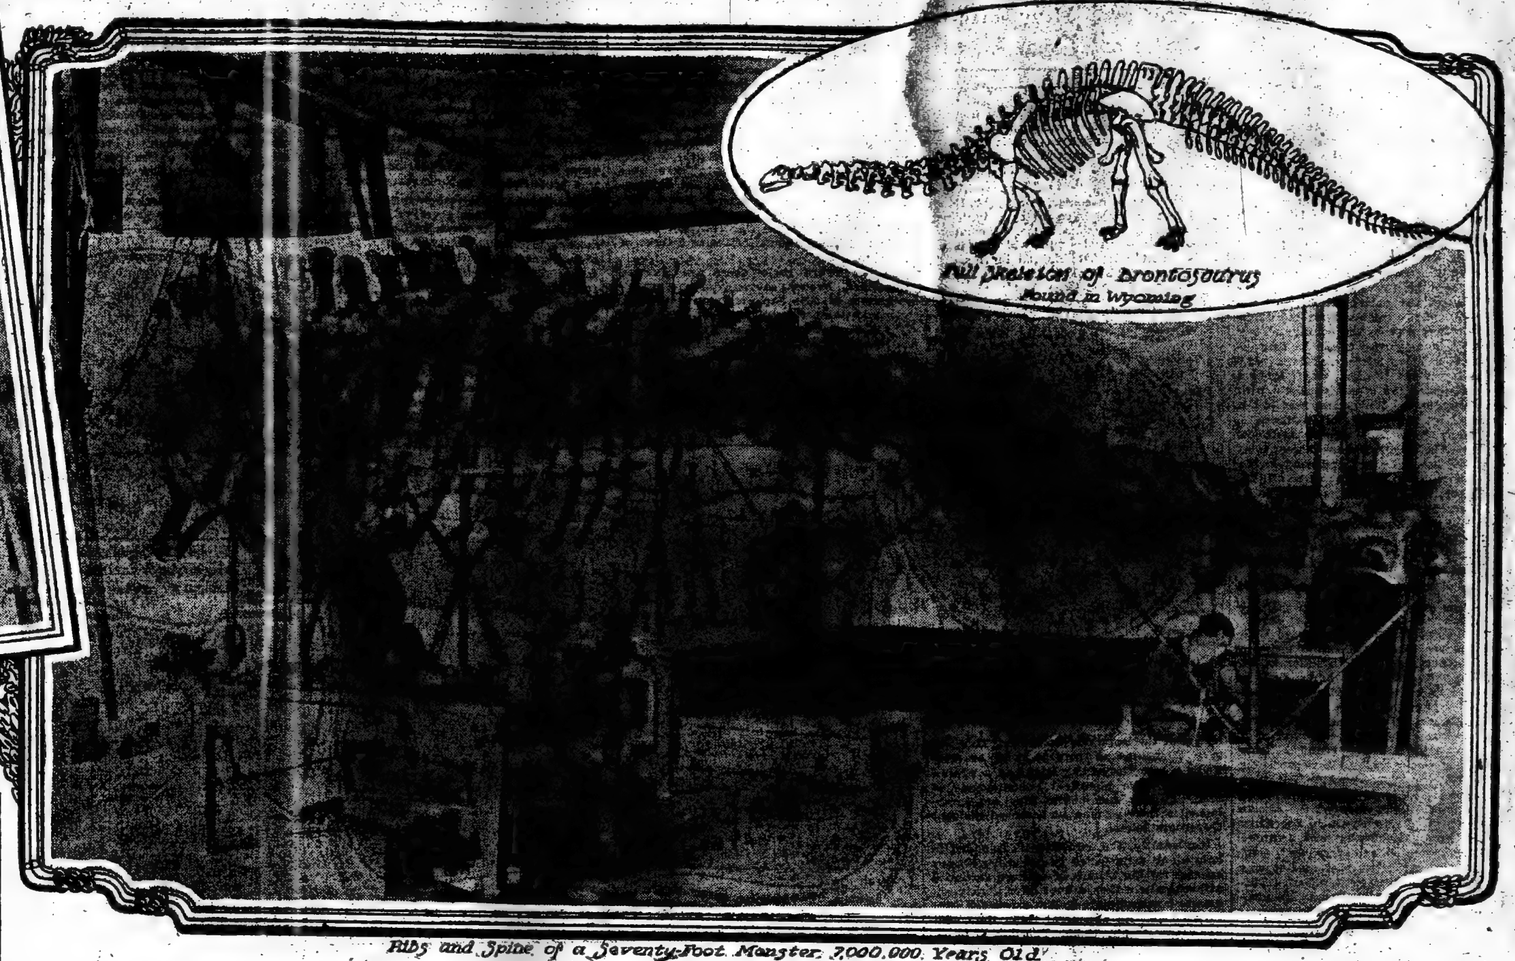
Helping to Put the Brontosaurus on His Feet



Full Skeleton of Brontosaurus Found in Wyoming

Ribs and Spine of a Seventy-Foot Monster 7,000,000 Years Old

IT is one thing to find the skeleton of a giant dinosaur in the Bone Cabin Quarry on the plains of Central Wyoming, and quite another thing to ship the colossal bones to New York and mount them in a museum for an admiring and wondering world to look at. It takes as long to articulate the massive frame of a brontosaurus as it does to build a battleship.

In the Summer of 1900 an expedition sent out by the American Museum of Natural History, in New York, found in Wyoming the largest and most complete specimen of the herbivorous dinosaur that has so far come under the observation of the explorer. The bones of this ponderous, long-limbed fossil were received at the Museum in the Fall of the same year. Prof. Henry F. Osborn, Curator of the Department of Vertebrate Paleontology; Adam Hermann, the Chief Preparator of the Museum, and a staff of expert workmen have been at work ever since putting them together.

The progress made represents three years of hard work and the expenditure of many thousands of dollars. It is difficult to fix the actual value of such an exhibit. No reasonable sum of money could buy it, propably, from the Museum authorities. Next January, when the brontosaurus is finished and the public is admitted to the new reptile wing of the Museum, students of the fossil age will see the finest specimen of its kind in the world.

15,000 POUNDS OF BONES.

Except to the mind of the fossil specialist, it is difficult to grasp the mental idea of the size of the bones of the dinosaur. Think, for a moment, of ribs six feet two inches long, of a spine fifty feet long, of finely rounded, complete limbs from eight to ten feet long; of vertebrae nearly twice the size of an ordinary horse collar, of a tail thirty-eight feet long, of a thigh bone five feet long, with chest bone and hips correspondingly massive; of a neck half as long again as a giraffe's, and surmounted by a ridiculously small head; the whole comprising a skeleton that will weigh from ten to fifteen thousand pounds.

Mere man, wandering amid bones of this size in the "setting up" room of the Museum of Natural History, wonders why people ever talk of human giants. The bones of these dinosaurs, the largest animals that ever walked the earth, are as mountains to melons compared with the human bones. Moreover, the brontosaurus that will be on view in this city next Winter walked and swam through the Laramie region, in Wyoming, 7,000,000 years before man was heard of, as geological time is estimated.

When the explorers found him, very much as a man might run across a dime in the street, they announced their discovery to the proper authorities and staked off their claim. Their work was all before them. It was apparent at the outset that they had run across an unusually fine specimen. Either dinosaurs were in the habit of dying by inches a very long distance apart, or nature gave their enormous bones an astonishing shaking up after they were dead. Portions of them were found strewn all over the plains in the vicinity of Bone Cabin Quarry.

It is a rare thing to find sufficient bones in one spot to get together a respectable skeleton. But with this brontosaurus, destined to enlighten the rising generation of the twentieth century in New York as to his make-up, it was different. He was all there, except the head, and in a very fine state of fossil preservation. However, as heads of dinosaurs are comparatively common in the quarry, it was easy enough to supply the deficiency.

Of course, there were no railroads running through the Western plains in the days of the dinosaur. But if there had been he could not have shown more ingenuity in getting away from them than his burial place would indicate. Not one of them has been found within fifty miles of a railroad. This fact makes it all the more difficult to transfer the bones from the quarry to the cars. They have to be carefully packed and shipped across the alkali plains on mule wagons. Heavy and hard as iron but brittle as glass in some places, they must be handled with great care. Workmen of every degree of skill are enlisted in the work. To revive the days and doings of the dinosaurs for the enlightenment of posterity calls for the imagination of the artist and the sculptor, and the constructive genius of the engineer. Essential almost above all to the men who would dig the dinosaur from the depths of strata in which untold ages have imbedded him is the patience of an army of Jobs. In some places nature by a peculiar process of her own has washed away layers of earth, so that the fossil is within a few feet of the surface. It was so with the remarkable specimen that is the subject of this sketch. But as a general thing the skeletons are found far from the surface.

SURGERY FOR FOSSIL BONES.

The bones of a fossilized skeleton are usually very badly fractured. This is especially the case when they are much exposed to the weather. The experts have a surgical system of their own for binding the broken bones of a dinosaur and keeping in good condition those that are unbroken. When their claim is staked off they set to work and dig the bones from the earth very carefully. As each limb is free it is liberally coated with ordinary flour paste, such as wall paperers use, and bound in light muslin. In some instances no further protection is needed before packing. In others the muslin coat is surmounted by a wrapping of heavy burlap. In case of extreme weather-fracture the plaster process is adopted. Huge blocks of the skeleton, stone and all, are set in plaster of paris and drawn together with wooden splints. It seems almost absurd to use the word splints in describing them, for some of the chunks of wood are as large and as heavy as the ordinary house door. The splints are bound with thongs of wet rawhide, which grow as taut as a fiddlestring when allowed to dry in the sun. It would be easier to break a piece of steel. Every possible precaution is taken to keep the fragments and splinters of bone together until they reach the hands of the Preparator in the Museum. Frequently the bones are shipped in air-tight glass jackets blown around them. But this is a tedious and expensive process.

When the bones of the fossil have all been excavated and prepared for shipment they are packed away in boxes and hampers, in beds of straw and excelsior. It is a far cry from Bone Cabin Quarry to Broadway. The Union Pacific Railway Company sends a car, or several cars, if required, to a siding at the nearest terminal to the "find." It is a very slow specimen of a dinosaur whose bones will not fill an ordinary box car.

The boxes and hampers are put on wagons hauled by mules and oxen and carted from the quarry to the railroad. Teamsters engaged in this work have very little conception of the scientific value of the bones they carry at so much a load. One of the explorers goes with them to see that the boxes are not handled as though they contained so much cement. The plainsmen place very little value on fossil bones. One settler on the Laramie Plains has built a dwelling house of them. He sleeps in the jaws of a dinosaur.

CRUTCHES OF RIVETED STEEL.

In the course of time the cargo of bones is conveyed across the American Continent and delivered at the door of the American Museum of Natural History. Their arrival there is awaited with as much anxiety by Director Bumpus and his staff as the weekly mail is awaited at a remote frontier post. The boxes are lifted into the laboratory with the utmost care. An incubator with a live baby in it is not the object of more solicitude. Here all the careful surgery work done at the quarry has to be undone. The heavy wooden splints are removed. Chemicals are necessary to soften and soak off the muslin burlap and paste. The bones are separated, rib upon rib, vertebrae upon vertebrae. There are hundreds of bones, big and small, in a brontosaurus. All are as carefully classified and watched as though they were gems of the purest ray serene.

Then the carpenters and engineers get to work. The huge bones have to be put up on crutches of riveted steel. Not more than three or four men can work at one time, and their progress is slow. The metal has to be shaped and welded to the bones, or else the dinosaur would look as shapeless as a jellyfish. The steel braces must be drawn as tightly to the limbs as a glove is drawn to the hand. The scaffolding and derricks used in the setting-up process are reminders of a shipyard. The huge ribs of the brontosaurus put together and turned upside down for welding purposes look not unlike the timber frame in the bow of a wooden ship.

One remarkable thing is the extreme lightness of the bones, particularly the vertebrae, in comparison to their size.

LEGS SIXTEEN FEET HIGH.

The legs of the brontosaurus, as they stand propped up in their huge wooden frame, are 16½ feet high. In the larger photograph Mr. Hermann, who is a medium-sized man, is seated on a bench beside the ribs. There are five toes on each foot, sharply pointed and with recurved tips. The legs of the dinosaur are not going to remain precisely as they now appear. There is bound to be more or less guesswork in putting such a huge skeleton together, and mistakes are made that cannot be detected until the mounting is nearly completed. It was discovered the other day that some of the bones in the legs had been turned around. The huge reptile looked as though it was "going South," as they say of a man who puts his hat on wrong side foremost.

The head of the herbivorous dinosaur is the smallest thing about it. In the huge specimen at the Museum the head is less than two feet long, in fact, not much larger than the skull of a calf or a big Newfoundland dog. The head and jaws of the carnivorous dinosaur are much larger. The brain cavity in the skull—using the word brain as the basis of vital power and not as the seat of intelligence—is no larger than a teacup. Down in the pelvis is another cavity for brain matter that holds about a gallon. However, this is only one of innumerable peculiarities about the dinosaur. One of the most perplexing problems in physiology is how they managed to secure sufficient food with their small head, slight jaws, and slender, spoon-shaped teeth.

Naturalists have found in Bone Cabin Quarry a veritable Noah's Ark deposit of all the animals of the period. Experts have come from all parts of the globe to look at them, but it is conceded that Americans are the most skilful in digging out the dinosaurs and in putting them together after they are taken out. The giant herbivorous dinosaurs were preyed upon, scientists say, by the smaller but more powerful carnivorous animals. The bluff around the quarry seems to represent the area of an old river bar, which arrested the carcasses of fossils drifting down from up stream. Thus were brought together the animals of a whole region. The name dinosaur is derived from the Greek, and means terrible lizard.

It is believed these enormous dinosaurs were capable of standing on their hind legs and browsing from the branches of high trees. They used their short but powerful front legs to fight off their carnivorous enemies. There are indications that a considerable portion of their time was spent in the water. Their tails, from twenty-five to thirty feet long, were used for purposes of propulsion while afloat and for defense while on land. The struggle for existence between the herbivorous and carnivorous dinosaurs was extremely fierce. It is believed their extinction was nearly, if not quite, simultaneous the world over.

TWO MILLION DOLLARS A DAY THE ESTIMATED COST OF THE EASTERN WAR

London, Sept. 14.

THE TIMES'S military correspondent writes in Thursday's issue:

The cost of modern war is not light, and when the campaign is fought out 5,000 miles from the heart of an empire it is not lightened.

We know to our cost that we cannot maintain 300,000 men in the field in South Africa at a less expenditure than £1,250,000 in a week, even given the business aptitudes of our people and the almost unimpeachable honesty of all branches of the administration. What is the war costing Russia and Japan?

As regards our ally, considerations of finance have from the first received as close attention as the armed forces of the State themselves; iron and gold weigh equally in the military scales, and it is the particular merit of Japan that she has prepared herself to face a long and arduous struggle, not only by intelligent use of army and navy, but also by the most economical gestion of her national resources.

Those acquainted with the financiers of modern Japan believe them to be as accomplished in their branch and as efficient as the fighting services are in theirs. If it be objected that in the recent loan raised abroad Japan consented to very onerous terms, it must be recalled that the arrangements were practically concluded before the first collision between the land forces, and that until Japan had proved herself a match for Russia on shore it was only natural that foreign financiers should hesitate to commit themselves except on their own terms.

The last war with China cost Japan £30,000 a day, and in view of the greater effort of the present campaign it is calculated that she is now spending £100,000 daily, or, roughly speaking, £3,000,000 a month. During the war with China the total expenditure from June, 1894, to November, 1896, amounted to 200,475,508 yen, of which only 35,955,137 yen were on account of the navy.

This expenditure was met by 116,804,926 yen subscribed to public loans and by 78,957,165 yen from the indemnity fund, besides some small private contributions.

Whether France is wise, in her own interests, in financing the war, is a matter that mainly concerns her and no one else. Yet some of her statesmen must have very serious qualms when they regard the vast sums that Russia has drawn from French savings during the last few years, and must ask themselves whither this dance of millions is leading them.

No Frenchman can fail to perceive that the ultimate enmity of the somewhat impressionable Japanese public is certain to follow the discovery that the resistance of Russia is continued by reason of French backing. The concentration of French hoardings in the hands of a foreign Government carried on without serious sense of responsibility, as the events of this year have proved, and their employment upon unproductive and necessarily sterile war, seems a poor use for national capital, no matter what the result of the war may be.

Not only is France herself less able to improve her own position at home and to find new outlets in the markets of the world, but her ally becomes less and less a source of strength as her resources diminish and the future is discounted.

It is bad enough to have lost the aid of the Russian Navy, but it is much worse for Russia to become so exhausted as to be incapacitated from waging a great war for many years. The political danger is even greater than the financial, and both are serious. It is certainly a German interest that the war should continue indefinitely, but is it to the interest either of Russia or of France?

If Japan has not taken the offensive in finance that is no reason why the proposition should not be considered in relation to national wars. Just as the questions of the feeding of children of the poorer classes, housing, the physical training of the people, and food supplies in time of war are all eventually translated by success or failure on the field of battle, so finance itself deserves a place, and a very important place, in the studies of what are known as defense problems.

This place it has never obtained in England, and until it does we shall not only continue to secure less safety and sta-

Mere man, wandering amid bones of this size in the "setting up" room of the Museum of Natural History, wonders why people ever talk of human giants. The bones of these dinosaurs, the largest animals that ever walked the earth, are as mountains to melons compared with the human bones. Such supplementary mobilization on a large scale would naturally entail a corresponding increase of expense, but there is nothing as yet to indicate any fault or oversight in the general plan of campaign or consequently any immediate need to draw heavily upon these reserves of strength. Moreover, modern organization, as Japan understands it, provides a great number of men in a nation of 46,000,000 who incur the liability but escape the actual duty of color service.

In Japan these men who are allocated to certain categories of the reserve, but are not trained soldiers, have been called upon to serve as coolies, and a human transport corps has been created which costs the country nothing but its rations and its infinitesimal pay.

Every coolie employed by Russia in Manchuria costs hard cash, and in time of war the cost of labor, other, of course, than the corvée, amounts to four or five times the figure of times of peace. It is not prudent to resort to forced labor when an army depends so largely upon the good-will, or at least the passive neutrality, of a native population, nor can coolie labor be dispensed with in a mountainous district if the military administration has not foreseen and provided an adequate transport corps of its own.

COST TO RUSSIA GREATER.

For these reasons Russia will necessarily incur greater expense upon the theatre of operations than Japan, while her line of operations is immensely longer and consequently more costly to maintain. It is true that the Trans-Siberian is a Government undertaking, and that the cost of transport will not represent all that visible drain upon the Treasury that ours had to bear for the hiring of ships and demurrage.

But the wear and tear will be very great, and the indispensable expenditure upon rolling stock, rails, and the up-keep or improvement of the permanent way will be very heavy. Again, the mobilisation of the Baltic Squadron, whether it results in a cruise to the East or not, entails heavy outlay of men can be drawn forward to the theatre of war than any estimates hitherto published would seem to denote.

countered the Russians could pretend they had 200,000 men in the field, and could charge the Chinese with the cost of their maintenance at the settlement. It did not matter then, in a military sense, that not one-quarter of these numbers were really present, but it does matter now, and Russians have to bear the cost in the long run even if France finds the money for the moment.

We shall therefore be probably well within the mark if we estimate the cost of the war to Russia at eight millions a month for the maintenance of 300,000 men in the field in East Asia, and the execution of all measures of preparation in the West. If larger numbers are drawn forward, or even only concentrated in rear, west of Baikal, a corresponding increase of expenditure will certainly follow.

This figure is certainly a moderate estimate, and it is thought by some authorities entitled to respect to be very much higher. What percentage of the sum expended is never applied to the purposes for which it is granted no one can say, but the irregularities of the Russian administration are so notorious that it is probably high. When Russian authorities of high standing can charge their Government with the cost of the best Welsh steam coal and ship inferior Japanese, making thousands on the transaction, everything becomes possible, everything at least except naval efficiency.

MYSTERIES OF RUSSIAN FINANCE.

Russian finance is a much too tangled skein for any one to unravel who is not to the manner born, yet certain things are known which are interesting as indications. The last Russian bank return at the outbreak of the war showed £74,500,000 in gold in reserve and £17,750,000 at call abroad, or a total of £92,000,000. As against this there was, up to that time, a total note issue of £68,000,000, which, according to the rules hitherto enforced by ukase, required a gold backing of £28,000,000, since notes up to the limit of £60,000,000 have to be covered by 50 per cent. in gold, and above that number in full.

Thus Russia seems to have entered upon the war with the power of effecting a legitiof existing ukases. If Russia had felt any certainty of compassing the defeat of her enemy with 300,000 men and within these limits of time she would probably have aligned herself with the opinions of financial experts and have scouted the idea of a foreign loan.

But if she foresaw, on the other hand, no certain issue of the struggle, and decided that, after the exhaustion of legitimate paper issues, she would either have to approach lenders in forms paupers or issue paper without metal backing, it was natural that she should go to the foreign market first and drink at that well as long as the water lasted, leaving herself the home supply as a last resort when all other means of raising money failed.

From a military point of view, which is all we are here concerned with, that was sound financial strategy, reserving to herself the metal and leaving to the foreign bondholder the pleasure of paying the cost not only of the war, but of the depreciation of Russian credit which was certain to follow unsuccessful or even long-continued war.

Russian defeats caused the negotiators of the recent loan to close quickly with the foreign bankers for fear that worse might befall and the terms become more arduous. Rumors of fresh loans are already in the air, and the war will probably continue for just so long as France can bear the strain. When this market and the Dutch-Belgian or German banks are sucked dry, then recourse must be had to the shelter of the gold reserves over which Mr. Norman recently held up his hands like a Methodist preacher and rightly sang a paean of praise.

The most likely course subsequently will be the issue of paper without any adequate cover, and despite the extreme cleverness of certain financiers in Russian employ at Paris and elsewhere there may come a time when manoeuvres to maintain Russian credit at a fictitious level will break down.

MAY BRIBE GERMANY.

The French view appears to be that Russia can carry on for another few months from the present date by the help of the thirty-two millions of French money, and that then she will probably go to the Ger-dwelling house of them. He sleeps in the jaws of a dinosaur.

as the crow flies is a great tract of mountainous land known as the Sapphire country, taking its name from Sapphire Lake. The native fish of the region is the speckled trout, but there have been imported many of the rainbow variety, better known in California and thereabouts. The speckled trout is considered far more game as a rule, and so the adventure with this particular rainbow is especially remarkable.

Unlike his speckled brother, the rainbow trout darts for the bottom of the pool the moment he feels the hook. Unless the angler is very alert the prey escapes by dodging under a root or stone far beneath the surface and entagling the line so that it has to be cut.

The fisherman in this case, a professor of the North Carolina University, had been patrolling the Horse Pasture River, which is outlet of Sapphire Lake, for several weeks, when one day he cast his fly upon a pool that looked very deep and very "fishy." No sooner had the fly touched the water than a big rainbow trout struck, took the hook, and made for the bottom of the pool.

The professor could see that the fish was a huge one for those parts, but seeing was all the satisfaction he got. The fish tangled itself in the rocks, and a broken line was the result. That night the professor told his friends at the hotel that he intended to fish no other pool until he had caught this fish, and the next morning found him on the spot. Again the rainbow struck, dived, and escaped. The fisherman was beside himself with rage, and the third day he was on hand bright and early. Once more the trout took the hook.

Instead of tearing loose or cutting his line, the professor laid down his rod, disrobed himself, and dived after the fish. Being an expert swimmer and diver, he managed to explore the bottom of the pool, which was some fifteen feet in depth, but no matter how hard he tried he failed to dislodge his victim, and for the third time he reached the hotel unsuccessful.

"To-day," he announced on the fourth morning, "I shall give him no leeway at all. I'll use a strong line and try to pull him straight out, as though I were handling a sucker."

GOVERNORS ISLAND HAS MUSEUM OF RARE HISTORIC RELICS

Treasures Contributed by Army and Navy Men Form a Unique Collection.

THERE is one museum in New York, filled with historical treasures closely identified with the early history of the city and the Nation, that very few persons, compared with the number that might derive pleasure and profit from it, know anything about. That is the museum belonging to the Military Service Institution of the United States on Governors Island.

Men whose names stand high on the roll of honor in the army and navy have contributed to it. One exhibit after another has been sent by brave men fighting for Uncle Sam at the uttermost ends of the earth. Some of the treasures are not duplicated anywhere else in the country. They are worth a long journey to see for men interested in military history. Not a war, nor an important battle, from earliest Colonial times to the recent conflicts with the bolo men in the Philippines that is not represented by battle flags or trophies.

How many New Yorkers, for instance, know that Sheridan's famous horse Winchester, the hero of story and song in the school books, can be seen with all his brave General's accoutrements on his back, within a much shorter journey of City Hall Square than a trolley ride to Central Park?

With foam and with dust the black charger was gray;
By the flash of his eyes and the red nostrils' play,
He seemed to the whole great army to say:
"I have brought you Sheridan all the way
From Winchester down to save the day."

A skillful demonstrator has mounted Winchester for the Governors Island museum just as he looked rushing into action at the memorable ride. After the horse died, in Chicago, in 1878, Gen. Sheridan was inundated with requests for its hide for exhibition purposes. Those not of a strictly patriotic nature received no attention. But there were a number of requests from Grand Army posts and military societies that the General felt bound to consider. Most pressing of all, perhaps, was the claim of West Point. Finally, through the efforts of Brig. Gen. T. F. Rodenbough, Secretary of the institute, Winchester was awarded to the Governors Island museum. Gen. Sheridan appreciated the fact that it was the only institution of its kind of a National scope in the United States. He foresaw the future its founders had in view.

Sheridan's Famous Charger.

Gen. Sheridan sent "Winchester's" body to Prof. Ward, at Rochester, and paid about $300 to have it put in condition for the museum. He also wrote a brief history of the charger, with a list of the engagements in which he took part. Sheridan got the horse as a present when three years old. He was of Black Hawk blood, foaled near Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1859, and an animal of great strength and endurance. "It is doubtful," writes Sheridan, "if his superior as a horse for field service was ever ridden by any one."

In the present cramped quarters of the museum on Governors Island "Winchester" does not get a fair show. He is surrounded by too many interesting rivals to appear to advantage. The old Museum Building was given over to the Ordnance Department at the time of the Cuban war, and has never been restored. At least half the war treasures were packed in boxes, where they still remain. But in the new Governors Island, which is already beginning to assume formidable proportions from the fifty-odd acres filled in on the southwest shoals, the museum will be provided with a new, spacious building large enough to permit of giving "Winchester" a room to himself surrounded by the tattered flags of the battles in which he participated.

Before that time comes, in all probability, New Yorkers will have an opportunity to see Sheridan's famous horse, in company with all the war relics with which he is associated, at a loan exhibition in this city. Plans are afoot to hold it early this Winter in one of the large city armories. This will give thousands of persons who scarcely know where Governors Island is a chance to inspect the historical contributions of many famous men before they are established in their permanent home on the new Governors Island.

Incidentally, the exhibition is intended to help along a projected co-operative library scheme for the benefit of officers stationed at posts where they cannot have library access to new and more or less expensive military books. As a general thing they cannot afford to buy them. The idea is to establish a circulating library by which the books can be sent to any army post in the United States—or in the new possessions, for that matter—and be returned within a specified time at a nominal cost. Some such scheme as this is talked of in connection with the new New York Public Library, but nothing is settled.

The Governors Island museum has not been catalogued for a great many years, and then only to a limited extent. It will be recatalogued for the intended loan exhibition, which will be classified as military, historical, scientific, and artistic, showing not only the history of every war in which the United States has been engaged, but educational progress in armaments and defenses. The exhibition is intended to be not only interesting for military students, but educational for members of the National Guard and pupils in the public schools. To quote Gen. Rodenbough, "Intelligent children will be able to learn more about military history there in one hour than they can from schoolbooks in a year." Popular interest in the exhibition, it is hoped, will help to make the Governors Island military museum a local feature.

It is impossible, in the limited space of a newspaper sketch, to enter into details about the battle flags, armor, ammunition, field pieces, small arms, clothing and accoutrements, horse equipments, Indian relics, old maps, books, pictures, and precious manuscripts that comprise the collection. In a general way some of the curiosities on view may be mentioned.

A Korean Battle Flag.

One of them is a Korean battle flag, which has peculiar interest just now on account of the war in the Far East. The flag is a huge piece of yellow serge, with a grotesque tiger embroidered in colors. It was captured in the interior of Korea in June, 1871, by Corp. Vopel, who was with marines sent from the United States warship Colorado to capture a fort. There were only a handful of Americans, but they utterly put to rout thousands of Korean soldiers—the pick of the army—who quit the fort and deserted the flag; but not before they had killed Lieut. McKee and three of his men.

In the sword racks there are Persian scimetars, French sabres, daggers, specimens of the Japanese damino sword, and Chinese mandarin swords, all beautifully lacquered. One of the Japanese swords is so heavy that it takes a man with almost the strength of Sandow to lift it. This very sword has, it is asserted, lopped of hundreds of heads of treasonable subjects in the Flowery Kingdom. The executioner, apparently, had little to do once he got the sword as high as his shoulder and over the neck of his victim. The sheer weight of the weapon would carry the razorlike blade through the thickest collarbone.

In the cases there are shirts of chain mail, French and Prussian helmets, and ancient clothing and accoutrements of all nations. There are papoose cradles that have carried Indian Princesses thousands of miles. One of them shows the hole made by a bullet from the enemy which killed both the squaw mother and the infant she carried on her back. There are the flutes the Indians play at their Shoshone dances, the danger whistles they carve from the leg of a turkey, their camp blankets, and rare specimens of bead work. There are buffalo robes and porcupine shirts picked up by officers in the early Indian campaigns and sent to the museums. There are mementos of the "ghost shirt dance" at Pine Ridge in 1891, which marked the expiring vigor of the fierce red men.

As a relic of arctic exploration there is the flag unfurled by Lieut. Schwatka when he put foot in King William's Land during the Franklin search expedition. There are trophies from the Greely expedition, and the relics under Schley that rescued the starving survivors. There are souvenirs of the Custer massacre. From the battlefields of the war with Spain, and the consequent war with the Filipinos, there are innumerable trophies.

And still they come. Most conspicuous among the recent contributions is a wooden cannon, about four-inch bore, used by the natives in defending a mountain gorge against an assault by United States troops. It is a rough, clumsy-looking affair, bound tight with rope to give it strength. The most daring New York small boy would hesitate to stand around after he had put a Fourth of July charge of powder into it. But the Filipinos fired the gun with deadly effect, as the soldiers who captured the pass can testify. This curious fieldpiece was presented by Major Arthur Murray.

Among the Cuban trophies is a Spanish musket that it takes a very strong man to lift. It weighs as much as five modern muskets. The barrel is of brass and has a flint lock of wonderful contrivance. It was found at the bottom of a mine, and is probably a relic of Cortes and the Spanish conquest. Relics of Scott's Mexican conquests are too numerous to mention. One treasured exhibit is Gen. Scott's old desk which he used in the War Department at Washington when he was in command of the army. There is also the bed of Gen. Nagos, captured during the Mexican war. There is an old-fashioned helmet and cuirass of a Mexican lifeguard, curious specimens of armor shipped across the seas for uncivilized warriors to fight in. There is a French mortar of the eighteenth century—a beautifully carved piece of gun metal bearing the dolphins, lions' heads, and royal cipher. This is a relic of the American Revolution. There are a number of old-fashioned mortars and field guns—English, Spanish, and French—which were directed against American patriots in the early struggles for freedom.

Many Valuable Manuscripts.

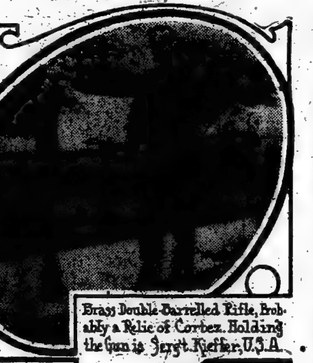
For the student of historical documents the Governors Island museum offers an interesting field for research. There are manuscripts from every President of the United States, from Washington to McKinley; from all the great soldiers, from naval heroes, diplomats, Cabinet officers, and explorers. The collection of old war maps and plans is one of the most complete in the country.

But, when all is said, nothing in the museum is more obsolete and out of date than the 100 guns around the parapets of Fort Jay and the old South Fort, which are the only parts of the old Governors Island retained in the new plans. Since Jefferson's time Fort Jay has been called Fort Columbus. That exponent of Democratic simplicity did not like Jay, so he changed the name of the fort named after him. One of Secretary of War Root's last official acts was to change the name of the fort back to Fort Jay. As such it will be designated in the new Governors Island.

When the guns were placed on the parapets of Fort Jay and the old South Fort, while Gen. Grant was President of the United States, they were the best examples of modern armaments. President Grant proudly said, at a dinner of the Chamber of Commerce in New York, that "with such protection New York was safe from invasion by any foreign foe." That was only in 1876; but the great guns are as useless and out of date to-day as so many popguns. It is only as a matter of historical interest that the Government is going to let them remain where they are. They will serve to show military students of the next generation what cumbersome weapons their forefathers used to shoot with.

But then, even when it is reconstructed, Governors Island will be nothing more than one of the best-equipped military posts in the country. It is now no more of a factor in the defenses of New York City than is Trinity Church. As a prominent military officer expressed it the other day:

"If a hostile fleet once gets inside the Narrows, the only place for New Yorkers to go for safety is Denver."



Brass Double-Barrelled Rifle, Probably a Relic of Cortez. Holding the Gun is Sergt. Kiefer, U.S.A.

German Duels of Honor Described

BY POULTNEY BIGELOW

Gory Encounters of Students Sustained and Encouraged—Brutality of the Sport as Compared with Football.

Foreign Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Munich, Sept. 10, 1904.

THE duels were being fought in the loft of an innocent-looking building behind the Hofbräuhaus in Munich and before I reached the top step my senses gave me warning that I was approaching something savoring of a dissecting room. Our loud rapping was for some moments unnoticed; we heard the sharp click of sabres and the peremptory words of the referee and seconds. Finally we were admitted, for my friend had been an illustrious member of a student corps.

The air was thick with the smoke of tobacco, and oppressively burdened with that hospital flavor which to me is associated with various broken ribs, dislocations, cuts, and other incidents of an active life. The loft was crowded with students in their colored caps—each cap representing the honor of a fraternity whose banner bearer he might become at any moment. They were a goodly set of young men—large, well built, courteous in manner, and evidently much interested in the business of the day—or rather the evening, for the fighting went on by the light of overhead gas jets.

As we entered, two combatants were having the blood mopped from their faces and matted hair. Each was in his own corner at extreme ends of the large room—over each a corps surgeon was working with zeal, sewing up the gashes, and patching the victim up so that he could at least walk home safely. I was told that pieces of bone were being picked out from where the sabre had entered the skull.

There was to me something of the slaughter house effect about each surgeon—the long white smocks in which they worked were well bespattered and the men under their hands were soaked with blood from head to foot.

The chiefs of the two students corps soon called out another set of champions. Each first stripped to the skin and then put on a long white smock. Over this they wore a fighting armor calculated to protect the vital parts, and yet leave target enough for the sharpened end of the sword—for instance the cheeks, head, chin, ears. On the eyes were bound goggles which now are the feature of chauffeurs. The wrists, jugular, armpits were protected lest the victim bleed to death. Then each stepped up accompanied by his second—the judge proclaimed the character of the contest, the time limit or the number of rounds. The seconds wore each a padded cap with a large and stout visor—also a moderate protection for the body. This is by no means a superfluous precaution, for when two swordsmen get to work they are apt to hit anything within range. Indeed one of the seconds in the first fight I saw got a cut over the eye which put him out of action for the rest of that afternoon.

It is the business of the seconds to stand or crouch as near as they possibly can, each by the side of his champion, and stop the fight with their raised swords the moment the round is up or a foul occurs.

Sudden Flash of Fight.

When the judge gives the signal the two champions of student honor let fly their blades with a suddenness and vigor suggesting an electric drill on a flinty rock. The round was all over before one had time to make out who put in the first blow. To one familiar with boxing there is something uncanny in the sudden flash of the fight without any preliminary sparring—any opportunity to study the two combatants—for the German swordsman is so disguised that one cannot look into his eye or make much from the study of his features in general. His sword arm is held straight out, the hilt on the level with his face, the blade seems to revolve furiously on a pivot which is the wrist of the fighter. There is no lithe springing back or forward; no searching for an opening, as in the French fleurette play. The German plants his feet firmly, stands erect—both men are placed in position by the seconds and any retreat by one or the other counts as a point against him.

After each round the seconds request with much politeness that the surgeon inspect the adversary in the hopes that a cut may be discovered—the surgeons then mop about with their disinfected cotton sponges and report to the judge that there is or is not a cut to the credit of this or the other side.

Blood commenced to run after the first round—and there were nine rounds. The two faces were in a few minutes clogged with blood—it ran down behind their goggles, down their neck and through to the floor. My neighbor sponged some splotches of blood which had spattered my clothes as well as my face.

Of course there was a man on hand who kept scattering sawdust about the feet of the fighters in order to prevent slipping—but this made a mushy sort of paste in a very short time. While the surgeons mopped with their disinfectant sponges the heads and faces of the fighters, the seconds mopped off the swords in the same manner—the smell of disinfectants dominated all others. Perhaps I am oversqueamish in the matter. Even to-day I cannot smell it without recalling the sickening sensation I experienced as a boy at the first sight of the French and German wounded in the war of 1870 and 1871.

Blood spilling is bad enough in real war. To make a sport of it seems to me abnormal.

At the end of the ninth round each champion had six cuts to his credit and the fight had lasted so many minutes that the judge called it a tie—honor was vindicated—and each retired to his corner to receive the congratulations of friends and the attention of surgeons, who immediately proceeded to swab, sew up, and pick out.

Compared with Football.

On the two occasions that I have visited Spain I declined to attend bullfights, although there were very good ones going on. I have, however, no quarrel with those who do. The matter is one of individual taste. It is an open question whether the horses and bulls in Spain suffer in the arena any more than the fox who gives such a jolly chase in the hunting field, or the game birds who limp away with a broken wing to die by degrees under a bush. Those things are matters of conscience—so is football. Over one season I should say that more American students are permanently injured by our present manner of playing that once noble game than are all the corps students of Germany in the same period. My experience may have been exceptional, but I do not recall a college football game in recent years in which one or more of the contestants has not been knocked out—in many cases with serious injuries of an internal nature. The Englishman manages to play nominally the same game in a manner to get enjoyment out of it without at the same time introducing the practices of the prize ring.

But that is digression.

In Germany the Emperor, the Court, the army, the official hierarchy unite in the encouragement of student dueling on the ground that it stimulates chivalrous sentiment among young men who are likely some day to be the pillars of the throne.

When a whole country, or an important section of one, unites in sustaining an institution of domestic growth it is the part of a foreigner to inquire carefully into the matter before venturing to condemn it. Personally I do not like dueling, because it is associated with much beer drinking, much waste of time, and because it cultivates in young men a feeling of caste as against these who are not "corps" members. Yet the fencing in itself is a splendid form of exercise, and it would be well if it were compulsory among all students, along with boxing and other exercises which help to make an individual the guardian of his own honor.

Nursery of Military Virtues.

The number of corps students is small—probably not more than 5 per cent. of the whole body of students. Of this number the bulk are rich, who look forward to a career as officers or officials. The spirit of military government is over the university, and the corps is looked upon as a nursery of military virtues as well as academic fame. Now, if the Government publicly proclaims the soldier as the most honorable, if not the only honorable member of the community, who can blame young men for cultivating an institution which finds favor with their war lord no less than with the aristocracy?

The German Army is unconsciously the chief enemy to manly outdoor sport for reasons which are not far to seek. The officer of the Kaiser is kept very hard at work in his profession. When his routine work is done he feels no need of putting on his flannels and going forth to a tennis or football field for more hard work. Being himself not brought up to sport of any kind he naturally has little sympathy for it. The corps student naturally takes his tone from the army officer, and that is sufficient to explain why at so large a university as Munich the number of students who cultivate outdoor sport is so small as to be practically non-existent.

Student dueling does do some good. It does make young men cultivate swordsmanship; it trains the eye, hardens the muscles, and calls for presence of mind and courage of a certain kind. The young man who can stand up in cold blood without flinching and have himself carved up for no better reason than that the President of his corps has ordered him to do so—such a man is bound to have some good stuff in him.

Dueling in Favor.

German student dueling is likely to remain in favor for many years to come—probably so long as the Government remains of military and official caste. The day may come when the Socialist Party will be strong enough to alter the present state of things. When that time comes the universities may discover that there are other ways of showing courage and chivalrous qualities. But before that day comes there will have to be a reform in the German schools—the children to-day have no time to play games, and it is as a child that we learn what is most valuable to us in the way of sport. Once give the children of Germany a taste for healthy outdoor games, and they will carry this with them to the university. Little by little public sentiment will see that courage, endurance, manliness, courtesy, and many other attributes of the gentleman can be realized by stroking an eight-oar crew, coaching a football team, leading a game of polo, or fighting your way at hockey or lacrosse.

But until that day comes, let us not speak ill of student dueling. It is sport—it is manly—it is conducted in the spirit of fair play, and it has the approval of the highest official authority in the State. What faults go with it are obvious to us, but the way to do away with evil is to plant something better by its side, and there are signs abroad that Germany is moving toward reforms of a healthy nature.

So here's health to you, my gallant friends of the Corps Palatia! Here's to your courage, your courtesy, and your bountiful hospitality!

And here's to all manly outdoor sport!

Thrilling Escapes from Military Prisons

Sergeant Martin Way, "Autocrat of Castle Williams," Tells the Story of His Experiences—26 Years in the Regular Army.

SERGT. MARTIN WAY, Supervisor of Castle Williams, the military prison of the Department of the East, United States Army, will in a few weeks celebrate the twenty-sixth anniversary of his enlistment in the regular service, probably the best-known enlisted man in the entire regular establishment, Sergt. Way enjoys the additional reputation of being one of the soldiers most highly appreciated by his superiors, as was once testified to by Major Gen. John R. Brooke, who, when asked what kind of a soldier Way was, replied, laconically, "None better in the service."

However, after all, it is Sergt. Way's remarkable career as a prison officer upon which his chief claim to fame rests. It was he who escorted ex-Capt. Oberlin M. Carter to and from Castle Williams when that officer was on trial in the Federal Building in this city, and his experiences with noted prisoners at the famous prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.; in the Philippines, and at various other places, would fill volumes.

It would be difficult to find a more reserved or a more modest soldier than the genial, grizzled old Sergeant, who for the past few years, has reigned supreme as the "Autocrat of Castle Williams."

The other day, however, after repeated requests he consented to talk a little about himself. He insisted, however, that whatever he had done that might be deserving of praise should be credited in practically every case to some other soldier more deserving, as he put it, than himself.

"In 1879," said Sergt. Way, "I enlisted in Company H of the famous Ninth Infantry at Omaha, Neb., and for the five years that followed participated in the engagements with the Indians in which that organization bore an important part in Wyoming, Montana, and the Northwest generally. Those were exciting times, and in all my career there is nothing that I am so proud of as the service I saw as a member of the command that won an international fame as the first to scale the walls of Pekin in the recent Boxer troubles in China.

"In 1884 my enlistment expired, and it was then that my career in prison work began. I got my discharge papers at Fort D. A. Russell and immediately re-enlisted, this time in the prison guard at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. I remained there until 1896, when the prison was turned over to the civil authorities, when I was transferred to the Twenty-sixth Infantry in time to take part in the campaign in Cuba and later in the Philippines.

Some Bad Characters.

"To revert to my prison work, however, I will have to go back to Fort Leavenworth, and as you don't care to hear anything about the good fellows who were imprisoned there I will rack my memory and try and tell you something about the bad characters that we had to deal with. In the first place I will say that during the twelve and a half years I was at Leavenworth I never knew a prisoner to escape without a sentinel being disabled. One of the first cases that occurred during my experience there was the escape of three notorious characters. They were guarded by a single soldier. One of the prisoners asked for a drink of water and the guard foolishly, being a kind-hearted fellow, held up the bucket for him to drink. Then one of the prisoners snatched his gun and felled him to the ground with a terrific blow on the head that almost fractured his skull. An hour later we found the poor fellow unconscious on the ground where he had fallen. The prisoners have never been heard of since.

"On another occasion three prisoners were storing potatoes in a cellar. Again there was a single guard on duty. One of the men managed to steal upon him from behind. The next moment the soldier was on the ground with a terrible wound in his head. His almost lifeless body was thrown into the cellar on top of the potatoes. A gag was placed in his mouth, a parting lick was given to him with the big club that had felled him, his keys were stolen, the door locked, and then the prisoners went their way in the direction of the then desolate country to the west of us. Later the guard was found and after many months of suffering finally recovered, but he was never the same man again. Only one of the prisoners was ever recaptured.

"The most notorious and desperate man who was ever incarcerated in a Government prison was named Burton, and he was known as No. 496. He was mixed up in all kinds of daring escapes, he and his partner at one time overcoming no less than five guards. Burton is to-day driving an ice wagon on South Street, New York. I often see him, but he takes care to give me a wide berth, for he well knows that I know him as does no other man in New York. Has he reformed? Well, I should say not. A sheep as black as he never changes his color, and I do not doubt that if the police knew all his doings he would to-day be working for the State and not for an ice company.

"Burton, on the occasion when he and his 'pal' overcame the five guards, was working on a hill near Leavenworth. A Sergeant was in charge of the guards. Burton was standing near when a piece of paper dropped out of the Sergeant's hand. The Sergeant reached down to pick up the paper. The next moment he was senseless on the ground and Burton had his gun. At the same time the other soldier knocked another guard down and grabbed his gun. A few shots were fired, but they went wide of the mark, and the men got away. They made their way into Missouri, where they robbed several Post Offices and innumerable stores, and with the loot managed to get as far West as Pueblo, Col. There we caught them.

"Both were brought back to Leavenworth and sentenced to many extra years at hard labor. Despite the vigilant guard kept over them, however, they were mixed up in innumerable attempts to get away, and each time some poor soldier went down and out. After I was gone, Burton in some way got out of prison legally, and to-day, as I have said, he is eking out an existence driving an ice wagon along the New York water front."

Sergt. Way at this point was asked to talk of his most famous prisoner, Capt. Oberlin M. Carter.

Sorry for Carter.

"Poor old Carter," he said, "was every inch a gentleman and a fine fellow. I never felt so sorry for a man in all my life. He was the best prisoner we ever had in Castle Williams, and he and I became great friends. He used to tell me some of his troubles, and he never failed to declare his innocence, and somehow or another I never could bring myself to the point of believing him guilty. I was then Provost Sergeant here, and had to escort him day after day to the Federal Building, where the habeas corpus proceedings were heard. It made a fellow feel awful sympathetic to take him up Broadway and see all of those curious people eyeing him as if they had never seen an unfortunate fellow-being before. No, I won't tell you what Carter told me; that wouldn't be right.

"Several months after Carter was taken to Fort Leavenworth I had occasion to escort a number of prisoners to the fort. While there I saw him and talked a little with him. He was in stripes, and of course, was a different man; who would not have been under the circumstances? For a prisoner he had a nice job. He was the prison florist. Nice sort of a job for a man with $200,000 or $300,000, wasn't it?"

Sergt. Way declined to talk further of his Castle Williams experiences, pleading the excuse that all that had ever happened in the prison that was really exciting had been duly printed in various papers the day after it happened.

Of Manila and the prison there he did talk, however.

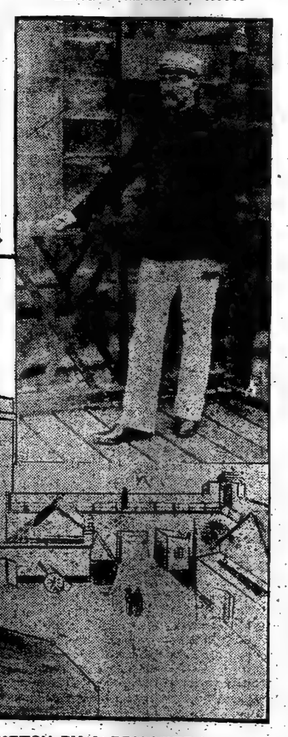
The Manila Prison.

"Now you are talking of a tough gang, sure," laughed the Sergeant. "Of all the places I ever got mixed up in that prison at Manila was the worst. There you had men to handle who had no respect or appreciation for decent treatment, and as was to it, and you can holler humanity and all other kind of gentle terms, but if you try to practice such things in the prison near where Dewey won his fight you will get into trouble, and don't you forget it."

"Sergeant, are you going to retire when your present enlistment expires?" was the last question asked the famous old soldier.

"No, I guess not," he answered, with a smile; "I sorter half way imagine I am going to die in harness."

SERGT. MARTIN WAY.



THE PRISON, FROM A SKETCH BY A PRISONER.

behave it was absolutely necessary that they should be made to understand that if they did not toe the mark 'you would knock their top off.' That was all there was to it, and you can holler humanity and all other kind of gentle terms, but if you try to practice such things in the prison near where Dewey won his fight you will get into trouble, and don't you forget it."

"Sergeant, are you going to retire when your present enlistment expires?" was the last question asked the famous old soldier.

"No, I guess not," he answered, with a smile; "I sorter half way imagine I am going to die in harness."

BEING NICE TO MR. CLEVELAND.

IT was after the services at the funeral of a prominent man of letters at Princeton not long ago. A young woman from New York was escorted to a handsomely equipped carriage, which she understood had been placed by a neighbor at the disposal of out-of-town friends. She told the coachman to drive her to the cemetery, where she would wait until the others should return.

Presently, while waiting for the funeral cortège to pass, ex-President Grover Cleveland approached the vehicle, and, apparently not perceiving its young occupant, told the coachman to drive in some other direction. [illegible] answer, which the young woman did not hear, evidently confused Mr. Cleveland.

Instantly she leaned from the carriage and courteously begged him to get in, saying naïvely that she was in no hurry, as her train did not leave for an hour, and that she would as soon drive first where he wished to go. Thanking her, and with a smile, he accepted the invitation.

Later, when telling of the delightful ride and chat which she had had with the illustrious man, whom she had always wished to meet, she was considerably disconcerted to learn that through a mistake she had offered the ex-President the hospitality of his own carriage.

WHAT DID HE SAY?

CHAMP CLARK, while swapping campaign stories with other politicians on the way to Esopus to notify Judge Parker of his nomination to the Presidency, was awarded the palm for the following:

"One of the funniest experiences I ever had was with a woman stenographer in a Western city. I was billed for the leading speech at a campaign rally, and neglected to prepare my address until a few hours before it was due for delivery, when I went to the stenographer at the hotel where I was staying and asked her to take my dictation and write the words on the typewriter as we went along, so that I might save time and be able to deliver the manifold copies of the address to the reporters just before the meeting began.

"Seating myself in a comfortable armchair, I quickly put into words the address which I had outlined in my mind during an early morning walk, and was congratulating myself on the time I had saved, when the stenographer suddenly burst into tears. Greatly alarmed, I rushed to her side, and with the utmost solicitation urged her to restrain her feelings, meanwhile using my best efforts to ascertain the cause of her distress. Finally she raised her bowed head and—

"'Would you mind speaking that all over again, Mr. Clark?' she said as quickly as her emotion would allow. 'For I am sorry to say I forgot to put any paper in the machine.'"

STRICT ECONOMY.

THE strictest economy I ever saw practiced," said the old stager, "was down in Virginia early in the war, where I was stationed as sutler—on the losing side.

"One of the Captains and myself stayed over night with an old rebel planter, and right royally he treated us, as far as he was able. You know how a Southerner is—he gives up his pride last of all, and this man was no exception. He put us in the only spare room, had a bed made up for us in a hurry, and left us to sleep the sleep of the righteous.

"But about 6 in the morning we were awakened by a tremendous thumping at the door. I jumped up and called out:

"'What's the matter?'

"We recognized old Aunt Sukey's voice when she replied:

"'Ain' you gemmen gwine to git up so Ah kin set de table?'

"'Why, go ahead and set the table, auntie,' I said. 'We'll be up in time for breakfast.'

"'Glar to goodness, how Ah gwine set de table 'dout no table cloth? You all done got every sheet in de house!'

"Aunt Sukey got her sheet," concluded the old-timer, "and most of my appetite went with it."

THE WISE HOTEL MAN.

NOW, it happened that in the midst of the Summer season the hotel man took counsel with himself and, casting up his accounts, discovered that he was running behind the game.

For the guests had so strenuously objected to their bills early in the season that he had reduced their charges much.

And, finding that, in place of adding to his bank account, he was losing more money every time a new arrival registered, the hotel man went into a far corner and thought.

And at the end of half an hour he came forth with a great plan.

"Behold," said he, to the star gossip among the boarders, "a relative is dangerously ill in the city and I must hie me thither. Otherwise I may not come in for a share of the coin he will leave when he cuts loose from things mundane. Farewell, and if there be aught that pleaseth you not, buttonhole the head clerk and speak it into his ear."

And the next day he disappeared.

Coincident with his departure a new head waiter, with bunches of black whiskers and a pair of blue glasses, took charge of the dining room.

And therefrom the size of the beefsteaks and the helping of vegetables dwindled until the guests put forth a great grumble.

To all of them the new head waiter listened sympathetically and swore that all should be remedied.

And to each and every one he went privately and said, "I have fixed the cook for you; but tell no one else, that it be not spread around generally and get me in trouble with the main squeeze when he returneth."

And each and every one swore by his beard that he would keep mum.

Also, they crossed his palm with silver.

So time passed, and every week the same thing took place, and the new head waiter was fain to purchase new socks to wear, because his regular supply was filled with silver and gold and yellowbacks.

And the end of the season came, and the guests departed, each laughing up his sleeve because he had better fare than his neighbor by treating the head waiter right.

And the head waiter, when all had departed, sat down and counted his wealth, and sighed with satisfaction.

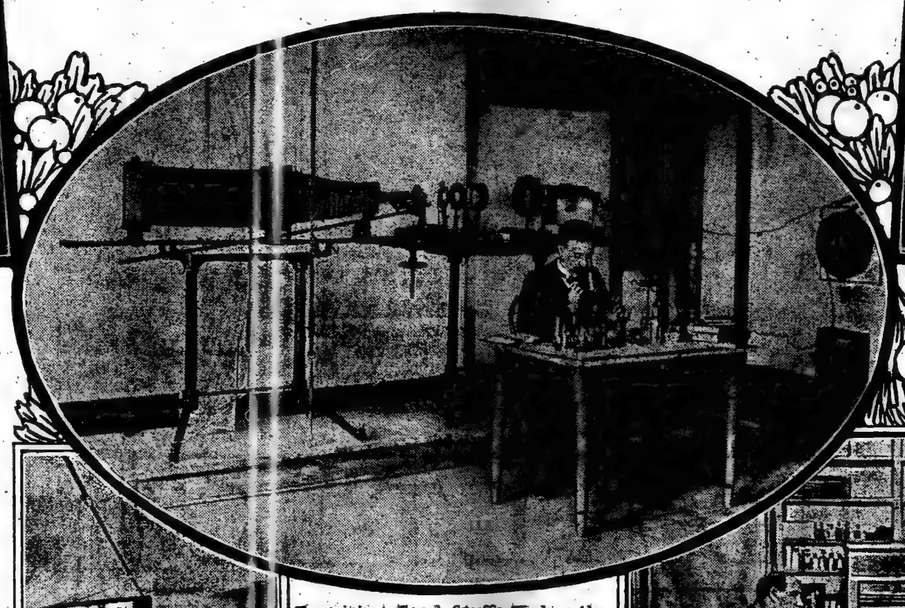
Whereupon he took off his false beard and his blue glasses, and remarked, "Though only the owner of this modest hostelry, I am ahead of the game, just the samey."

And closing up his inn, he proceeded to buy himself an automobile and enjoy life once again.

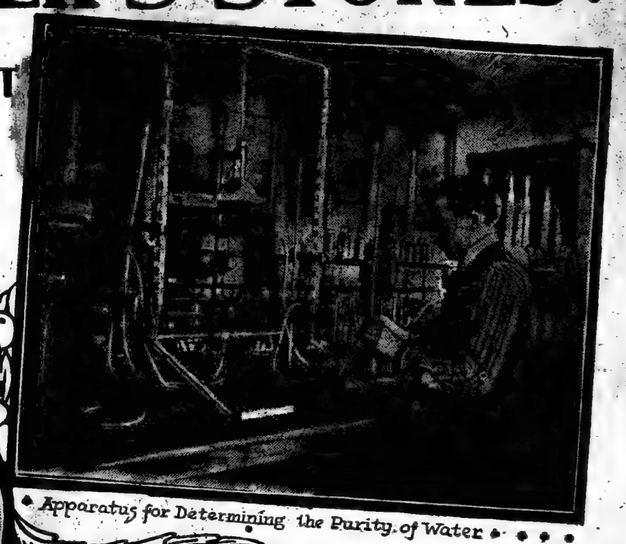
TESTING FOOD STUFFS AT APPRAISER'S STORES.

WORK ACCOMPLISHED IN DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE'S NEW BRANCH LABORATORY—A CHAT WITH "OLD BORAX".

A Laboratory for the Testing of Cattle Foods



Examining Food Stuffs Under the Microscope at the New Government Laboratories in New York



Apparatus for Determining the Purity of Water

THAT foodstuffs imported into New York may be kept to the high standard of purity which the public health demands, the Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Chemistry, has just established a branch laboratory in this city. Within a week apparatus has been installed in a section of the Appraisers' Stores, at Christopher and Washington Streets, and the testing of foods has already begun

The new branch laboratory will be greatly appreciated by importers and shippers. In the past samples of doubtful foods, wines, and oils had to be sent to Washington to be tested at the Bureau of Chemistry. Often there was a considerable delay, which necessitated holding the vessel at her pier or giving bond for the purity of the cargo. With the laboratory in the same building with the Appraisers, an immediate decision can be had. Before the Appraisers have finished their work the tests can be made, and unless serious adulterations or frauds are discovered a certificate of purity given. In case all is not right the report with samples are sent to Washington for final decision.

It is expected that the establishing of the New York branch laboratory will make the execution of the law more complete, as by far the largest quantity of foodstuffs imported enters here. A similar branch has been established in San Francisco for the examination of samples taken on the Pacific Coast.

No Aid to Health Board.

It is not expected that the branch laboratory will be of much direct service to the Department of Health. It will make no experiments with foodstuffs taken from the open markets, as the time of the chemists will be wholly taken up with the examination of imports. In case of emergency, tests would be made as a matter of courtesy.

The new laboratories will be in charge of R. E. Doolittle, former State Analyst of Michigan. Two of his assistants who have already been chosen are A. W. Ogden, formerly of the Connecticut Experiment Station at New Haven, and Edmund Clark of the New York Department of Health.

When a TIMES reporter visited the laboratory the other morning the whole staff, including L. M. Tolman, who came on from Washington to get the local laboratory running smoothly, was hard at work with no end of tests in sight. One man was stewing sausages in search of dangerous preservatives. Another was testing olive oil for adulterations, and a third was getting to the bottom of a can of suspicious Italian preserves.

Dr. W. H. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, was in the city last week superintending the installation of work. He has become a National character within the past year through his experiments with Washington department clerks, to whom he fed doctored food. The nickname "Old Borax" has come to him, and promises to stick. Few scientific experiments have attracted more attention from the general public than the chemical boarding house or the poison squad, as the young men called themselves.

Star Boarders Not Wanted.

"Don't, by any mischance, give out the impression that I'm going to start an impure food boarding house here in New York," said Dr. Wiley the other morning. "I haven't a doubt that we could fill the Appraisers' Stores with star boarders. So people looking for free meals, even with a little borax or something of that sort thrown in may as well keep away from the new laboratory. Experiments similar to the borax experiments may be carried on in the future, but Washington will be the scene."

For this experiment young men working in the various departments were asked to volunteer. They signed a pledge, agreeing on their honor to follow implicitly the rules and regulations governing the hygienic table, and to use no other food or drink than that provided. They agreed to abstain from alcoholic liquor, to continue regular habits of life and to use tobacco, if at all, only at times agreed upon with Dr. Wiley.

They also signed a release from damages, which read:

"I further agree that I will not hold the Department of Agriculture nor any person connected therewith responsible for any illness or accident that may occur during my connection with the hygienic table."

The officials found that simply placing the young men on their honor was satisfactory, and no attempt to watch them was made. The chemistry boarding house had two tables, one the experimental, the other the recreation. The men took turns at each, the principal difference in the meal being that the food served at one had borax in it while the food at the other was pure.

Three meals were served—breakfast at 8 A. M., luncheon at noon, and dinner at 5:30 P. M.

Varied Bill of Fare.

Since the young men were to be kept under observation for periods of from thirty to seventy days, it was clearly desirable to make the bill of fare as varied as convenient. To this end the meats selected were roast beef, beefsteak, lamb, veal, pork, chicken, and turkey. Fish and oysters were also used. Eggs were served twice a week. The butter was of the best quality which could be made, and was free from coloring matter and salt. The milk and cream were by the authorities of the District of Columbia and personally visited by the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry. The vegetables were those of the season, and where they could not be obtained otherwise the best grades of vegetables preserved by sterilization alone were used. The soups, in order to secure uniformity in their composition, were purchased of large manufacturing firms making a specialty of soups. The fruits were those of the reason or preserved without antiseptics. In all cases it was stipulated that none of the foods furnished should be treated with any preservative, and in no case was this injunction violated, in so far as examinations extended. All the preserved foods which were employed had either been kept in cold storage, as was the case of the meats and the fowls, or been subjected to sterilization and subsequent exclusion of the air, as was the case with some of the vegetables, fruits, and soups. Assurances that these bodies were free from any chemical preservative or other antiseptic were secured from all the dealers, and the assurances were confirmed by examinations. Coffee and tea were allowed in moderate, uniform quantities to those who were in the habit of drinking these beverages. Desserts of various kinds were employed at regular times, consisting of custards, rice pudding, and ice cream made with the best cream, sugar, and a flavoring substance. A liberal supply of fruits was incorporated with the food supply, either those in season or those preserved by sterilization.

Borax was selected as the first preservative to be experimented with, as it is most commonly used and lends itself well to demonstration. At first the borax was mixed with the butter. It was found, however, that the boarders could not help having a distaste for the article which contained the preservative. Then it was given in capsules, and the men ate without distaste or prejudice of any particular article of food. They were at the table six months, and the results of the experiments have only recently been figured up. In the 196 days of observation 5,085 samples were analyzed and 6,425 record sheets made.

Results of Experiments.

The experiment proved conclusively that boric acid and borax, when continuously administered in small doses for a long period or when given in large quantities for a short period, create disturbances of the appetite, of digestion, and of health.

Enforcing the Law.

Three Government departments cooperate in enforcing the law for imported food products, which went into effect a little more than a year ago. The State Department, through our Consuls abroad, furnishes a full description of the character of the goods, in the form of a duplicate of the invoice. This is accompanied by the sworn declaration of the shipper that the goods are up to the standard required by law. The Treasury Department, through the customs officers, secures samples of goods suspected of adulteration and forwards them to the Department of Agriculture.

When impurities are found the importer is notified, and an opportunity to explain is granted to him. If he does this satisfactorily the invoice is released; if not, the importer is required to reship the goods beyond the jurisdiction of the United States. If not reshipped in time they are destroyed.

The result of this law has been most salutary. The character of products imported has shown decided improvement since the law went into effect.

Searching for a Mysterious Island in the North Pacific

A Land Ruled Perhaps by Shipwrecked Men of the American Navy.

SOMEWHERE between the Hawaiian Islands and Panama, the longest space of water on the globe where mariners sail fearless of going ashore, there may be an island, or perhaps a nucleus of inhabited islands, or, possibly, there are no islands nor any speck of land where men can live. Nevertheless, the belief that there is such a spot in the North Pacific survives with the reports of sailormen of a century that they have seen or known of this mysterious place.

It must be a possession of the United States by right of discovery through shipwreck, and it is very probable that the Government to which it belongs will make further efforts to find it. Great Britain has looked eagerly for this additional place to plant her flag, and the United States has not been lacking in energetic search. Both have failed as signally as if they had sought for the alleged treasure of the Flying Dutchman.

Interest in the quest of a place where gray-haired veterans of the United States Navy may dwell like a company of Robinson Crusoes has been revived through a paper by James Hague of 18 Wall Street read at the Eighth Geographic Congress in this city.

In his early life he was a searcher for guano islands and was one of the witnesses to the departure of the United States warship Levant from the Hawaiian Islands for Panama in the Fall of 1860. With Edward Everett Hale he had never given up hope that the story of "The Man Without a Country" may have a concluding chapter in the return of the remnant of the crew of the Levant, together with "Phil" Nolan, whom the veteran author says he would "greet as a grandfather."

It was the sense of those who heard Mr. Hague read his paper on the "Reported Islands or Island of the Northern Pacific" that in the next search for it or them the United States Government should send a collier to cruise about the latitude and longitude indicated by seamen who believed that they had seen the mysterious land.

The idea of the geographers was that she should be equipped with the most modern means of sounding, especially as there is little or no dispute that at least one sea Captain has actually seen shoal land close to the place where there may be an unknown country under the rule of men of the American Navy, with others who might have been shipwrecked before or after them.

Because of the many papers to be heard by the geographers Mr. Hague could read only in part the paper he had prepared in regard to the island or islands in the North Pacific which are or are not. Later in conversation with the members of the congress he increased their interest. He told to men whose imaginations have been their inspirations in geographic exploration and research what he had omitted in his papef. He even hinted that somewhere in the latitude and longitude were men who have long since been adjudged dead and their insurance policies paid to relatives.

A Girl Ruler, Perhaps.

There, too, perhaps, is a blue-eyed girl, the Chief Magistrate or Queen of an interesting community.

The records that would make this possible and pleasing to female suffrage advocates are that the good ship James Campbell was abandoned near latitude 20 degrees north and longitude 120 degrees west, 800 miles from the coast, to windward, and 2,300 miles from Hawaii, to leeward.

Two boats left the ship, steering for Hilo, Hawaii. The larger and better boat, well adapted to sailing, contained the Captain with his wife and girl baby and several sailors; the second boat carried five or six sailors, The Captain's boat made sail, and at first, towed the other boat, but after two or three days parted company, leaving her behind. After twenty-three days the second boat reached Hilo, expecting to find the Captain's boat already there.

The weather had been favorable and the sea smooth, and nothing had occurred to account for the failure of the Captain's boat to arrive. It has never been heard from. It is possible that the Captain may have sighted and landed upon an island, where, if he found it habitable, or inhabited, he might have preferred to stay rather than take the risk of a further voyage in an open boat with his wife and child.

There was never a more fascinating story of the seas than that briefly hinted at by Mr. Hague in his paper. To a reporter of THE NEW YORK TIMES he went into greater detail. He said in part:

"In the North Pacific Ocean, about 1,000 to 1,200 miles east-southeast from Hawaii, somewhere between the meridians of 133 and 138 degrees of longitude west from Greenwich and included within the fifteenth and twentieth parallels of north latitude, substantially in a direct line between the Port of Hilo, on the Island of Hawaii, and the Bay of Panama, (nearly 4,500 miles distant,) there is a midocean area, covering about 200 miles in latitude by 150 or 200 miles in longitude, equal to 30,000 or 40,000 square miles, from which region during the past eighty years or more from time to time there have come occasional reports of an island or islands said to have been observed by passing navigators.

Reports from Whalers.

"Nearly, if not quite, all these reports appear to have come originally, mostly more than fifty years ago, from cruising whalemen, who were practically the only voyagers who until lately ever found any occasion or good reason to visit this remote part of the Pacific in pursuit of business. The region lies beyond the usual tracks and sailing routes of commercial voyages, and very few vessels of other classes excepting whalemen have had any occasion to traverse this unfrequented region, which, if it contains no island; is not far from the centre of the largest landless ocean area on the surface of the globe, while if there be an island, it is the most remotely isolated land in the world.

"I became earnestly interested in the questionable existence of the reported island or islands, and I consulted my friend, Prof. George Davidson, formerly Chief of the Pacific Coast Division of the United States Coast Survey, an eminent oceanographer, who, on my behalf, examined some of the older charts, as far back as Lord Anson's, in search of interesting data, concerning which he writes:

"'In the narrative of Capt. F. W. Beechey, Royal Navy, commanding his Majesty's ship Blossom, (Vol. II., Page 88,) you will find his short account of an unsuccessful search for reported islands in the region of 16 degrees latitude north and 130-133 degrees longitude west. He mentions Henderson's and Cooper's Islands by name, and has "New Island" (in latitude 17 degrees and longitude 136 degrees west) on his track chart. His search was too limited to settle the question, but he says he saw none of the usual signs of land. His track chart (Vol. I.) shows that he made his examination between Jan. 11 and 28, 1827, but no soundings are noted thereon. In a footnote (Page 88) he adds that he has heard that "an island of moderate height has been seen by the Sultan, American whaler, in latitude 15 degrees 30 minutes and longitude 134 degrees west."

"Capt. Sir Edward Belcher, in his narrative of the voyage of her Majesty's ship Sulphur, with the consort Starling, (Vol. I., Page 50,) furnishes a detailed track chart of their search, with all soundings noted fifty fathoms as bottom: dates June 17-29, 1837. This chart embraces the area latitude 15 degrees to 18 degrees, longitude 129 degrees to 139 degrees, but is not sufficiently minute to be satisfactory."

Belcher's Itinerary.

"I have also drawn from Belcher's narrative the following notes of his itinerary:

"'June 20th-21st—The Starling was now directed to pursue a course so as to enter on the one hundred and thirtieth degree meridian in latitude 17 degrees north, bore up to preserve a parallel course to her, and enter at 16 degrees 30 minutes north, at which point another cluster of doubtful islands was reported to exist, as well as a continuous batch given us by the whalers in 1826 and 1827, as far as 135 degrees, and which we then sought in the Blossom, without success. As the Starling would preserve a W. by S. and the Sulphur a W. by N. course through that region, avoiding the Blossom's track, they ought to have been found, if they existed.

"'22d—Wind light, Medusae more plentiful, and a few sticks floating, excited our hopes of finding land; but the current having been determined to set S. 86 degrees W., this would bring them from Clarion Island.

"'24th—Breeze variable, water smooth. Tropic birds (Phaston Aethārius) and frigate Pelican (Pelecanus Aquilus) also observed.

"'25th—* * * Should chance lead me in this direction again I shall certainly cross the meridian of to-day fifteen miles further south.

"'26th—Wind same, fewer birds, but no symptoms of land.

"'27th—On the 27th entered the line its assigned to whalers' discoveries.

"'28th—Crossed Blossom's track.

"'29th—Passed over many positions assigned—no signs of land.'

"I have been thus minute upon this subject, as I cannot divest myself of the impression that land exists in this neighborhood. So many assertions can hardly rest on imagination."

Prof. Davidson further writes:

"I examined an old chart of the 'North Pacific Ocean' by E. and G. W. Blunt, New York, copyrighted in 1840, with additions to 1884. I inclose you a tracing of the region embraced by latitudes 10 degrees to 20 degrees and longitude 130 to Hawaii; and I have added a note, and directions and distances, from Hilo to Cape San Lucas, (north 85½ degrees east, 2,520 nautical miles,) to Clipperton Island, (south about 78 degrees east, 2,670 nautical miles,) to Roca Coral, (south about 78 degrees east, 1,080 nautical miles,) and to Coiba Island (south 80 degrees east, 4,260 nautical miles,) in western approach to Panama Bay. You will note thereon several separate islands and two groups, with the track of the Sulphur laid down. Upon that you can plat the position of 'discolored water' lately reported by Capt. Lawless.

"The Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department has published 'reported dangers in the North Pacific,' and in the 'Supplement 417, 1890,' No. 563, a mention is made of 'a group of islands' in 16 degrees 30 minutes, 134 degrees 30 minutes, with the authority 'Krusenstern from American Whalers'; and an 'island' in 15 degrees 30 minutes, longitude 136 degrees, Capt. Bunker, 1823.

"With the above facts I judge," says Prof. Davidson, "that the group of ten islets close together really refer to one or two islets, and that its position was reported by some whaler to many others, who each independently reported it without having seen it. No body of whalers could have so closely determined the positions indicated. And that the eastern compact group of four may really refer to the larger group.

"The two islands 'New' and 'Roca Coral' may refer to one island, with a longitude much west of the former groups.

Of Doubtful Existence.

"During the sixty years following Sir Edward Belcher's search in the doubtful region, (1837,) there were, so far as I am aware, no trustworthy observations of land reported in that quarter, unless the somewhat vague statements and uncertain memories of old-time whalemen be excepted. Nevertheless, nearly all the standard charts, maps, and globes continued to show in that neighborhood, at least until lately, one or more islands of doubtful existence and position. It is said, moreover, that one or more vessels visited the field on various occasions, seeking guano islands without finding any.

"In August, 1899, the Fish Commission steamer Albatross, Commander Jefferson F. Moser, with a party of scientific explorers under the direction of Mr. Alexander Agassiz, left San Francisco for the Marquesas, with instructions to traverse the doubtful region, keeping a careful lookout for land within sight.

"From Capt. Mosher's reports I draw the following notes:

"'Shortly after midnight, Sept. 2, we arrived in the vicinity of danger, and marked "(?) Island" on H. O. Chart No. 527, in latitude 17 degrees 10 minutes north, longitude 136 degrees 3 minutes west, and reported under the name of "Island," "New Island," "Roca Coral," &c. This danger had previously been searched for by H. M. S. Rattlesnake and H. M. S. Sulphur. The following soundings were obtained by the Albatross in that vicinity:

"'Station AA No. 8, latitude 17 degrees 13 minutes north, longitude 136 degrees 00 minutes west, 2,776 fathoms.

"'Station AA No. 9, latitude 16 degrees 52 minutes north, longitude 136 degrees 12 minutes west, 3,008 fathoms.

"'Station AA No. 10, latitude 16 degrees 38 minutes north, longitude 136 degrees 14 minutes west, 3,088 fathoms.

"At each of the first two stations the operation of sounding occupied about an hour, and during those times a bright lookout was kept for land without result. At the last station a haul of the beam trawl was made after sounding, the operation occupying from 8:04 A. M. to 3:45 P. M. The lookout kept at this time for land was likewise without result. The weather while in this vicinity was clear and pleasant, with light breeze from the northeastward and smooth sea; horizon generally clear.

Presence of Animal Life.

"It was noted that at several points close to the horizon low leaden cloud masses assumed a hard, sharp fixed form, having the outline of and resembling distant high islands. Tropic birds were constantly about, and the previous day, Sept. 1, several petrels were observed. On the 3d sharks and tropic birds were seen. The presence of this animal life might add strength to the presumption that land was somewhere near, but similar animal life accompanied the vessel on the entire voyage, and was no more abundant in this locality than at any other point on the course. My opinion is that this danger does not exist, within sight, under fair conditions, of the locality over which the soundings were made."

Commander Moser, in June, 1903, to his report, originally made in September, 1899, after further consideration, spoke of the possibility that the island may exist beyond his range of vision from the Albatross.

Since that report was made all indications of islands within this doubtful region have been omitted from later charts issued by the United States Hydrographic Office, which show in that neighborhood only the deep soundings recorded by the Albatross.

Within recent years the establishment of a steamship line between San Francisco and Tahiti, of which the sailing route lies more or less within the questionable field, has given further opportunity for occasional search there.

In March, 1902, Capt. Robert T. Lawless, commanding the steamship Australia, observed, as he believes, certain indications of shoal water, which he reports as follows:

"On my way from San Francisco to Tahiti on the morning of March 17, 1902, in the latitude of 18 degrees 56 minutes north, longitude 136 degrees 10 minutes west, at 5:20 A. M., I passed two patches of what appeared to be, and no doubt was, shoal water. It was blowing a strong trade wind at the time and the sea was too rough to lower a boat to sound, which I should have done had it been smooth. Meeting a shoal so suddenly and unexpectedly, I did not leave the bridge for several hours, thinking I might meet others. I had to alter the ship's course two points to avoid the patches, as they were right ahead when first seen. The course from Tahiti does not lie in the direction of these shoals, but strong trades compelled me to keep off in that direction that I might carry fore and aft sail. The latitude can be relied on to one or two miles. The longitude to say five miles."

Capt. Lawless further writes: "It will be seen that at 5:20 A. M. the sun could cast no cloud shadows on the water, the rifts in the clouds could reflect no bright streaks, and, as there were two separate paths, divided by a clear channel, it could not be attributed to any discoloration caused by whales, nor could it be schools of fish, as the approach of the steamer would frighten them away. Although the sea was fairly rough, it did not break, showing there must be thirty or forty feet of water over the shoal; but I venture to say that, in a storm when the waves are fifteen to twenty feet high, it would break."

This observation of shoal water, as thus reported by Capt. Lawless, indicating the possible existence of a shoal region, where reefs and islands might naturally occur, did much to revive and stimulate afresh the interest, not only of the Hydrographic Office for its importance to navigators, but also of all persons who, for any conceivable reason, might in any way be concerned in the question of the existence of islands, reefs, or shoals in that part of the ocean.

Mr. Hague added to the story he had told to the Geographic Congress about the search of the United States ship Tacoma for the islands, that on her return he had brought together her commander, R. F. Nicholson, and Capt. Lawless in San Francisco, and that the latter had explained that it was very possible that he might have been many miles off in his calculation of the shoal water which he had seen in the early morning, as his latitude and longitude had not been determined until noon of the same day. He said that it was quite possible that in shearing off from the shoal water he had failed to see the land that must be near them, unless they were above the island, the result of sudden volcanic action.

The man who saw the Levant sail on her last voyage is confident that the Government will send another searching expedition, properly equipped, and is hopeful that they may find a colony of white-haired men like himself, ruled by a girl, and that he will have the pleasure of reintroducing them to the American of to-day.

HOW IT CAME ABOUT.

DURING the absence from town recently of Recorder Elijah Doremus, who presides over the East Orange Police Court, Acting Mayor William Cardwell was called upon to perform the duties of Police Magistrate. One morning Mr. Cardwell had a long docket of petty offenders, and when the last one had been discharged on the telling of a very ingenious story of excuse, Mr. Cardwell turned in his chair and with a smile said to a number of officials and court attendants:

"That fellow reminds me of one of my colored constituents in the First Ward, whom I met unexpectedly at the County Penitentiary in Caldwell. On the day in question I formed one of a party of county officials who were on a tour of inspection of the prison, and while we were in the office a big batch of prisoners arrived from the county jail in Newark. All hands were lined up and their pedigrees taken, and as the line moved on we sized them up. Presently a cheerful looking darkey lined up and gave his name and all the other particulars; then he looked up, and as he did so he caught sight of me. His face brightened and he said cheerfully:

"'Hello, dar, Mr. Cardwell; I'm right glad to see you.'

"'Hello, there, my friend,' said I. 'I don't recognize you, but you seem to know me.'

"'Deed I do, Mr. Cardwell. I'm one of your bes' fren's on 'lection day,' he replied.

"I realized that he was one of my constituents, and that it was up to me to at least give him some sympathy, so I said, 'I'm very sorry to see you here.'

"'Not a bit mo' sorry than I am to be hyar, an' it all come of ther mos' ridiklous mistake I ever made in all my born days,' he said. On being asked how it all happened, he added:

"'They got me up hyar fo' stealin' a hoss, and lawd bless yo', Mistar Cardwell, I ain't no mo' steal that thar hoss than you, an' I ain't done laffin' over hit. I laff and I laff and I laff, when I find out how thet miserble creature done fool me.

"'Hit happened down on Hamilton Street; I wus jes' nachuly strollin' erlong, and all of a suddin what should I see but er rope a-wiggin' along ther street, jes' like it was a snake. I stops and I says, very severe, "Rope, whar are you gwine? Whut yo' mean by actin' disaway on the street? Yo' come right erlong wif me," and I picks up ther rope and walks down street with hit under my arm, an' I walks through Clinton Street clean over to Vailsburg. I wus goin' ter teach thet thar rope a lesson.

"'Well, bimeby I reach Vailsburg, and thar I stopped and turn aroun', and what should I see but thet fool hoss, done hitch hisself to thet rope. Well, I tell yo' Ah wus mighty mad. I ses: "You fool hoss yo'! Hit looks mighty bad fo' yo' to be in this position. Whut yo' got to say fo' yourself? Yo' know whut I got a min' ter do wiv yo? I'm going' to sell yo'. Yass I am, an' de nex' time yo' won't be buttin' in that way."

"'That's whut I done wiv thet diabolical creature, Mistar Cardwell. I done sell him fo' thirty dollars, and then ther officers hed ther narve to come an' say I done stole dat hoss.'

"I made up my mind that that fellow would have made a good newspaper reporter," said Mr. Cardwell, smiling down on a couple of newspaper men who were laughing at the story. "No, that man didn't stay in prison very long, and I've seen him around my ward a good deal since then. He's a first-rate campaign orator; all you've got to do is give him a few points and he'll orate all right. He's just like the colored preacher who, when asked how he preached, replied that he announced his text and then 'branched.'"

'TWAS TOO MUCH.

THE time for the singing of a great song which had made two men famous had at length arrived. The singer—a dainty creature in simple white—appeared. Her voice, clear as a flute and supple as the lash of a whip, filled every corner of the big theatre with lovely melody. The applause which followed her last sweet note was thunderous. The sunburned man in the audience turned to his wife.

"Did you ever in all your life hear anything so beautiful?" he asked. "It was almost divine, wasn't it?"

"Oh, I s'pose so," she replied, haltingly. "But, Jack, look at that horsey chorus girl with a hat on just like mine!"

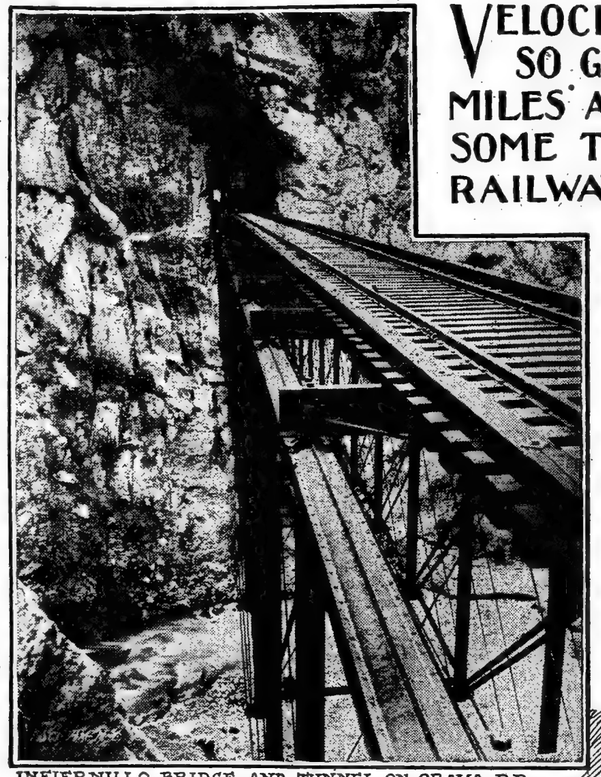
A River of Boiling Water in the Simplon Tunnel

Velocity and Heat of Torrent So Great That Workmen Four Miles Away Flee From Danger—Some Thrilling Romances of Railway Engineering



INFIERNILLO BRIDGE AND TUNNEL ON ORAYA R.R.

INTERIOR OF THE FIRST TUNNEL UNDER SIMPLON PASS

IMAGINE a vast underground corridor twelve miles long extending directly under the Alps—a corridor in which nearly 3,000 men are working night and day with the knowledge that unless their labor is completed within a specified time it will cost their employers a thousand dollars a day, and if completed before that time that it will earn them a bonus of the same dignified sum. Then imagine the roar as of a thousand cannons, with a mighty river of boiling water bursting saved for the fortunate reason that the inundation occurred at a time when several hundred workmen were leaving the deluged section of the tunnel preparatory to being relieved by the regular morning shift.

Yet even then the velocity of the boiling torrent was so great and the heat so intense that within a few minutes after the first note of danger sounded it was heard by men working in the tunnel four miles from the source of the parboiling cataract.

But for this unforeseen calamity the engineers expected to turn the completed tunnel over to the Jura-Simplon Railway early in October of this year. As it is now, the completion of the Simplon tunnel will be delayed several months, it being estimated that it cannot possibly be opened before next April, by which time France and Italy will have expended nearly $20,000,000 in a stupendous effort to bring Paris and Milan eight hours closer together by rail.

Among the romances of railway engineering few, if any, are more important and interesting than the laborious construction of the Simplon tunnel. Other tunnels in the Alps are higher than the great Simplon, but none is within three miles of the extreme underground—the daylight to daylight—length of the subterranean avenue under the historic Simplon Pass, so created and christened by Napoleon the Great.

Its importance and enormous advantage are apparent even to the lay mind. At present the road from Paris to Milan by way of the Mont Cenis tunnel is 654 miles long, while that by way of the St. Gothard tunnel is 663 miles. The Simplon route is only 608 miles long, and, being some 1,500 feet nearer the sea level than the St. Gothard route and 2,000 feet lower than the Mont Cenis tunnel, it will mean a saving of fully eight hours in time between Paris and the metropolis of Northern Italy.

Besides, it will recover for France a large portion of the international passenger and freight traffic which was lost to that country through the St. Gothard tunnel and will thus be a crushing commercial blow to Germany. But at the same time it may act as a boomerang in destroying the present prestige and prosperity of Marseilles as a commercial outlet and inlet of Switzerland and proportionately benefiting Genoa. Also it will be a means of diverting mail and express between Dover ports and the Adriatic from Calais and Brindisi, and finally will, because of greater economy due to its superior topographical location, deal a mortal blow to other Alpine routes in the matter of rates based upon the expenses of operation.

Deadly to Workmen.

Cable dispatches to THE TIMES from Turin since the inundation on Sept. 9 state that the heat emanating from the boiling torrents now rushing through nearly a mile of the cavern is deadly to workmen. Only by sprinkling them constantly with ice water is it possible to make any headway against the onsweeping tide, and though the tunnelers are being supplied with fresh air constantly, many of them have succumbed.

Probably no more remarkable obstacle was ever encountered in tunnel construction than has been in the periodical inundations of this greatest tunnel in engineering history. New York engineers exhibited no surprise over the recent calamity in the Simplon, as, one of them explained, a dozen similar springs have been encountered since work on the tunnel began.

This expert said that the enormous pressure which some of the springs showed on their first appearance was due to the presence of a subterranean lake of as yet unknown extent. This remarkable lake is scientifically located at an altitude ranging from a thousand to two thousand feet above the tunnel proper, thus accounting for the tremendous force of the torrent now sweeping through the tunnel.

The boiling basin or lake is believed to be supplied from the Avino or the Cairasca Lake, as has been proved by comparing the coloration of the waters. Until a few months ago a similar spring, which is now exhausted, flowed into the tunnel at the rate of 1,700 gallons a minute, proving the existence of a subterranean reservoir at an altitude of at least 4,000 feet above the sea level. It is believed that this reservoir will in time become exhausted, flowing, as it does, at the rate of between twenty-five and forty gallons a second.

As the water is of a temperature of about 112 degrees, it has been necessary to install refrigerators in the tunnel in order that any progress at all may be made. Prof. Schardt, as official geologist of the tunnel, estimates that one thousand million cubic feet of water have flowed from the tunnel openings within the past four years, or since the first boiling spring was tapped.

Notwithstanding the many disheartening obstacles to be overcome in tunneling under Simplon Pass, and despite the fact that thirteen years were required to complete the Mont Cenis, and seven and a half years were spent on the St. Gothard, the Simplon engineers contracted in 1898 to complete the Herculean undertaking in five and one-half years.

Cavern as Ventilator.

A novelty in the way of saving time on the work and providing air for the workmen was in the plan, hitherto unattempted, to construct two single-track tunnels, paralleling each other, instead of one double track tunnel. In this way one cavern has served as a huge ventilator for the two thousand men working in the other and vice versa. An army of four thousand men has been burrowing under the Alps every hour since the first blast was fired and the first drill applied on Nov. 13, 1898.

When it is stated that the greater part of Simplon Mountain is solid rock, one can understand why the progress of the huge tunnel has been limited to such a small pace as twenty feet a day in blasting by the use of 33,000 pounds of dynamite a month. This means that an enormous total of 2,178,000 pounds of dynamite will have been used in blowing away through the heart of the great granite and limestone mountain by the time the tunnel is completed.

If the reader would have a better conception of this stupendous problem, a few facts and figures may be noted in passing. Science, like a mammoth double-headed mole, has been burrowing under the Alps on the northern side at the rate of twenty feet a day and on the southern side at the rate less than sixteen feet daily. Why, may be asked, is the progress slower on the southern than on the northern side? Because the rock formation from the south to the north in the zone of attack consists of 8,229 yards of calcareous mica schist, 12,610 yards of Teggiolo lime, mica, and gneiss, and 4,810 yards of mica schist and gypsum rock. Passing from daylight to daylight through the tunnel, one passes under and between 25,649 yards of almost solid rock. As the solid mass is harder and far more adhesive on the south than on the north, the difficulty of penetrating it there is a third greater.

Through twelve miles of rock! On the surface it may appear to have been needless undertaking to mine a road of this sort when by going higher a tunnel of about two-thirds the length of the Simplon could have been driven through the mountain. But the enormous advantage of the lower level is or will be shown in the decreased cost of transportation due to the slighter grade. Clearly enough, it is more than twice easier to haul a load an upward distance of 500 yards than twice that distance. This is practically the advantage of the Simplon tunnel over the St. Gothard and Mont Cenis. While the Simplon nestles afar down in the Alpine Valley at an elevation of only 2,312 feet, the St. Gothard towers in an eyrie of 3,786 feet, while the Mont Cenis beetles still nearer the clouds at a height of 4,241 feet.

As a problem in railway operation, the greater the altitude the greater is the expense. Hence the Simplon route, while costing more in the beginning in so far as the tunnel proper is concerned, can be maintained at less than one-half the expense of operating the rival roads.

Without a Parallel.

A few months more and the miners descending from Switzerland will have joined hands with those ascending from the plains of Lombardy, connecting two republics and a kingdom by an underground passage without a parallel in the domain of engineering achievement. Since the year 206 the Simplon Pass has been used as a trans-Alpine thoroughfare, but it was only with the advent of Napoleon that a highway was built over the Leonontine Alps—a road which still classes as one of the superb triumphs of man over nature. Planned by Napoleon simply as a means of passage for his armies in the invasion of Italy, the road was commenced in 1801 and completed in 1805. It wanders, a somnambulist of highways, over the forty-one miles from Briguo to Domo Ossolo, where it pauses and peers downward from an altitude of 6,590 feet. The tunnel route lies to the northeast of the historic imperial highway, stringing a bow as between Briguo and Iselle.

Hydraulic pressure has been the powerful ally of dynamite in this protracted campaign with an invincible force of capital and labor arrayed against a hitherto unconquered mountain of rock. For the victory no small credit is due to the Rhone and Diveria Rivers, which have been harnessed to supply the power necessary to operate the great hydraulic drills and pumps—the largest ever constructed and operated.

Mention has been made of the twin arrangement of the tunnel. The Simplon tunnel consists really of two distinct corridors paralleling each other at a distance of about sixty feet excepting near the centre, where, for a distance of 420 yards, they join. It was by means of the fresh-air currents thus pumped under the Alps from one cavern into the other that the work was greatly simplified and indeed made possible of successful completion.

But while the Simplon tunnel is perhaps the greatest achievement of its kind on record, it is only one of a myriad dramas of the rail which are being enacted under ground and at dissying altitudes on the stage of contemporary engineering. Only recently the new railway up the Jungfrau was completed as one of the colossal monuments which science and ingenuity have reared among the clouds.

Second only to the Jungfrau Railway among the new Alpine wonders is that which is now operating between the base and snow-capped peaks of Mont Pilate. It was to the peak that the Judean Governor was banished and condemned to roam in spirit until the terrestrial finals.

This Pilatus railway curiosity, with the exception of the road up the Rigi, has been viewed by more ease-loving mountain climbers than any other railwayed peak on earth. Both the Rigi and Pilatus rise abruptly from the Lake of Lucerne and their distance from the main company of Alpine peaks is such as to afford an ideal coign from which to view the panoramic grandeur of the scene. All Central Switzerland, with its unrivaled picturesqueness and rugged charm, spreads out like a marvelous crazy-quilt under one from the top of Pilatus.

Owing to their close proximity to civilization and the beaten highways of travel, these Swiss railways, while in a class by themselves, are shorn of much of the enchantment which remoter distances lend to such railways as the great Cape to Cairo Road, which was recently announced as having been completed as far north from Cape Town as Victoria Falls, or a distance of more than two thousand miles of uninterrupted track.

Readers of the Haggard romances will remember that the novelist located the fabulous mines of Solomon in the mysterious region lying between Victoria Falls and Nyanza Lake. Romantically considered, the Cape to Cairo Road will tap the very territory in which the incalculable treasure-troves are located, passing almost within the shadow of the Solomon Mountains.

But modern engineering adventurers have not been content with merely invading the heart of Africa. They have, as is now well known, succeeded in penetrating to the holy of holies, which is Jerusalem, and, as may not be known so well, in trespassing on the domain of the Arabian Nights and even into the Garden of Eden.

Called into being by the magic wand of capital, an up-to-date railway has for several years been operated in that part of Asia Minor which radiates from the city of Damascus. Steps have been taken to extend this remarkable road south from Damascus, it being the ultimate purpose of the promoters to extend the line to the Persian Gulf. This will afford the Damascus Railway a seaport, by means of which it will be a formidable rival of the ancient caravans which for centuries have monopolized the transportation business of that remote and romantic region.

But as a simon-pure engineering feat nothing on earth approaches the remarkable Oroya Railway-on-End, in Peru. This road, which is a product of American science and ingenuity, having been constructed by Philadelphia contractors and engineers, runs between Lima, Peru, and one of the snowy peaks of the Andes. Meandering upward for some hundred miles, the lofty terminal is slightly over 16,000 feet above the sea level, being the highest point on earth where a piston rod has moved or a steam engine penetrated.

Elsewhere is pictured the famous Infiernillo Bridge and tunnel on the Oroya Road. This is one of the loftiest tunnels in existence, being more than a mile higher than the Simplon tunnel, and nearly twice the altitude of the rival St. Gothard and Mont Cenis tunnels. As with most of the wonderful railway feats of to-day, the Oroya Road was built at a stupendous cost of money and life. Owing to the poisonous fumes arising from the copperas abounding in the Andean valleys, between seventy and eighty lives were lost in building the Infiernillo Bridge alone.

But even more remote than this Peruvian railway is a road now in process of construction through the very heart of China. When this iron highway is completed by its American and Belgian builders, it will form a main artery of Central China in its growing commerce with the world. It is known as the Canton-Hangkow Railway, and it is destined to be one of the greatest railway systems in the world.

Eventually the road will form a link between Canton and Peking, the line as far west as Pat-Shan having been recently opened with great ceremony and festivity. The road is well but very lightly constructed, with moderately heavy rails, steel ties, and very fair ballast. At present the first-class passenger coaches are antiquated freight cars of American pattern, but the time is not far distant when one may board a Pullman coach at Canton and ride in comfort to Peking, 620 miles away. Belgian contractors are making rapid progress on the construction from the northern end of the line, as are American engineers from the southern, and it is estimated that the last spike will be driven within two years. As this railroad is under the patronage of the Chinese Government, with the American and Belgian engineers acting merely as administrators, its completion is assured, and its development will be anxiously watched by all who are interested in the opening of China.

DELEGATES FROM OKLOHOMA.

"TALKING about scenes in National Conventions," said Congressman McDermott of New Jersey, the other day, "I'll never forget the awful clamor of the delegation from Oklahoma to get chairs to sit on in the Democratic Convention at Chicago in 1864. They came from the shadows, away up among the caves of Convention Hall, a howling roar that could be heard above the din of the meeting place:

"'Mr. Chairman,' it could be heard articulating, 'the delegation from Oklahoma demand seats in this convention.'

"'The Sergeant at Arms will see that the delegation from Oklahoma are provided with seats,' directed the Chairman. But the Sergeant at Arms was slow in doing it, and repeatedly came that thunderous voice from the darkness, away over in one corner of the hall. And it held the convention up as often as it set up its howl, until the Chairman, tired of parleying with the invisible speaker, directed the delegation to step to the front to be counted—to see how many chairs were needed for them.

"There was a lull, while a broad yellow sombrero moved from the darkness into the daylight aloft and threaded its zigzag way down through the sweltering crush to the rail in front of the Chairman's platform. Then the voice was heard to announce, 'Mr. Chairman, the delegation from Oklahoma.'

"'The delegation from Oklahoma will stand to be counted for chairs, the Chairman ordered.

"Only the fine specimen of Western manhood under the sombrero stood.

"'The delegation will please stand,' the Chairman a second time ordered.

"'The delegation are standing, Sah!' roared the sombrero man. 'I am the delegation from Oklahoma, Sah!'

"The convention saw the humor of the thing and went into a convulsion of merriment."

MAKING MUFF BEDS.

THERE was a sign of "Muff Beds" in the window of the basement, and white sacks that had the look of pillow slips for medium-sized pillows hung within on two lines across the window panes.

Inside a man and a woman scantily clothed as possible because of the intensity of the heat sat at sewing machines, making the muff beds.

Back of a counter piled deep with muff beds stood another man. He explained that the muff beds were not beds for the muffs to sleep on, but the soft feathery foundations for the fur to be sewed on. Upon being asked why the work could not be postponed until cooler weather, he replied that their work was never postponed. They began making muff beds in January; he said, and kept straight on making them until the January following, unless some member of the firm died, and they had a holiday.

"This is the time we sell the muff beds, too," he continued. "It is upon the same principle that palmleaf fans are sold in January or sealskin sacks in July; or Christmas stories for the magazines in July, and Fourth of July stories in January. All goods are sold six months ahead of time, but we work all the time.

"One reason of this is that New York is the only city in the United States where muff beds are made. Also we supply muff beds to many another country.

"The muff beds are stuffed with various and sundry things that vary their cost. Some with tiny chicken feathers, some with rabbit hair, and some with down. The most expensive muff beds are stuffed with down.

"Yes. The muffs are to be rather large this Winter, but they are not quite the size of basket trunks yet."

New Anecdotes and Piquant Tales FROM A "Belle of the Fifties"

Mrs. Clay's Memoirs Replete with Interesting Stories of the Famous Men and Women of Ante-Bellum Days—When an Austrian Minister Found the Most Beautiful Woman in the World—How Two Women Saved the Life of Seward.

EXCELLENT reading and rich in anecdote is the book entitled "A Belle of the Fifties," issued yesterday. This book might well have for its sub-title, "Anecdotes of Our Century."

The book is memoirs of Mrs. Clement C. Clay of Alabama, edited by Miss Ada Sterling. Mrs. Clay (now Mrs. Clay-Clopton) is more than fourscore years of age. From the cradle Mrs. Clay has moved in circles legislative, and among events romantic and important.

There has been no prominent figure in the political arena, in army and navy circles, in social life of the past century whom she has not seen and known. In the stirring times of the fifties and early sixties she was the acknowledged belle of Washington.

"You must see Mrs. Clay," said Lord Napier, then Minister from Great Britain, to an English nobleman; "she is the most charming woman in America."

Senator Seward, on the occasion of the celebrated Guvim ball, at which Mrs. Clay impersonated Mrs. Partington, exclaimed on meeting her for the first time, to Senator Clay:

"Clay, she's superb!"

"Yes," replied Senator Clay, "when she married me America lost its Siddons!"

Mrs. Clay is whole-souled and generous in her praises of the many belles who were her contemporaries. She tells most delightful anecdotes of Mrs. Roger Pryor, Mrs. Burton Harrison, Mrs. Pugh, Mrs. Slidell, (mother of the present Baroness Erlanger of Paris,) of Adele Cutts, (Mrs. Stephen A. Douglas,) of Mrs. Jefferson Davis, of Mrs. Brockholst Cutting, (the beautiful Marion Ramsay,) of lovely Nellie Marcy, (Mrs. Gen. McClellan,) mother of the present Mayor of New York, and of many others of equal note and charm.

A Bit of Rare Lace.

Very fetching is the story of how the Austrian Minister, the Chevalier Hulsemen, presented the gift of his Empress to Miss Thérèse Chalfant, (Mrs. Senator Pugh of Ohio,) as Mrs. Clay relates it:

"It was at a ball at which pretty women thronged. As the Minister's gaze rested upon Miss Chalfont, his eyes expanded with admiration. Approaching, he knelt suddenly before her, exclaiming:

"'Madame, I have from my Empress a piece of precious lace'—and he fumbled, but, alas! vainly, in his pockets as he spoke—'which her Majesty has commanded me to present to the most beautiful woman in Washington. You—you are more, the most beautiful in the world! I have not with me the lace, but I will send it if you will permit me!' And he kept his word."

Quite as charming is the story of her own conquest of Chevalier Bertinatti, the Sardinian Minister. It was upon the occasion of a soirée at the house of Secretary Guthrie, "at which half the world was present." Mrs. Clay wore a gown of silk of the color of pomegranata blooms, the most gorgeous flowers of our Southland; her headdress was Sardinian, a gift sent across by a Consular friend.

"Seeing me at some distance," I quote from the text, "the Chevalier failed to recognize me and asked of the hostesses, with whom he was conversing, 'Who is zat lady wis my Kontree woman's ornaments?'

"Upon learning my identity he came forward quickly and, gazing admiringly at me, he threw himself on his knee before me, (kissing my hand as he did so, with ardent gallantry,) as he exclaimed:

"'Madame, you are charming wis zat headdress like my kontree women! Madame, I assure you, you have conquest me behind and now you conquest me before!' and he bowed profoundly."

M. Bertinatti married Mrs. Boss of Mississippi, whose daughter became the Marquise Incisa di Camerana.

Apropos of anecdotes concerning Ambassadors, there are many pleasing ones of Lord and Lady Napier, not the least being that of a toast of Lord Napier to a great American.

Lord Napier's Toast.

"At the home of the Napiers (this was in Washington) one frequently met Mr. Bayard, between whom and the English Ambassador there existed a close intimacy. When I visited England in 1885 I had a signal testimony to Lord Napier's long-continued regard for the great Delaware statesman. During my stay in London the former Minister constituted himself cicerone to our party, and upon one memorable afternoon he insisted upon drinking a toast with us.

"'Oh, no,' I demurred. 'Toasts are obsolete.'

"'Very well, then,' Lord Napier declared. 'If you won't, I will. Here's to your President, Mr. Cleveland. But,' he continued, with a suddenly added depth of feeling, 'were it your Chevalier Bayard I would drink it on my knee.'

"Upon my return to America I had the pleasure of shouting to Mr. Bayard, then Secretary of State, a recital of this great tribute. He had grown very deaf, but my words reached him at last, and he smiled in a most happy way as he asked, almost shyly, but with a warm glance in the eye despite his effort to remain composed, 'Did Napier really say that?'"

Lord Lyons succeeded Lord Napier. Mrs. Clay gives a spirited account of the first Senatorial dinner given by this much-talked-of Minister who arrived on his "personally chartered vessel," which had brought his entire wonderful—for that day—menage across, even to "growing plants for his conservatory."

"Presently the massive doors slid apart, and a voice proclaimed 'Dinner, my Lord!' Now my consternation gave way to overwhelming surprise. Once at the table I quickly regained my composure. Lord Lyons's manner was so unconstrained and easy that I soon became emboldened to the point of suggesting to him the possibility of some lovely American consenting to become 'Lyonized.' His Lordship's prompt rejoinder and quizzical look quite amused me and brought me swiftly to the conclusion that I would best let this old lion alone, for he said: 'Ah, Madam, do you remember what Uncle Toby said to his nephew when he informed him of his intended marriage? "Alas! alas!" quoth my Uncle Toby, "you will never sleep slantindicularly in your bed more!"'"

There is no note in pleasure's gamut that is not struck in this volume of wit and worth. Mrs. Clay tells of the artists of the day as they then appeared, of Jenny Lind, the "incomparable Swede, whose concerts at Castle Garden where such epoch-marking events to music lovers in America"; of Grisi, of Mario, of Bozio, of Parepa Rosa, and of Forrest. Delicious is the account of Gottschalk's concert and Congressman Dowdell's comments upon the young creole's music: "He hopped up on the black keys and then down on the white ones. He played mighty pretty, but he didn't play nary a tchune!" At the after-the-opera supper of the Riggs (notable entertainers of Washington) in honor of the girl prima donna, Adelina Patti, then "a lovely little maiden in evening dress, with a manner as winsome as was her appearance," Baron de Staeckl, the Russian Minister, played buffo of the evening, much to the amusement of the young diva, who, standing on a chair, joined in the impromptu singing.

Mrs. Clay writes charmingly of the appearance of Mrs. Gilbert, of Charlotte Cushman. Of Thackeray's lectures she writes thus:

"Mr. Thackeray's lecture on poetry was red-letter occasion, and the simplicity of that great man of letters as he recited 'Lord Lovell' and 'Barbara Allen' was long afterward a criterion by which others were judged."

Anecdotes of Presidents and ex-Presidents abound in the pages of this book. Justin McCarthy has been censured for his innumerable inane stories of the great; that censure cannot be passed upon Mrs. Clay. To interest her the people of whom she chooses to write must be interesting in themselves. She relates with as much gusto the story of her exchange of a bit of French millinery for a pink sunbonnet with a farmer's daughter (a story historic in the annals of Alabama's campaigning history) as she does of the visit of the President (Pierce) to her husband, "primarily to discuss an affair of National moment which was to be brought before the Senate the next day."

Of Mr. Pierce's message of '55 Mrs. Clay writes: "Bold and dauntless where a principle was involved, Mr. Pierce's message of '55 fell like a bombshell on the Black Republican Party. Its bold pro-slaveryism startled even his friends for never had a predecessor while in the Executive chair talked so strongly or so harshly to sectionalists and fanatics. To this stand, so bravely taken, his defeat at the next Presidential election was, doubtless, at least partially attributable." Among the many stories of the brilliant Buchanan's Administration are several very interesting ones concerning the President himself.

Of ex-President Tyler's grief at the futility of the Peace Commission we have the following: "One incident that followed the dissolution of that body impressed itself ineradicably upon my mind. Just after its close ex-President Tyler came to our home. He was now an old man and very attenuated. He was completely undone at the failure of the peace men, and tears trickled down his cheeks as he said to Senator Clay with indescribable sadness: "Clay, the end has come.'"

An anecdote of Secretary William L. Marcy, grandfather of Mayor McClellan, makes one wonder if the Mayor inherits, as doubtless he does, "the unusual poise and uniform complacency" of his ancestor, which, we are told, was "a source of envy to his friends as of confusion to his enemies." Anent these truly enviable qualities, Senator Clay told the following story:

"Some one as curious as I once asked the Secretary how he preserved his unvarying calmness.

"'Well,' he answered, confidentially, 'I'll tell you. I have given my Secretary orders that whenever he sees an article eulogistic of me, praising my astuteness, my far-seeing diplomacy, my incomparable statesmanship, &c., he is to cut it out and place it conspicuously on my desk where I can see it first thing in the morning; everything to the contrary he is to cut out and up and consign to the waste basket. By this means, hearing nothing but good of myself, I have come naturally to regard myself as a pretty good fellow! Who wouldn't be serene under such circumstances?'"

Henry Watterson's Boyhood.

Of one of the giants of our time Mrs. Clay gives this interesting sketch:

"Though not members of our resident circle, my memories of dear old Brown's would scarcely be complete without a mention of little Henry Watterson, with whose parents our 'mess' continually exchanged visits for years. Henry, their only child, was then an invalid, debarred from the usual recreations of other boys, by weak eyes that made the light unbearable, and reading all but impossible; yet at fifteen the boy was a born politician, and eager for every item of news from the Senate or House. 'What bills were introduced to-day? Who spoke? Please tell me what took place to-day?' were among the questions (in substance) with which the lad was wont to greet the ladies of our 'mess' when he knew them to be returning from a few hours spent in the Senate gallery; and, though none foresaw the later distinction which awaited the invalid boy, no one of us was ever so hurried and impatient that she could not and did not take time to answer his earnest inquiries."

As a companion portrait, I give a glimpse of another giant of journalism in youth. It was at the farewell ball given by the Napiers on the verge of their return to England.

"One group of that great assemblage is vividly before me. In it the young James Gordon Bennett, whom I had seen in earlier days at a fashionable water-cure (and whose general naughtiness as a little boy defies description by my feeble pen), danced vis-a-vis, a handsome, courtly youth, with his mother, and Daniel E. Sickles."

A gleaner in these rich fields becomes tempted to garner in more than did even Ruth the Moabite of treasure so tempting is the wealth therein. How inimitable the picture of Gen. Sam Houston, a unique figure in Senate and society, how splendid the portrait of Benton, whose "Thirty Years in the United States Senate" his daughter, Mrs. Fremont, called the "Political Bible of America."

"Mr. Benton's appearance and the slow gait of his horse impressed me as powerful and even majestic, and often (as I remarked to him at dinner one evening) there flashed through my mind, as I saw him, a remembrance of Byron's Moorish King as he rode benignly through the streets of Granada."

How Gen. George Wallace Jones comes to life at the touch of this creative pen, that Gen. Jones who laid out "I never knew how many of the Western States."

"In society he was as sprightly as a kitten, and at seventy-five would poke his glistening black head at me, declaring as he did so, 'I'll give you anything you ask, from a horse to a kiss, if you can find one gray hair among the black!'"

The Saving of Seward.

A letter from him when ninety years old to Mrs. Clay will show somewhat of the reckless spirit that actuated him:

"I told several times of how you and dear Mrs. Bouligny prevented me from killing Seward. It was the day you stopped me, as you sat in your carriage in front of Corcoran and Riggs's bank, and I was about to pass you. I would certainly have killed Seward with my sword-cane but that you stopped me. I was about to follow the Secretary as he passed the bank door, between his son Frederick and some other man. I would have run my sword through him and immediately have been cut into mince meat by the hundreds of negro guards who stood all around. Do you recollect that fearful incident? God sent two guardian angels to save my life. How can I feel otherwise than grateful to you for saving me that day?"

To pass over the recital of the triumphs of a certain ball and other social events which read like bits of National history as well as gay portraiture of society folk and ways of a past period, we come to Mrs. Clay's thrilling account of the withdrawal of the Southern Senators. Of the utter incapacity of even the great minds of the time to realize into what a vortex of death and disaster our Nation was plunging, we quote:

"I have often mused upon the impression held by the younger generation of those who were adverse to the South that she was prepared for the war. Personally I knew of but one man whose ferocity led him to collect and secrete weapons of warfare. He was Edmund Ruffin of Virginia, with whom I entered into collusion. For months my parlor was made an arsenal for the storing of a dozen lengthy spears. They were handsome weapons, made, I suspect, for some decorative purpose; but I never knew their origin nor learned of their destination. On them were engraved these revolutionary words: 'Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck the flower of safety.'"

Directly after the exodus of Southern folk from Washington a letter from the wife of Col. Philip Phillips to Mrs. Clay gives an account of the distracted Washington of that day:

"You would not know this God-forsaken city, our beautiful capital, with all its artistic wealth degecrated, disgraced with Lincoln's low soldiery. The respectable part [of the soldiers] view it also in the same spirit, for one of the Seventh Regiment told me that never in his life had he seen such ruin going on as is now enacted in the halls of our once honored capital! There are 30,000 troops here. They go about the avenue insulting women and taking property without paying for it. I was told that those giant intellects, the Blairs, who are acting under the idea of being second Jacksons, wishing to get a good officer to do some of their dirty work, (destroying public property,) wished Col. Lee sent for. 'Why, he has resigned!' 'Then tell Magruder!' 'He has resigned, too.' 'Gen. Joe Johnston, then!' 'He, too, has gone out!' 'Smith Lee!' 'Ditto!' 'Good God!' said Blair, 'have all our good officers left us?'"

The words of a fellow-traveler with Mrs. Clay in these strenuous times puts forcefully the division of the day: "'Ah, Mrs. Clay! think how my heart is riven. I was born in New Orleans and live in New York. One of my sons is in the Seventh New York Regiment and another in the New Orleans Zouaves!'"

Days are never gayer than before great disaster, all history goes to prove; this is the account of Richmond as our Confederate capital:

Gay Life in Richmond.

"For a few months we reveled in canvas-backs and greenbacks, undisturbed by forewarnings of coming drawbacks. To furnish the tables of Richmond nearly all the ducks in Chesapeake Bay fell victims. We feasted on oysters and terrapin of the finest, and unmeasured hospitality was the order of the day on every side. Never had I looked upon so great an activity, whether military, political, or social."

The starving days of Richmond were not far distant. Some amusing accounts of incidents that occur on the most serious occasions are told with great sprightliness.

"During Gen. Mitchell's investment of Huntsville he was accompanied by his daughters, who, in the ransacking of our home, fell heiresses to certain coveted and 'confiscated' articles of my own, but the possession of which could scarcely have been an unmixed pleasure. I heard of my losses first through a letter written late in August. Mr. Hammond says in Atlanta he saw a lady just from Nashville who told him that Miss Mitchell rode out in your green habit on your mare!'

"Months afterward I heard (and any who asks may still hear the story in the town, for it has become one of Huntsville's wartime annals) an account of Miss Mitchell's outings in my now celebrated green habit. Her path, it seems, as she trotted my pretty mare about the streets, was not strewn with roses; for, though absent from our beloved little city, I was not forgotten. One day the horsewoman, passing proudly on her way, saw, looking over the garden gate of a pretty cottage, the laughing face of sweet Alice Spence. Alice looked up at the passing apparition, and, full of daring, half mischievously, half indignantly, cried out after it: 'Hey! Git off 'Ginie Clay's mare! Git off 'Ginie Clay's mare!'"

But the little Southern girl paid dearly for her fun, for "That afternoon her brother was ordered into arrest, and for months thereafter was kept in custody as a guarantee for his sister's good behavior!"

Tales of Trying Days.

Through the trying days when realization came that we were fighting for a cause already lost Mrs. Clay carries us. She tells of Mr. Yancy's return from England: "The people in England, he declared, were for, but Parliament opposed us; his mission, therefore, had been fruitless." Later Mr. Lamar, sent on a like fruitless mission to Russia, returned. Still later Mr. Clay was sent on his fruitless mission to Canada. On his return from this mission on the blockade runner The Rattlesnake, the little vessel was wrecked four miles from Fort Moultrie. Despite the fact that the enemy's guns fired the timbers of the boat, and that the lifeboats also ran aground, the passengers were saved, and Mr. Clay, rejoining his wife at the hospitable home in Georgia where he was a "refugee," was saved for greater suffering and worse trials.

The Death of Lincoln.

But shortly after Mr. Clay's return to America came the news of the death of Lincoln. "God help us! If that be true, it is the worst blow that yet has been struck at the South!" was Mr. Clay's exclamation when the report reached him. But a little later he was to read the proclamation offering $100,000 for the apprehension of C. C. Clay of Alabama! The story of Mr. Clay's voluntary surrender to Major Gen. Wilson, of his long captivity in Fortress Monroe awaiting a trial earnestly requested, but never granted, is a part of our history. The re-reading of it in this volume will throw new light upon events, men, and measures of the days immediately following the close of our civil war.

Mrs. Clay's description of the happy life of the negroes on the model plantation of Senator Hammond, Redcliffe, recalls the fact that over all the Southern States, except in rare instances, the race was happy and well cared for. The system of industrial education was well-nigh perfected. Every plantation was an industrial school, with master and mistress for its working principals, and sons and daughters of the house for assistants. "The conversion of the negroes under their own spiritual guides was a blood-curdling process in those days, for they screamed to Heaven as if the Indians with their tomahawks were after them, or danced, twisting their bodies in most remarkable manner. As their motion increased, as they 'got feelin',' and the moment of conversion approached, as a rule they fell all in a heap, though in thus 'coming through' the wenches were altogether likely to fall into the arms of the best-looking young brother who happened to be near. By reason of Senator Hammond's wise discipline such religious excesses were impossible at Redcliffe." Just such, and other things more startling, may be seen in any negro church on Black Belt plantations to-day. With the monologue of an old darky who had waited long and vainly for the "forty acres and a mule" to be given him by the Government we will close the book for the nonce:

"What's de reason," asked an old darky of me during reconstruction days, "dat de Yankees can't make linsey-woolsey like ole mistis did in de ole time? 'N dose days one par breeches las' me mos' a year! I could cut trees, roll logs, burn bresh heaps, an' cut briers an' I couldn't wear dem breeches out! Now when I buys dis shoddy stuff de Yankees done bro't an' sets down on de log to eat ma grub, bress Gaud! when I gits up I leaves de seat o' my breeches on de log! I done got down on my knees an' prayed for God ter send me linsey-woolsey clothes so I won't have rheumatis, an' ain't none come. Where's dat mule an' forty acres? When is dey a comin'? Dat's what I wants ter know!"

A Dramatist Without a Country

Arthur Wing Pinero—The Personality and the Methods of the Master of the Modern English Stage.

WIDELY different as were the impressions of those who wrote of the first performance of Pinero's "Letty" last Monday at the Hudson, there was as to the main features of the occasion a remarkable uniformity. No one failed to recognize in many details of the play a certain obviousness of theatrical technique; no one failed to feel that in the main it was the work of a master technician. All were offended at times by the shallowness, even falsity, of the character drawing; and all recognized at the heart of it all a deep and abiding sense of reality that gripped the attention at the outset and held it through almost four hours of slow and quiet movement. There was no one who did not grant the author primacy among modern English playwrights, and no one who evinced for him any warmly colored enthusiasm. Personally I have known only four people who could be rightly called Pinero enthusiasts. Two of them were lifelong critics of the contemporary drama, and two were theatrical press agents. I do not mean to impugn the honesty, even disinterestedness, of these latter two gentlemen—only to suggest that they belong to a class among whom enthusiasm is not difficult.

The secret of Pinero's limitations and his mastery, of his engrossing interest and his lack of spontaneous appeal? Largely, no doubt, it is a matter of the personal temperament of the author; but this temperament, one is more and more inclined to believe, is directly traceable to his racial inheritance. The ablest of the English playwrights, Pinero seems to me the most un-English.

Mr. Malcolm C. Salaman, Mr. Pinero's intimate friend and the editor of the published plays, in an article in Cassell's Magazine, (Vol. XXVIII.,) lays especial emphasis on this matter of ancestry. "The qualities that go to make the force and beauty of his character and his mind, Mr. Pinero no doubt inherits in a large measure from his Jewish ancestors." The Pinheiros came to England from Portugal early in the eighteenth century. The playwright's grandfather, it is true, married into the Wing family, "and so gave him for ancestor one of Nelson's Trafalgar heroes, immortalized in West's famous painting," from whom Arthur Wing Pinero derives his middle name; but the infusion of English blood does not appear to be strong. Pinero's own physiognomy, though lacking the more obvious racial characteristics, shows the keen eye, the thin, aquiline nose, the sensitive, large mouth, and the pointed, poetic chin that signalize the finer and more spiritual traits of his gifted race. A line portrait of his father, which he made when a boy, shows the same features slightly caricatured. An oil painting of his grandfather exhibits them in a purer form. It is one of the happiest epigrams of the late Mr. Godkin that every nation deserves the kind of Jews it has. The tolerant good sense of the Briton is nowhere more evident than in the hospitality he has extended to the race which weaker and narrower nations have persecuted and antagonized—to their own misfortune. Mr. Salaman, it is true, lays especial emphasis on the Anglo-Saxon element in Pinero's character. He calls him a thorough Englishman, dwells on his fondness for racing and for cricket—Pinero has wielded the bat himself at Lord's—and even points to the scrupulous formality and correctness of his clothes, styling him one of the best-dressed men in England. But is it not a racial characteristic to be imitative in such matters? Certainly the knowledge of stables and of horseflesh exhibited in such plays as "The Hobby Horse" and "Lady Bountiful" do not go beyond what is possible in any able and adaptable playwright, being very different, for example, from the evidences of Shakespeare's fondness for the stable. One somehow suspects that the advocate doth protest too much.

More intimately personal, though still in a measure ancestral, are Pinero's scrupulous formality and devotion to detail. Literary man though he is, there is no "littery disorder" on his writing table or in his study. A book or a paper out of place is a positive pain. His manuscripts, written in his own fine and correct penmanship, are monumental in formal correctness, and not the least so in the few interlineations. Even his hats, trousers, and boots, of which he has ample store, are classified and numbered on his shelves. Precision and order are clearly as much a part of his temperament—even more so—than artistic abandon. Particularly characteristic—and quaintly suggestive of the prevailing feminism of his temperament—is the fact that he writes more at ease when his cat is curled up before the study fire.

Pinero's career as a playwright and the leader in the renaissance of the modern English drama evidences another strongly racial trait, which Mr. Salaman characterizes as astuteness in affairs and the instinct for striking the psychological moment. For a man of his refinement and abhorrence of cant it is no easy undertaking to gain the mastery of the stolid and conventional British public, and to do it he has been obliged to be at times less than true to himself. He has led by following, and asserted the mind of the master by an eclectic assimilation of whatever material came to his hand. Gilbert was Gilbertian in the egg. In Henry Arthur Jones one recognizes from the first beginnings in popular melodrama the robustness and the fire of the cockney Welshman. Barrie's humor from the outset is at once cannily Scotch and absurd in the English manner. Henry V. Esmond's wit and delineation of character have always had the strain of Esmond sentimentality, and R. C. Carton has never appeared without his sprightly and racy smartness. In Pinero one feels the opportunist experimenting impersonally with conventionally popular material. In "The Weaker Sex" he evinces, feminist though he is at heart, the prevailing spirit of the British intolerance of the new woman, and though this is modified by the half-remembered example in satin of Moliere's "Precieuses ridicules" and "Femmes savantes," the fact only emphasizes Pinero's lack of satirical sincerity. "The Magistrate" is a half-acclimatized French farce of adventurous intrigue, "The Hobby Horse" a rather conventional, if spirited, bid for the patronage of the sporting public. All of these plays show the master of conventional stagecraft and have been popular. None of them has that revelation of individual mood which alone rouses and sustains critical enthusiasm.

Quite in keeping with this formal eclecticism is the prevailing lack of spontaneity in Pinero's dialogue and characterization. There was a time, some years back, when we all commended this racy vernacular quality. It was not at first evident that his neatness and brilliancy are also consciously and somewhat coldly studied. Younger and less considerable playwrights have since given us a sense of differences. When "Letty" was produced in England the scrupulous formalism, even artificiality, of much of the talk impinged on Max Beerbohm's sense of the absurd, and moved him to caricature it, a little unfairly, in The Saturday Review. "Letty" abounds in modern slang, even to such expressions as "keep off the grass," in a connotation reminding one that all flesh is grass. But here are a few phrases, jotted down on last Monday's programme, which remind one of the meticulous order of Mr. Pinero's writing table, the card catalogue of his bats and trousers, even of the Pinerotic cat, purring at the study fire. When Letty is tired she says and repeats that she is "fatigued." When she finds that Letchmere has a wife, she not unnaturally wants to know why he never told her, and repeats again and again, "Why didn't you mention it?" When one of her friends—a bucket-shop typewriter—is asking her to be just and say that she is only warning Letty of her danger, she exclaims: "Do me the justice to perceive that I am urging you to protect yourself against the snares that beset your path." In the scene on Letty's lodging house roof there is as much sentimental phrasing in memory of Arcadia"—the cockney Arcadia of Earl's Court and Kensington Gardens—that one exasperated hearer abjured them both to come off the roof. There was a lot of similar verbiage in "Iris" about "our divinity"; and this sort of thing increases the further back one goes in the list of Pinero's plays. "The Profligate," which was welcomed as epoch-making, is full of the most stereotyped fine writing. Last year Forbes Robertson, who took a leading part in the first production, was thinking of reviving the play; but was disheartened by finding, on reading it again, how outmoded it has already become. One phrase in "Letty" gives us Mr. Pinero's cue. When Letchmere tells his sister that Letty is "straight," he apologizes for using the common phrase by saying that he is only "employing the vernacular." The crispness of his dialogue is always an employment of the vernacular.

It is much the same with a great deal of Pinero's character drawing, in the earlier plays especially. In "Lady Bountiful" Roderick, whose grotesquely imagined Dickensonian selfishness is the mainspring of the plot, is constantly trade-marked in the Dickensonian fashion, with talk about his "sympathies" and "loosening his purse strings." As for the notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith, we have the authority of that hardened cart-tail orator, George Bernard Shaw, for the assertion that she is pure fake, having nothing in common with the revolting woman of real life. Even in his later and most austerely truthful manner, many minor characters are conventionally false. There is scarcely a trace of observation in the crew of Letty's associates. Traveling salesman, insurance agent, and photographer are antique types of the stage, and the passage in which they in turn attempt to do business with their host at supper the most patent playing for a laugh. When the play was produced in London the papers were filled with the protests of good people who were hurt at having their kind gratuitously belied, and also with a more pertinent discussion of why the English stage has no place for a truthful representation of middle-class life.

Sometimes this bowing to the conventions of the theatre vitiates a play as a whole. No doubt it was more pleasing to the romantic public to make Trelawny of the Wells marry her aristocratic lover, young Gower; but it may be doubted whether the "ending" of her story would have been more truly "happy" if she had justly esteemed the lover who was of her own station in life, and her mate in talent—the playwright Tom Wrench. Certainly such a denouement would have saved the flatness of the last act of the play as it was written. The climax of "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith" was too flagrantly meretricious even for the dear public. Here was a woman whose whole life had been a negation of the established laws of God and man, and who, in a crisis of her revolt, had cast a Bible into the porcelain stove of her irregular lodgings in Venice. Then came a revulsion of feeling, which she melodramatically signalized by snatching the Book from the burning—and one was asked to believe that she lived a humbled and conventional female ever after. The subject of the revolted woman happened at that time to be uppermost in men's minds, and therefore attractive to the playwright. A sincere and truthful treatment of it, whatever the outcome, would have been of vital interest. But from such a bit of claptrap as that matter of the porcelain stove and the Bible Mr. Pinero's sense of humor ought to have saved him, to say nothing of artistic sincerity!

Is it fantastic to suppose that the manifold shortcomings of so clever and adaptable a man are traceable to the fact that he is working for a stage and for a people with whom he has only a superficial and acquired sympathy? If so, it is difficult to account for the fact that the qualities which have made him so profound and powerful an artist—perhaps the greatest the stage has known since Goldsmith and Sheridan—are equally alien to his environment. But that is the subject for another article.

THE MECKLENBURG CROWN PRINCESSES

Duchess Cecile's Engagement to German Crown Prince Brings Schwerin Branch Again to the Front—Some Aspirations and Disappointments.

With the engagement of the German Crown Prince, Friedrich Wilhelm of Prussia, to Duchess Cecilie Auguste Marie, the Schwerin branch of the Mecklenburgs appears again in the front rank of the list of Crown Princesses—an event which has not happened for sixty-seven years.

Louis Philippe, King of the French, had barely established himself on the throne of St. Louis when he sought wives for his five grown-up sons and husbands for his two marriagable daughters to strengthen his position among the legitimate sovereigns "by the grace of God." The great Courts of Europe, however, were not anxious to tie matrimonial knots with the grandchildren of the notorious "Egalité" and the children of the "Citizen King, by the wish of the people."

Guizot suggested alliances with minor Courts, which were less prejudiced and more blessed with dowerless offspring. For Ferdinand, Duke d'Orléans, and successor to the throne, a German "Dornröschen" was discovered in Duchess Helene, half-sister of the reigning Grand Duke Paul Friedrich of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who with her widowed mother lived quietly at Ludwigslust. The offer was accepted by the head of the house. Duchess Helene, in accordance with the tradition, humbly submitted to be sacrificed like the Austrian Marie Antoinette, though she made the condition that she be allowed to remain a Lutheran.

Louis Philippe, who was then at odds with the Vatican, which supported ex-King Charles X. and the claims of the future Comte de Chambord, had no objection, so long as the children, yet to be born, would be brought up in the Catholic faith.

Duchess Helene, having been educated like the other young Princesses of that period by a French governess of noble family, who had emigrated during the Revolution, spoke the language of her adopted country as well if not better than her mother tongue; she had a graceful figure and a handsome face—nothing "gauche" about her. Infinite tact and an unusual adaptability made it easy for her to discard old associations and familiarize herself with new ones.

No Throne for Her.

The marriage of the young couple took place in May, 1837. A year after the Count of Paris was born. In 1840 the Duke of Martres followed. The King and Queen Amélie liked their daughter-in-law, who proved to be a faithful wife and devoted mother; her husband, however, being too much of a vivaur, did not appreciate the domestic qualities of his young spouse. A carriage accident ended his life prematurely in 1842, and with it all aspirations of Duchess Helene of ever reaching the throne.

The March days of 1848 drove Louis Philippe across the Channel; before he left France he had the widowed Duchess d'Orléans appointed Regent during the minority of the Count of Paris. Notwithstanding that the fight in the streets of Paris was fierce, the Duchess with her two little boys tried to save the throne by rushing to the French Chambers to be sworn in as Regent. It was too late, the Second Republic had already been established, and the Duchess was obliged to go with her small family into exile.

A Heroic Mother.

The Parisians, however, waxed enthusiastic over the heroic action of the young mother fighting for the rights of her boy, calling her "The only man in a family of cowards." In 1858, at an age of barely forty-four, the Mecklenburg Crown Princess of the French passed away in England, much beloved and much bemoaned.

At the time when young Helene was preparing her departure for la belle France, a cousin of hers, Duchess Caroline, was living quietly in Schwerin, having secured a divorce after a few months of stormy matrimonial experience from the Crown Prince of Denmark, later known as Friedrich VII., the last Danish King of the older branch of the Holstein-Oldenburgs. The former Crown Princess Caroline, having renounced all her royal rank and privileges, emphatically declining to share her husband's favors with the Milliner Rasmussen, who afterward was morganatically married to the King and ennobled as Countess Danner.

Duchess Cecilie's Youth.

Although born in the residence Schwerin, Duchess Cecilie Auguste Marie, the fiancée of the German Crown Prince, spent but little of her early youth at her home on the Baltic Sea; her grandfather, Grand Duke Friedrich Franz III., being a confirmed invalid, was obliged to live in the south. He took up his abode at Cannes, on the French Riviera, where he built the famous villa Wenden. The grand ducal parents were an ill-mated couple at best, and stormy scenes were frequent, the Grand Duchess, a Russian Princess, having inherited too many of the Muscovite eccentricities of her ancestress, Czarina Catharine II., best known under the name of the Northern Messalina.

In 1897 even the hardened habitués of the Riviera were shocked by the tragical death of the poor, unfortunate Grand Duke, who in a moment of despondency threw himself out of the window of villa Wenden.

Duchess Cecilie is a vivacious little blonde, with a Dresden china figure, brown-eyed and of healthy complexion, with a sunny disposition; she is an excellent linguist and fond of sport, but not the least bit loving her native land far better than the Riviera, with its many queer and exotic personalities.

Happy Alliances.

Alliances between the Hohenzollerns and the Mecklenburgs have always been unusually happy; old Emperor William I.'s favored sister, Alexandrine, being the great-grandmother of Duchess Cecilie, having married Grand Duke Paul Friedrich, while the Emperor's mother, Queen Luise, who is still worshipped like a saint, was a Mecklenburg of the Strelitz branch.

Six years ago Duchess Cecilie's elder sister, Alexandrine, gave her heart and hand to Prince Christian, oldest grandson in direct line of succession to King Christian IX. of Denmark, the so-called "grandfather of reigning Europe." In the natural course of events the husband of Princess Alexandrine is bound to become Crown Prince of Denmark.

[illegible] the Crown Princess of Denmark, [illegible] man and Danish Crown Princess than it was to Helene, Crown Princess of the French, and to Caroline of Mecklenburg?

The Strelitz Branch.

Princesses of the Strelitz branch of the Mecklenburgs have been more fortunate—three of them ascending to the throne.

Sophie Charlotte was George III.'s Queen and a mother of numerous crowned children. Beautiful Luise was married to King Friedrich Wilhelm III. of Prussia, and her sister, Frederike, became first Queen of Hanover by marrying her cousin, Ernst August, youngest son of King George III. Duchess Yutia ("Méiltsa" since she took the orthodox faith) married to Danilo, hereditary Prince of Montenegro, has more than a fair chance to be numbered among the Crown Princesses, reigning Prince Nicolas having aspirations to have his little Black Mountain principality metamorphosed into a kingdom dei gratia.

DINNER WITH BACHELOR GIRLS.

"WHEN I was invited to an informal little 'home' dinner with a bachelor girl, the other night," said Halfback, "I was distressed with visions of a cozy-corner crush, canned stuff with the mantelpiece as a sideboard, or something half-cold sent in from a restaurant outside. I despise 'home' dinners. But I went; and incidentally had an opportunity to change my views materially on the life of the New York bachelor girl.

"There were two young women and three young men in her apartment when I arrived. They were all nice, jolly people. I wondered where dinner was to be served. But as they did not seem to be worrying, I did'nt. In a few moments we were summoned by a neat maid. The dinner was served in an apartment across the hall from the one occupied by my friend. It was delicious. I was struck by the utter absence of personal gossip. We talked of the newest books and the plays promised for the coming season.

"My bachelor girl is an artist. I learned, during the dinner, that the other young women occupied apartments in the same suite. One of them is bookkeeper for a commercial agency. The other is a teacher on the violin. After dinner we went into still another apartment and had music. My friend has a strong, well-cultured voice and the bookkeeper is a creditable pianist. I was so agreeably impressed with the success of the dinner that I asked my friend to explain how it was managed.

"'Simple enough,' she replied. 'We live on the co-operative plan. Miss Stubbs, the bookkeeper, is our Treasurer. We hand her so much money on each Saturday, and she turns in an account at the end of the month. As I am fond of marketing, I wander out with a basket each morning before going to the studio. As the violin teacher gives some of her lessons here, she is in the house most of the time, and looks after it. She also attends to all the sewing. The maid cooks and does general work, sleeping at home.

"'We breakfast and dine together, but take luncheon out. Every Sunday we give a dinner in one or the other of our apartments, each of us taking turn, but all combining in the expense. It enables us to pay off little social obligations to young men who take us to the theatre occasionally and to feel more independent. The extension dining table is kept in the kitchen when not in use. When it is wanted in one of the apartments we have to remove a lot of cozy-corner stuff to other apartments to make room.

"'But girls have a way of overcoming such trifles. In the evening we visit bachelor girls in other apartment houses and in turn receive visits from them. We are never dull. To sum up, it costs each of us less than it would to pay for one comfortable room in a good boarding house.'"

DISINTERESTED CRITICISM.

WHEN the coat was brought home from the dressmaker's the woman declared that the sleeves were too long. Friends, however, through that sense of kindness which impels us to tell so many lies about the fit of other people's clothes, insisted that they were "just right." Finally, with all those fibs to offset her own judgment, the woman persuaded herself that, even though the sleeves did feel so, they might not be too long to look well, and she wore them with tolerable comfort.

Wednesday afternoon the fallacy with which she had deluded herself was dealt a shattering blow. When passing a news stand in City Hall Park the youthful proprietor thereof made a dash at her with half a dozen evening papers, which he earnestly entreated her to buy. Not being then interested in the latest news, the woman brushed by heedless of his importunities. That aroused the boy's ire.

"Say," he called out, revengefully, "your sleeves is too long. You'd better run a tuck in 'em."

And the first thing the woman did when she got home was to take his advice.

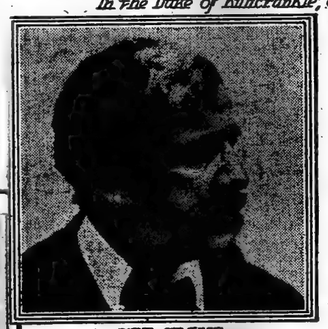
In "The College Widow" Opening at the Garden, Tuesday



W.H. CRANE
In "Business is Business," at the Criterion To-morrow

GEORGE ADE has put college life on the stage, and New York will see it Tuesday night at the Garden Theatre. "The College Widow" it is called; it deals with the foibles of life at an inland "institution of learning"; it is described as a satire. Henry W. Savage is the producing manager. The first presentation of the new comedy will be the beginning of his sway over the Garden Theatre.

Dorothy Tennant will play the rôle of the widow through whose wiles Atwater College succeeds in obtaining a star halfback. Billy Bolton's father wants his son to go to Bingham College, but, alas, for the paternal plan! the father and son stop over at Atwater on the way to Bingham, and Hiram meets the widow. It is all up then—Billy stays. The elder Bolton departs for Europe.

In the third act the scene is laid on the football field. Atwater is playing against Bingham. Millionaire Bolton happens to enter during the games. Learning that his son is playing against Bingham he threatens to take him out of the game. The students kidnap the old man and keep him out of the way until the game is over. But when he and his son meet the old man confronts the half back with the truth—that the "college widow" has cajoled him into staying to play on the Atwater team. Billy is indignant until the widow tells him that what began as a flirtation had ripened into love. He proposes, she accepts, and the millionaire forgives. The cast:

Billy Bolton, half back	Frederick Truesdale
Peter Witherspoon, A. M., Ph. D., President of Atwater College	George E. Bryant
Hiram Bolton, President of the K. & H. Road	Edwin Holt
"Matty" McGowan, a trainer	Dan Collyer
Hon. Elam Hicks of Squantumville	Stephen Maley
"Bub" Hicks, a freshman	Frederick Burton
Jack Larrabee, the football coach	Edgar L. Davenport
Copernicus Talbot, a post-graduate tutor	J. Beresford Hollis
"Silent" Murphy, centre rush	Thomas Delmar
"Stub" Tallmadge, a busy undergraduate	Morgon Coman
Tom Pearson, right tackle	Robert Mackay
The Town Marshal	E. Y. Backus
Ollie Mitchell, Dick McAllister, Jimsey Hopper, Students.	Douglas J. Wood, George F. Demarest, John H. Chapman
Jane Witherspoon, the college widow	Dorothy Tennant
Bessie Tanner, an athletic girl	Amy Ricard
Flora Wiggins, a prominent waitress	Gertrude Quinlan
Mrs. Primley Dalzelle, a professional chaperon	Lida McMillan
Luella Chubbs, Bertha Tyson, Sally Cameron, Town Girls.	Mary Macgregor, Lucy Cabeen, Georgia Cross
Josephine Barclay	Grace Quackenbush

When William H. Crane appears at the Criterion Theatre to-morrow night it will be in "Business Is Business," an adaptation of the French drama, "Les Affaires Sont les Affaires," by Octave Mirabeau. This will be its first performance in the English language.

In his character of Isidore Lechat Mr. Crane is supposed to typify the new force which is making itself felt in France. He is the possessor of a great fortune—50,000,000 francs. Utterly unscrupulous, and a slave to the desire to amass more money, Lechat has gone his way, sweeping all before him. His wife is a simple creature who thinks he is a god. His son is the regulation rich man's son—leads a fast life, piles up debts, and "draws on the old man." But his daughter is different. She knows he is a scoundrel, and has no hesitation in calling him a "robber." She is in love with her father's Secretary, Lucien Garrand.

Finally Lechat gets in his power the aged Marquis de Porcellat. The nobleman wants to borrow money. Lechat at first refuses. At last it comes to a point where he makes the only condition the marriage of his daughter to the son of the Marquis. Through the latter's dire necessity the financier forces him to consent. The two men call the daughter Germaine in and her father tells her the Marquis has come to offer the hand of his son.

Germaine refuses point blank. Her father insists, grows angry, and storms.

"I am not free," the girl blurts out; "I have a lover."

Naturally this throws Lechat into a violent rage. Garrand, the lover, appears, and after an angry discussion the young couple leave the room. At this stage of the action the steward brings word that the financier's son has been killed in an auto accident. The lifeless body has been brought into the house. Lechat's struggles are in vain. He falls prostrate, stricken with apoplexy.

Mr. Crane's make-up in the character of Lechat is said to be a masterpiece. Naturally provided with a smooth face, as the old financier he is seen with a seamy skin, with little patches of hair scattered over his face. Seeing him thus disguised not even an old acquaintance could tell it was Mr. Crane. The accompanying photograph shows him as he is in the character of Lechat. The cast:

Isidore Lechat	William H. Crane
Xavier Lechat, his son	Joseph Wheelock, Jr.
Phinck, Gruggh, Electrical Engineers.	George Backus, Sheridan Block
Lucien Garrand	Walter Hale
Marquis de Porcellet	Harry Saint Maur
Vicomte de la Fontanelle, Steward to Isidore Lechat	R. Payton Gibbs
The Head Gardener	Guy Nichols
A Retired Captain	George F. Devere
The Magistrate	Robert Percy
The Doctor	Frederick Sagmard
The Tax Collector	R. S. Fite
Jean, a Servant	W. H. Dupont
Gardener's Boy	Gabriel Ravenelle
Mme. Isidore Lechat	Harriet Otis Dillenbaugh
Germaine Lechat	Katherine Grey
Julie, Maid	Emma Field
The Magistrate's Wife	Isabel Garrison
The Doctor's Wife	Madeleine Rives
The Tax Collector's Wife	Josephine Hall

"Mr. Wix of Wickham," a musical comedy, will be offered at the Bijou Theatre to-morrow night by Manager Edward E. Rice. The book and some of the music are by Herbert Darnley. There are a few interpolations by Jerome D. Kern.

The scenes are laid in Australia. Mme. Marie, a Parisian modiste, has opened the "Coddletown Gentleman's Want Supply Stores," a combination of tonsorial parlors, café, and matrimonial bureau. One of the customers is Tom Howard, a youthful millionaire; he falls in love with one of the assistants in the store of Mme. Marie. Several other things happen during the two acts. The cast:

Duke of Tadminster	Sydney de Gray
Tom Howard, young Colonial heir to three million pounds	David Lithgow
John Smith, B. A., Tom's tutor	Julian Dalton Eltinge
Mr. Banks, Colonel in the Coddletown Guards	Arthur Wooley
Mr. Potter, Mayor of Coddletown and Major in Guards	Douglas Flint
Mr. Dodd, Chairman of Coddletown and Captain in Guards	Andrew O'Neill
Drinkaweldry, an Aboriginal Chief	Milton Pollock
Mr. Jenks, of the Horse Marines	Adolf Lalor
Shamus O'Scoot, Duke's Private Detective	Frank Lalor
Wilfrid Wix, late of Wickham, England	Harry Corson Clarke
Lady Letty, Duke's daughter	Miss Thelma Fair
Madame Marie, proprietress of the "Gentleman's Wants Supply Stores"	Miss Laura Guerite
Maude Benton, Lady Betty's friend	Miss Alice Maud Poole
Mrs. O'Scoot	Miss Catherine J. Hayes
Flossie Flyte	Miss Frances Wilson
Tottie Travers	Miss Cecevele Mayar
The Frolicsome Kangaroo	David Abrahams

The first Clyde Fitch play of the season will be presented at the Garrick Theatre Wednesday evening, when Clara Bloodgood will appear in "The Coronet of the Duchess." This is her first New York appearance since she was at the Savoy in "The Girl with the Green Eyes." The story of "The Coronet of the Duchess" begins in New York and ends in London.

Miss Bloodgood will be a wealthy and attractive girl whom the Duke of Sundun comes over to this country to marry. He has a title but little money. Mr. Frohman has surrounded his star with a good supporting company. The cast:

Mrs. Hampton	Mrs. Hone
Millicent Hampton	Clara Bloodgood
Mrs. Stafford	Mrs. Thos. Whiffin
Green, her maid	Zelda Sears
Laura Burrell	Georgia Mendum
The Dowager Duchess of Sundun	Katherine Stewart
Lady Hilda, her daughter	Elizabeth Tunmett
Lady Dardale	Florida Pair
Nora Cholmonville	Flossie Wilkinson
Bussy Hawkins	Elsa Garrett
Violette Gootes	Katherine Bell
Jim Burrell	William Courtleigh
Mr. Hampton	William H. Tooker
Jake Wheeler	Austin Webb
The Duke of Sundun	Ernest Lawford
Lord Beachby	Frank De Kum
Mr. Witherby	Edmund Hogan
Mr. Meeke	Frederick E. Beane
Footman to the Sundunes	James R. Cooley
Servant to the Hamptons	Lou W. Carter

Harry Kellar, described as "the greatest magician now living," will be at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre to-morrow. One of his tricks is to remove the Princess Karnac from the middle of the stage without the spectators seeing him. "The drum that can't be beaten" is another of his tricks.

"The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast" will be revived elaborately at the Grand Opera House to-morrow night. The principals include Arthur Rigby, Harry Le Clair, Gilbert Sarony, Edward Marsh, Rose Sarbelle, and Isabelle Underwood. The flying ballet is still a part of the show.

Arnold Daly will begin a week's run in "Candida" to-morrow night at the Vaudeville Theatre. Next Saturday night's performance will be the 159th in New York.

"Lighthouse by the Sea" will be at the New Star this week. It is said to be a "play of intense dramatic action."

At the West End Theatre the next attraction is "An English Daisy." Murray and Mack, the two "happy boys," will be in the company. There is a chorus of sixty.

"Her Mad Marriage" will be at the American Theatre a week from to-morrow.

"A Texas Ranger" comes to the Fourteenth Street Theatre Monday, Sept. 26.

"More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" will be at the Metropolis this week.

"The Virginian" will be at the Harlem Opera House to-morrow.

Plays That Hold.

Mrs. Fiske's revival of "Becky Sharp" continues to prosper at the Manhattan. George Arliss and John Mason get a good share of the applause.

George Ade's comedy-drama, "The County Chairman," is still holding its own in competition with the new attractions. It will be at Wallack's two or three weeks longer—until "The Sho-Gun" comes in.

There are no empty seats in the Empire these nights. John Drew, Margaret Dale, and Ferdinand Gottschalk keep interest up to the boiling point all the evening.

"Letty" is drawing large crowds to the Hudson, and it continues to be as much a triumph for Carlotta Nilsson as for the star, William Faversham.

"Cissy" Loftus, who is now called Cecilia for the sake of dignity, is playing "The Serio-Comic Governess" at the Lyceum. Her imitations of Ada Rehan, Mrs. "Pat" Campbell, Sarah Bernhardt, and Ellen Terry are perhaps more thoroughly enjoyed than any other part of the performance.

Henrietta Crosman is nearing the end of her New York run in "Sweet Kitty Bellaires." The attendance is very good. Miss Crosman gives place to David Warfield in "The Music Master."

"Piff, Paff, Pouf" remains at the Casino.

Edna May is as charming and dainty and as popular as ever in "The School Girl" at Daly's.

The rapid-fire farce, "The Rogers Brothers in Paris," has won success at the New Amsterdam.

"The Isle of Spice" will begin its sixth week to-morrow evening. The musical comedy has undergone several changes since it first came to New York, and is now a much improved show.

"Checkers" has been at the Academy of Music four weeks now, and its popularity has not begun to wane. Thomas W. Ross is becoming a melodrama matinée idol. Mrs. Woodend is still in the cast.

At the Savoy Theatre "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" is keeping the sun in the box office busy all the time. The receipts grow with the weeks.

Lulu Glaser continues to appear at the Knickerbocker Theatre in "A Madcap Princess."

"The Old Homestead," in which Denman Thompson is appearing at the New York Theatre, will stay on several weeks.

This will be the last week of "Girls Will Be Girls" at the Fourteenth Street Theatre. The musical extravaganza has made a hit.

VAUDEVILLE.

Milton and Dolly Nobles will be at Keith's this week in "The Days of '49." In this latest playlet Mr. Nobles will return to dialect character work. George W. Dayton has painted the set for the piece. "The Eight Vassar Girls" will be the principal musical attraction. Signor Ferninal, the baritone, is another feature. Others on the bill are Fanny Rice, James Harrigan, the Nelani Trio, Cartweel and Harris, Curtis and Adams, Inness and Ryan, and Walton and Adams.

"The Cavalier" will be given at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre this week by the regular stock company. Edwin Arden is at the head of the company, and he will have the principal rôle in this week's play. The stock company got together by Mr. Proctor for his Fifth Avenue house is said to be the best organization of players he has had under his management. Besides "The Cavalier" there will be a long list of high-class vaudeville. On the bill will be about everything from a soprano solo down to a dog-and-monkey act.

At the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre this week there will be a play by the stock company, and a long vaudeville bill.

Continuous vaudeville is served at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre.

The Watson-Hutchings-Edwards Company will lead the bill at Hurtig & Seamon's this week. They will present a sketch called "The Vaudeville Exchange." Pat Rooney and his Street Urchins will show "life as it is lived on Cherry Hill." Simon Gardner and Company will present "The New Coachman." The rest of the bill will contain Kelly and Ashby, Robert Fulgora, Artie Hall, Colby and Way, and Hoffman and Pierce.

Abbott Parker, the man who has a crucifixion on his back, is at Huber's Museum. Mr. Huber offers $1,000 to whoever proves that a stroke of lightning didn't put the crucifixion there.

Charles Ross and Mabel Fenton will be first on the bill at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre of varieties this week. Others will be Mme. Adelaide Herrmann, Ernest Hogan, Mlle. Capell, the Four Huntings, Stanley Brockman, the Milton Brothers, Potter and Hartwell, and Clarke and Florette.

At Huber's Casino James Baron, Josie Davis, the Fords, and Nit Nelson will be on the bill this week.

Henry Clay Barnabee, the same Barnabee who won fame as the Sheriff of Nottingham with "The Bostonians," will be at the Circle Theatre this week. He will appear in a thirty-minute operatic sketch. Clayton White and Marie Stuart will give a sketch called "Paris." Other announcements for the week are Holcomb, Curtis and Webb, Rosche's dogs and ponies, Maxyus and Mazette, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Press Eldridge, and Toledo and Price.

The concerts at Terrace Garden continue under the direction of Adolph L. Rothmeyer. The concerts are attracting great crowds.

SUNDAY CONCERTS.

Ted Marks will inaugurate the sixth season of his popular Sunday night concerts to-night at the American Theatre. Tom Lewis and Sam Ryan will make their last vaudeville appearance. Josephine Sabel will sing. The others on Marks's bill are Charles F. Semon, Ford and Wilson, Tom Cronin, Novelty Comedy Four, William Tomkins, Eadie Furman, Harry Wise, and Sadie Helf.

At Hurtig & Seamon's afternoon and evening concerts to-day Robert Hilliard and Company will present "No. 9/3." Helena Frederick, the prima donna, will sing, and Boniface and Waltzinger will appear in a comedy skit. Frank Bush will tell funny stories. Masyus and Mazette are also on the list.

Smith and Cook are the headliners at the Grand Opera House to-night. Pat Rooney and his Street Urchins will be second in importance. Other performers are Rice and Prevost, Ernest Hogan and Company, Agnes Mohr, Bruce, and Delgeneaux, the Ford Brothers, and the McGraths.

These will be at the Victoria to-night: George Evans, Staley and Birbeck, Burke and La Rue, Melville and Stetson, Smith and Campbell, Collins and Hart, Scott Brothers, Mlle. Chester, Belleclaire Brothers, and Renier and Gordon.

Dan McAvoy and his Fifth Avenue Girls will be among the performers at the Metropolis to-night.

CONEY ISLAND.

At Luna Park now there is in progress a great carnival. Thousands of people are attending, and the Park is stretched to accommodate the enormous crowds. The attendance reached the high-water mark last week.

Dreamland is just as much alive now as it was earlier in the Summer. The opening of the playhouses in New York has not apparently decreased the number of visitors to the seaside resort. "Fighting the Flames" is one of the great shows of Dreamland.

The animals in Bostock's animal arena are still doing stunts. Many of them will be moved to Europe in a week or two to be part of their owner's Paris show.

JIM O'BRIEN'S BALL GAME.

IF YOU want to see a game of baseball, thrilling in interest, with no suggestion of professionalism, there is one in City Hall Park every Saturday evening. The police are lenient. They do not stop these games. The rules of the great leagues are considerably abbreviated, because there are but four players for both sides.

James O'Brien of Oak Street is the umpire, and his rulings are absolute and irrevocable. O'Brien, the umpire and inventor of the game, as well as the arbiter of disputes, has a record, although he is only fourteen years old.

He rescued a baby from under the wheels of a truck in Cherry Street two years ago, his own limbs being crushed. No medal was given him. He did not expect one. He found himself useless except to act as a bootblack. He longed for some sort of fun in his leisure hours. O'Brien had learned to get about lively on his crutches; but there was little enjoyment.

With the approach of warm weather the other boys went swimming in the East River, forgetful of Jim. He stood this for some days and then went to watch the others. He felt his arms and found them stronger than ever. The water was tempting. With the help of a small friend he got out of his clothing and rolled off the dock.

The poor withered legs were a drag, instead of a propulsion, but his arms were strong, his chest broad, and his heart still sturdy. He was happier than he had been since he learned in the hospital that though he must be a cripple the baby to whose rescue he had gone was unhurt.

Jim was having a splendid time, when there was the not unusual cry for help, where the boys swim in deep waters off the docks in strong currents they cannot always conquer. Forgetful that he was but half a boy, he swam to aid. In the old days none of the boys could swim as he did. The red head of an old rival forged ahead of him and was soon bringing back to the dock a little girl who had fallen overboard. She saw that it was his little sister Mary.

Jim, the red-headed boy, was having a desperate time of it fighting against the current with his burden, but Jim came to his aid. He had seen little tugs swing around great liners. Lying on his back, with his head against the other boy's side, he exerted his full strength, turning them against the current for the pier, and it was the added impetus which, with the aid of a [illegible] in strong hands, saved little Mary.

Jim and the red-headed boy were made a great deal [illegible]. They had fought many a hard battle [illegible] the docks, but swore eternal friendship. [illegible] were still unhappy. The spirit that [illegible] him a leader among the other boys [illegible] old days and twice a rescuer was [illegible] to him.

[illegible]

[illegible] often watched the bulletin boards before the newspaper offices that give the returns of the contests between "der Goints, Pirates, Red Stockin's," and other nines. He could not go to these games, and he could not play with the other boys, so he decided to organize a game for himself, and that is the one to be seen in City Hall Park on Saturday evenings. Last Saturday he led four small boys, his devoted admirers, to the wide space before the City Hall.

Provided with a piece of chalk he marked out a diminutive diamond. In the usual position of the umpire he drew three parallel lines, and then at right angles drew twelve shorter ones to mark the names of the competing clubs, the nine innings, and the totals. Then he produced a ball about the size of those used at tennis, the covering being over paper closely wrapped in yarn—rather a dead ball, but one suitable for his purpose. There was no danger of hurting anybody or of breaking the Mayor's windows.

Jim squatted himself on the pavement before the empty score and cried "Play ball." There were a catcher and pitcher and one fielder, stationed just outside the little diamond, and a batter with a stick—a diminutive representation of the real article which it had taken Jim a day to make. Three strikes meant "out," as in the real game; a caught fly the same. The rules were much like those of the leagues, with the exception that for a home run the ball must strike, in a little grass plot just sixty feet from the batter. As the players were very little fellows and the ball so soft that it was hard to send it far, the chances of scoring were somewhat smaller than in the ordinary game.

Each boy had his turn at the bat as in "old cat," so that under the rule "three out, all out," each boy represented a different nine during the course of play. Jim was enjoying himself immensely, as "der Goints wuz one to der good," when his fun was spoiled by some of the spectators. "Newsies," who are as eager for a chance to gamble as a sparrow is to fight, had bet on the result, and the discontented disputed a decision.

"Red Mike" was there, and he would allow no one to question what Jim said. There was a fight. Policeman Galligan interfered. Galligan's heart is so big that it is supposed to have slipped from his chest to his waistband. He drove off the larger boys and stood guard to see the little fellows finish. "De Goints" won. There is a suspicion that they always will win, as the pitcher is not so energetic, the catcher not quite so nimble, and the fielder is apt to have butter fingers at times when the home team needs runs.

WOMAN WILL STUMP FOR PARKER

Miss Margaret Ingles of Kentucky, Sent For by Taggart, Will Whoop It Up in Indiana.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 17.—Miss Margaret Ingles, a vivacious Kentucky lass, has gone to New York to answer a summons from Thomas Taggart, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, who wants her to begin a stump-speaking campaign through the State of Indiana. Miss Ingles is well known in Kentucky and several other States as a campaign orator, but this time she will undertake to "whoop up" the farmers of Indiana.

Shortly after the St. Louis Convention Miss Ingles offered her services to the Campaign Committee, and received assurances that she would be called upon.

"I had hoped for the nomination of Mr. Bryan," she said to-day, "but, like a politician, I must abide by the majority of the party, and will give Mr. Parker my hearty support. I would not mention my preference for Mr. Bryan, but you know I spoke for him in the campaigns of 1896 and 1900, and I suppose I have become a little partial to him."

Miss Ingles spoke from the same platform as Mr. Bryan in 1896, when that leader was in Lexington, and faced the largest audience that ever greeted a public speaker in this State. Miss Ingles was highly complimented by Mr. Bryan, who said that she was remarkably well posted on all political matters.

"I found in that campaign," said Miss Ingles, "many localities where a woman in politics was looked upon as a woman in church. You know in many parts of the country a woman is not allowed to raise her voice in church work and especially to address a congregation. Some of the old men would say I was out of my sphere, but they would come to hear me, and I found them among my most enthusiastic hearers."

Miss Ingles was trained for the stage. She took juvenile parts while still very young. Later she determined to abandon the stage for politics, and she did. She was made enrolling clerk of the Kentucky Senate in recognition of her work in the 1896 campaign.

Afterward she gave valuable assistance to Senator Blackburn in his campaign for re-election. The contest was one of the hardest seen in Kentucky in many years, owing to the predominating influence of Republicans in the State Government at that time. Miss Ingles was associated with Senator William Goebel in behalf of Mr. Blackburn, and eventually they won. She was particularly skillful in learning the plans of the opposition, and kept the Blackburn forces informed in advance of every move.

Personally Miss Ingles is handsome. She is a distinct brunette, tall, and slender, and in speech is both pleasing and convincing. She has a happy faculty of bringing her arguments to such a climax that her meaning cannot be misunderstood. She is clever in repartee, too, and has never yet been put to confusion by the questions propounded by skeptical hearers.

New Plan for Salt Water Supply to Protect Manhattan from Fire

Proposition Submitted to Mayor McClellan Involves Novel Features—No Pumping Stations at River Front—Water to be Pumped by Fire Engines—Cost of System.

THE following plan for a water supply to protect the lower part of Manhattan against fire was submitted to Mayor McClellan on Thursday last by Fred J. Miller of Brooklyn:

For Fire Department use the supply of water, come whence it may, should be sufficient to supply as many steam fire engines as are brought into use at any fire and for any length of time. The present supply for fire service is greatly below this requirement; there may be sufficient water at the reservoir, but unless the capacity of the pipes for its distribution is increased from what it now is, fires will certainly occur when the firemen will be unable to use as many steam fire engines as can be brought into practical use, for the want of sufficient water. Larger mains must be put down, to use either fresh or salt water, if properly in the lower part of the city is to be properly protected against fire; as the present mains are sufficient for other than fire service, it is clearly better to put down pipes large enough to supply the greatest possible quantity in the shortest possible time and to use the salt water surrounding the city. It is admitted by engineers of our water works that the supply for fire service must eventually come from this source.

Use of Pumps.

Many ways of using the river water have been suggested by engineers and others, nearly all of which propose that powerful pumps be placed at the river front connected with steam boilers; these pumps to take suction from the river, and force the water through iron pipes laid underground and connected with hydrants on the street corners.

If iron pipe is used to convey the water, the corrosive effect of the salt water will in a short time destroy them, and in a comparatively short time new mains will have to be laid.

Many articles have appeared in which the writers mention places where the salt-water system using iron pipes has worked satisfactorily. This is not the case, as the cities referred to do not pump salt water, but in the case of Philadelphia pump fresh water from the Delaware River; Cleveland obtains its water for its high-pressure pumps from Lake Erie, which is fresh water; Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, and other points which have also been mentioned as using salt water all have fresh-water plants.

Pipe Plan Proposed.

The river water can readily be used for fire extinguishing by laying pipes across the lower part of the city from river to river below the level of the extremest low tide, so that they will always remain full, the level of the water in the hydrants always being the same as the surface of the river, no matter how fast the water is pumped out or how long the pumping may continue. Vitrified pipe should be used for the purpose—as there is no pressure on these pipes at any time and the salt water flowing through them will not in any way corrode or destroy them, as would surely be the case in a short time if iron pipe was used.

The simplicity of the hydrants used on this system is another feature in favor of the plan; they are of low cost and will not freeze up in extreme cold weather, no valves are required to shut off the water, and are simply pipes connected with the salt-water main, and can have from two to ten outlets above the ground, fitted with ordinary screw couplings, to which the suction hose of the steamer is screwed when the steamer is to be connected to the hydrants.

By having the hydrants that are connected with the salt-water main large enough to accommodate say six steamers at a time at one hydrant, those portions of the city can be commanded where the ground is more than twenty-five feet above surface water mark, this being about the limit at which the pumps of our steamers will produce a vacuum and do good pumping service.

The use of salt water by the steam fire engines in Manhattan cannot injure them in any way by pumping salt water, as has been claimed by many persons, as the pumps are made of brass or bronze and are constructed so that they can be used at any time by taking salt water at the dock for use at fires along the river front.

Below Union Square the localities where the street level is sufficiently low for the fire engines to take suction are near enough together to allow steamers standing at the most isolated hydrant to force good working streams from a line of hose reaching to a point more than half way to the next hydrant, and as half a dozen steamers may take water from any one hydrant all the conditions of adequate supply can be fulfilled even in extreme cases.

To permit large bodies of water to be thrown on a burning building a Siamese connection can be used. By the use of the Siamese connection, where a powerful stream is required the combined power of two or more steamers can be used to throw a single large stream of water. Hose from six engines can be laid to a point near the fire, and there attached to one end of the Siamese, and to the other end is attached a single line of large hose 3½ inches to 6 inches in size, using a nozzle of large diameter. By this means of using Siamese a large and powerful stream of water can be thrown from 450 to 500 feet horizontally and to the height of the fourteenth story of our high buildings.

Adapted to Steam Engines.

The Siamese connection, mounted on wheels, is adapted to receive two or more streams from steam fire engines and to discharge the water in a single stream, the hose leading from the engine being from 2½ inches to 3½ inches in diameter. The large stream is found much more effective and capable of reaching greater distances than the several smaller streams could do separately. The nozzle consists of three parts—the butt, barrel, and tip.

The tip is screwed to the barrel, so that it can be removed or exchanged for a larger or smaller one. The butt is fitted at its end with a number of screw nipples or tubes, for the connection of lines of hose. Within the butt valves are fitted to close over the openings by internal pressure, so that water cannot escape by the nipple not in use nor in case of the bursting of other line of hose leading from engines. The butt is also formed with a socket that receives the end of a lever or handle, by which the nozzle is manipulated. When the fire is reached the operating lever is put in place and two more lines of hose are connected with the nipples, and the device is aimed by manipulation of the handle and a solid stream, combining the smaller streams, is discharged at one point. To protect the operators the truck is provided with a shield or screen, consisting of a frame covered with canvas and stretched by rope or wire braces. The side bars of the frame are hinged or jointed, so that the shield can be folded compactly when not in use. A hose pipe with a spray nozzle is connected with the butt to keep the shield wet. These arrangements allow the firemen to approach closely to the fire with the Siamese. When the Siamese is made to take in one or more large streams at the tip, and then divide them up into several smaller streams, delivered from the butt, the self-acting valves are dispensed with and gate valves, operated by hand, are supplied for each outlet and inlet, so as to supply two or more lines of hose from the butt. This Siamese is not patented, and can readily be made in the repair shop of the Fire Department; it can be made of large dimensions, so that lines of hose from ten streams can be attached to it at one end and one or more lines of hose of large diameter attached to the other end; to the ends of this large hose nozzles, say of three inches in diameter, are used to throw water on the fire. By the use of this Siamese the combined power of ten or more engines can be used to throw a single stream of water to a greater distance than has ever been done at any fire in this city, and under very high pressure.

Where Grade Is Too High.

Above Union Square the street grade, except along the river front on either side of the city, is too high to admit of operating this system. If salt water is used in that part of the city it must be pumped from the river by large pumps and forced through iron piping, but if none of the present fresh water supply is taken for fire service below Fourteenth Street, it will hardly be necessary to use salt water for some years yet above that line. For those parts of the city most exposed to fire and where the most valuable property is situated the system may be used.

Below in this column appear the heights of the streets above high-water mark, only a few of the points throughout the city, where hydrants may be placed. As stated before, the whole city below Union Square can be protected by our steam fire engines using a water main as described.

The elevations given are from actual survey, and may be relied on.

State and Bridge Streets, 9 feet; Church and Rector Streets, 4 feet 3 inches; Reade and Washington Streets, 10 feet; Cherry and Oliver Streets, 5 feet 6 inches; Roosevelt and Madison Streets, 14 feet; Pearl Street and Park Row, 16 feet 9 inches; Duane and Elm Streets, 10 feet 6 inches; Thomas Street and West Broadway, 15 feet; Canal Street and Broadway, 12 feet; Franklin and Church Streets, 20 feet; West Broadway and Laight Streets, 7 feet; Greenwich and Elm Streets, 18 feet 5 inches; Cortlandt and Church Streets, 21 feet; John and Gold Streets, 20 feet; College Place and Park Place, 17 feet 6 inches; Warren Street and College Place, 19 feet; William and Chambers Streets, 21 feet; Maiden Lane and Nassau Street, 17 feet; Broadway and Cortlandt, 22 feet; Wall and Pearl Streets, 19 feet; Nassau and Wall Streets, 22 feet.

Shoulder to Shoulder With the Armies at Manassas

An Extraordinary Outbreak of Local Patriotism—Fooling the Enemy—Keen Interest of Army Officers.

TO one to whom the Manassas manoeuvres were mainly an outing, and who had no duty or responsibility in connection with them, it would be hard to imagine a holiday more delightful and interesting than they afforded. To be routed out of sleep at 6, or even at 5, by the signal which the Americans miscall "revelee" and the British "reveilly" is no hardship, provided one has turned in actually at "taps." And to be personally conducted across country by the best informed and most courteous of guides, with the assurance of seeing to the best advantage whatever is to be seen across this undulating and diversified Virginian country, with halts where the things to be seen materialise, is to get the very best out of an outing on horseback. Those philosophers who are troubled about the future of the horse, and who predict that the time is coming when the animal will no longer be seen except in a stuffed condition and in a museum, would have been reassured by witnessing the manoeuvres. However dispensable the horse may seem to be for peaceful traffic and travel, one cannot imagine a time when he will be dispensable for war. Proverbially vain for safety as he is, and particularly so in modern war, when a mounted man is an easy mark, war evidently cannot do without him. As Helmholz said of the human eye that it was so inaccurate and untrustworthy that if it were proposed to him as a scientific instrument he should unhesitatingly reject it, yet it was so adjustable and versatile and convenient that he could imagine no efficient substitute for it, we may say that the horse, with all his drawbacks of slowness, and his huge demands for fuel, and his liabilities to accident, though these are at least no greater than those of any mechanical substitute for him yet produced, is so handy that one cannot look forward to his abolition.

Autos in Use.

At Headquarters camp there were several automobiles in use, which their inventors submitted partly as "exhibits" of practicality and, doubtless they were as practicable for rough work as any yet invented, while of course on a suitable roadway they far outdistanced any cavalry. But they were confined to the highways, and not only no actual but no imaginable automobile could have followed the manoeuvres where the troops were compelled to go, and the observers who were charged with the duty of observation were compelled to follow, "through brake, through brier," across streams, and over Virginia rail fences, as well as over the fallow land to which the field of the manoeuvres was so largely given. Spectators on horseback had an advantage over spectators by automobile, in comfort as well as in facility of observation, since they were enabled to avoid the one real discomfort of attending the operations, the plague of dust.

One recalls with new interest and sympathy on the spot and at the end of a dry season the grievance of the Army of the Potomac against the sacred soil of Virginia, the red clay, which was pulverized into dust clouds when it was not liquefied into mud of peculiar tenacity. A single company of marching men betrayed its presence for miles as soon as it was compelled to take to the highway, and often nullified the effect of an hour's careful and successful effort for concealment. One afternoon I happened to be caught between a gun and its caisson of a battery of artillery homeward bound at a trot after the day's work, and the gun in front was absolutely invisible at the distance of a dozen feet or less. The plague of dust was much less, by the way, on the latter days of the manoeuvres at the Manassas or eastern end of the fighting arena than at the thoroughfare or western on the earlier days, and the red clay had become a whitish soil, equally pulverizable perhaps, but far less irritating. In one respect the marching troops of 1904 encountered a greater hardship than those of 1861 and 1862. For, according to all who remembered its earlier state, the Warrenton Pike was then, as an important highway of the pre-railway era, quite up to the existing standard of roadmaking of the United States. It is now described, in the legend of the official map of the manoeuvres, as a "badly worn metaled road," which is a very attenuated description of its horrors.

An Abominable Highway.

It is in fact an abominable highway, a succession or parallel of scarp and gully, giving off at the least stirring a pillar of red dust cloud, and whoso ventured upon it in its stirred-up state was doomed to be unclean until the even. The more delightful to escape from it to the shady woods, traversed by the "runs," which further west would be "branches," and further north creeks, or to the open fallow fields carpeted with pennyroyal, which yields its pungent fragrance under the crushing of the horses' hoofs, and to look westward over the rolling country to the faint blue screen of the foothills of the Appalachian Ridge that formed the western frontier of colonial America, declining here and there to mark one of the passes that hereabout the called gaps, but in the Catskills retain the Dutch name of which we have Anglicized the spelling into "cloves," though in South Africa they retain the Batavian spelling of "kloofs," and which in New England are again Anglo-Saxonised into "notches," the most conspicuous of them, by the depth of its depression and the most important as marking the limit of the field of manoeuvres, being that Thoroughfare Gap through which Jackson's foot cavalry marched forty-two years ago, with results so memorable.

We traveled in the print of olden wars,
But all the land was green,
And love we found, and peace,
Where fire and war had been.

Although it has been repeatedly explained that the choice of the ground for the manoeuvres had nothing at all to do with the traditions of the place, but was motived by purely practical considerations, yet for the purposes of "publicity and promotion," to bring the manoeuvres to the attention of the widest possible audience, it was the luckiest possible choice. That new and mimic battles were to be fought upon the old and real battlegrounds was an announcement that aroused the interest of the whole country as nothing else could have done. And to arouse public interest in the doings of the army and the National Guard was one of the most practically desirable things to be done. But probably nobody expected such an extraordinary outbreak of local patriotism among the dwellers of the countryside as has in fact been evoked. In fact, the troops from "the States lately in rebellion" had been divided as equally as possible between the two contending forces. But one of the armies was blue, and the army that was not blue was the local representative. And that, although it did not of all students the Confederate cause in quite unprecedented fashion, for the people of Northern Virginia. Add further that the Blue Army occupied the eastward position, or the position covering Washington, and the Brown Army the westward position, and that the second "fight" was almost a reproduction of the positions of the first Bull Run, and you have the material for working up a perfervid local sympathy and local antipathy. Apparently the natives have passed the interval between the operations which make their abode storied ground and the present in a condition

Of old, unhappy, far-off things,
And battles long ago, in the intervals of half farming the region and raising the minimum of wheat, corn, millet, and razor-backed pigs. Certainly they have devoted little of their abundant leisure since the war to road-mending.

Local Partisanship.

But nobody could have anticipated the ferocity of local partisanship. A Brown officer who applied to a resident old lady for local guidance, after receiving it in abundance, received the supplementary explanation: "One of those Blue officers was by heah, asking me if this was the Hunter house," (which it was,) "and I pointed him to that house way yondah on the mountain, and told him that was the Hunter house. I tell you, Majah, I have lived heah for fo'mo' than fo'ty yeahs, and I know how to convey misinfo'mation."

Another old lady entirely ignored my request to be told where her well was, a refusal which I am fain to attribute, to my blue flannel shirt. And when, at the conclusion of Wednesday's fighting, the most dramatic tableau of the whole week was presented at the Belcher farm, a tableau that seemed almost to have been arranged by a stage manager, when a Brown battery unlimbered and opened fire on the opposite wood full of Blues, these eyes beheld two sexagenarian Virginian agriculturists send their umbrageous straw hats whirling in the air, and these ears heard them utter with all the force of their lungs the rebel yell.

Doubtless the choice of ground for the manoeuvres is the best thing that has happened to the countryside since the "war between the States." Everything to eat or drink the natives have had to sell they have been easily able to sell at several times normal prices. Very few would be worse off if no compensation at all for damages had been allowed. The conduct of the troops, regular and militia, has been astonishingly good. Within two miles of Gen. Grant's headquarters I saw a peach tree overhanging the road loaded with ripe fruit, although surrounded by a licentious soldiery. On the other hand, a mounted officer might have been seen, on Friday morning, crossing the last open field in front of the Blue lines, brandishing and indeed flaunting a turkey in full feather at his saddle bow. The fowl was so flaunted as to suggest that he had acquired it by fair bargain, and was using it to give verisimilitude to an otherwise bald and unconvincing representation of the horrors of war. There were evidences at the scenes of the smudging bivouacs that much corn had been plucked and roasted there, and I am credibly informed that private property in chickens was no more inviolate at the hands of the white invaders than it is said habitually to be at the hands of the resident [illegible] American.

Question of Damage.

But some [illegible] breaking and destruction of crops are likely to be the principal items of damages which [illegible] will be required to assess. The [illegible] and constructive damages which [illegible] expected to be claimed it is the [illegible] of Col. Hull and his subordinate [illegible] to mitigate to the utmost. And, in fact, the universal American tendency to get the utmost out of Uncle Sam is counteracted in the case of these Virginia farmers by a wholesome sentiment of local pride, and an aversion to have themselves put in the light of a community of extortioners. With this sentiment properly appealed to, the item of compensation is not likely to figure very largely in the total cost of the manoeuvres.

Headquarters Mess was a feature of the manoeuvres which contributed most to the pleasure of its members and guests. What struck foreign observers as a complete novelty in the presence of ladies at manoeuvres, struck them also as a most agreeable novelty. It is this feature which Congressman Livingston of Georgia has selected as the point of a curiously misdirected attack. It seems to him, it appears, as somehow a cruel wrong upon the taxpayers of the United States that it should be intimated to anybody who dines at the public expense that he should be expected to appear in seemly apparel. As a matter of fact, the mess was maintained, like any other mess in the army, at the expense of its members, and a guest was under obligation simply to his hosts. It is a gratifying proof of the hold that this attempt to combine upon the largest scale yet witnessed the regular army and the militia in preparation for war, in pursuance of the principle of the Militia bill, has taken upon the country, that the Governors of most of the States represented by their troops, the Governor of New York rather conspicuously excepted, should have found it incumbent upon them to appear, either in person or by their nearest official representatives, to testify to their interest in this application of the law. The Governors of Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, West Virginia, South Carolina, and Georgia were among those who successively appeared at mess, and postprandially celebrated their respective Commonwealths. The fact that they appeared consecutively, and without knowledge of what their predecessors had said, gave rise to an amusing mischance. It seems that a favorite form of State brag is that the self-celebrating State furnished a larger share that any other to the soldiers of the civil war, and this brag had been repeated on three evenings by three Governors, of whom at most but one could have been warranted in making it. When on the fourth evening an innocent fourth Governor had his innings, and working oratorically up to it, had got as far as "and we can claim for our State that, in proportion to her population, she sent the largest quota," he was astonished and confused by a general outbreak of hilarity among his hearers, who had also been the hearers of his predecessors.

Admirable Arrangements.

The admirable arrangements of the headquarters camp, and indeed of all the camps, was an additional proof of the all-roundness of the United States officer, of how he is not only a fighting man and an administrative man, but how he realises the [illegible] maximum of capacity in that he knows how to keep a hotel. For every detail of the special requirements of the occasion seemed to have been foreseen and provided for. One detail which excited the particular admiration of the foreign observers was the provision of shower baths at the camps, for the use not only of officers but of enlisted men. There was no occasion, for one who had ridden or tramped over the Virginian roads and breathed dust all day, for being unclean beyond the event, and the showers furnished not only the most refreshing but the most economical form of applying the ablution.

But the chief and never-failing interest of the manoeuvres, to a civilian quite incapable of appreciating the specific military lessons they inculcated, was the absorbing and infectious interest that was taken in them by the army officers who had devised and were supervising and executing them, from Gen. Corbin down. They could not have worked harder or more enthusiastically if the game had been the real thing for which it was a preparation. A distinguished British officer has complained that it is not good form, in the British Army, to be professionally "keen." If that be true, the American officer, from the British officer's point of view, is an example of shockingly bad form. For his professional keenness is incessant. And this in spite of the fact that in no other army, excepting perhaps the British, does it receive so little of public appreciation. The enthusiasm which the mimic combats excited in the fighting line was amusingly exemplified on the last morning of the manoeuvres by Gen. Bell, who desisted long enough from supervising his command to gallop half way across a field and shout to a friend, "There's not a single grease-spot left of them," and then galloped back again. But it was equally noticeable in all the staff departments, including the Signal Service, with its forty miles of telephone wire to each division; the Medical Department, with its experimental hospital tent and its hospital mule pack, meant to travel close to the firing line; with every department which had expedients and contrivances exhibited here as experiments to be tested as to their practicability in war. Casualties only excepted, the work, to everybody engaged in it, was the work of war, and was done under the severest forms of test and of incessant criticism, which doubtless, as it is now or will soon be recorded in the War Department, deal with every quality, including the capacity of the division and brigade commanders for high command in the field. The professional zeal and enthusiasm of the officers of the army, as shown in these manoeuvres, make the civilian who has had the opportunity of seeing them at work proud to be their countryman.

PAMPERED PETS OF PROMINENT PEOPLE

A Republican Parrot and His Democratic Rival—An Animal Dealer Who Hobnobs with Foreign Diplomats and Washington Celebrities.

THE relation between a dealer in birds and animals and diplomatic representatives of foreign nations in Washington may not, at first sight, appear very plain. Nevertheless there is a proprietor of a bird and pet animal emporium in the National capital who has been a frequent guest at the table of the Turkish Minister, and has even corresponded with the mysterious Sultan himself on the subject of poultry raising. He has aided with his advice, and supplied from his stock, the resident representative of Porto Rico in the latter's project of establishing a model farm in that country, and several of the South American diplomats have profited by his counsel in improving the live stock of their respective nations. This dealer is brought into contact with the most prominent people in Washington in another manner. He boards Birds and other pets while their owners are out of the city, and his clientele includes the President, members of the Cabinet and Supreme Court, Senators, &c., as well as members of the Corps Diplomatique.

The varied menagerie of pet animals at the White House has been accumulated by the Roosevelt children in their frequent visits to his establishment, which is unique in Washington. It was here that Miss Alice Roosevelt, not long ago, purchased the grass snake which has been made the subject of a bet between two men, one wagering $5,000 against $1,000 that the report of her free handling of her pet was simply a newspaper canard.

The President's Parrot.

At present the President's parrot, Loretta, is a boarder at the establishment and is imbibing lessons from a graphophone, in common with the rest of the parrots. One of the phrases repeated by the machine is "Hurrah for Roosevelt and Fairbanks." Loretta has mastered, with considerable distinctness, the "Hurrah for Roosevelt," but her vocal ability has not as yet overcome the difficulty of pronouncing the name of the Republican Vice Presidential candidate.

There is another famous parrot at present a lodger who belongs to a prominent Democrat in Washington, and this bird, for fear of its acquiring disloyal utterances, is relegated to the upper regions of the store. The attainments of this parrot are truly astonishing. Like President Roosevelt's parrot her name is Loretta, and she is one of the vainest of her sex, frequently exclaiming in startlingly humanlike tones and in allusion to herself, "She's just the nicest girl in town—everybody says so!" Moreover, this Loretta is just achieving a Democratic campaign song, having already nearly mastered the first verse, and it is piquant to contrast the adverse political utterances of the two birds. The Democratic Loretta is a famous vocalist, singing, when so inclined, "Yankee Doodle," "All Coons Look Alike to Me," (the latter usually given at sight of a person of color,) "Wait for the Wagon," and other simple melodies. Indeed, this parrot is said to be the most wonderful talking bird in the country.

Business No Sinecure.

The prominent pets, if they may be so designated, in the dealer's establishment are not distinguished by being in fancy cages or kennels, but are housed in regulation quarters provided by the dealer himself. The latter experiences considerable tribulation in his capacity as boarder of birds and other pet animals. The owners, in general, not only insist that it is his bounden duty to keep the creatures placed in his charge alive, but to obviate in some manner, which none has ever definitely explained, the natural process, in case of birds, of moulting.

"Of course," he remarked, "when the people are going out of the city, usually in the Spring, or early Summer, the Birds' feathers are in sleek and nice condition, and when they return the creatures are moulting and present in each case a totally different aspect to the owner, who, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, blames me for the transformation. One well-known Senator, an aged and choleric man, came in here a few seasons ago to obtain his parrot, which he had left with me for the Summer, and when he saw the moulting bird he got into a most towering passion. He was so enraged that he couldn't utter a word and had to sit down and wait until the power of speech returned to him. Then he went for me 'without gloves.' He said he was swindled, called me a thief and a rascal, and indulged generally in a tirade of abuse that he surely never equaled for fluency in the Senate. I kept as cool as I could, and then I offered him any bird in the store, assuring him that in a few weeks his parrot would assume its wonted appearance. He agreed, and when his bird was through moulting I sent for him. He acknowledged his error and said, 'I admit I was wrong and I beg your pardon.'

"There is an old lady here, prominent in society, who, I believe, regards me as little better than a murderer because, several years ago, a parrot of hers died on my hands. When I first acquainted her with the catastrophe, she accused me at once, remarking, as a 'clincher,' that she had 'had that bird seventeen years and it had never died before!' Her line of argument lay in contrasting the number of years she had the bird, during the course of which it had never died, with the brief period I had taken care of it. Of course, any attempt to defend myself against this overwhelming reasoning was palpably useless. The old lady believes me, to this day, guilty of the death of her pet, and she never comes in the store without reverting to the circumstance."

Pampered Pets.

A pet alligator, the property of a Washington society woman, is an annual Summer boarder. This creature is distinguished by a handsome gold collar around its neck, but is lodged in a tank with a number of others of its kind. Among the rows of plain little cages containing the smaller birds may be seen Secretary Cortelyou's much-prized mocking bird and Thomas Walsh's famous singing canary. There are some 400 of these cages, each occupied by a boarder, and the dealer says, in reference to them:

"I had all these made to order to obviate the immense amount of trouble I used to experience when I kept the birds in the owners' cages. You will notice that there are no ornaments, and consequently no crevices in which the tiny insect parasites of the canaries can accumulate. I have taken off the ornament on top of the ordinary canary bird cage in numberless instances and found it filled with vermin. As many owners are unaware of this menace to the birds in the ornaments at the tops of the cages I used to have the labor of cleaning them out, or rather hiring additional help for this purpose alone. Then, in many cases, the owners would insist that the cages were not in as good condition as when they left them with me, and I would have to supply the deficiencies. On the whole I found it cheaper to have several hundred of these cages made to order. Each, as you see, is numbered, and the name of the owner is entered in a book with the number of his bird opposite."

Although, as regards lodging, there is no distinction made between the Presidential pets and any of the others, the owner, in many instances, prescribes a particular diet and this is strictly followed out. The Democratic Loretta receives, by its owner's directions, none but a certain brand of mineral water. Some of the fancy cats require a diet that a gourmet might relish.

MATCHES AS BAIT.

IN a down-town stationery shop the most conspicuous display in the show window is a card on which are mounted boxes of matches of different sizes, with the information that "matches" are to be obtained inside.

"That's my scheme," said the veteran dispenser of [illegible] supplies. "It brings me more business than all the rest of the stuff in the window. 'It's this way," he explained. "Smokers—and who doesn't smoke?—are constantly finding themselves without matches, and there is nothing harder to buy out of the regions of the grocery stores. I got this tip from one of my customers. 'Why don't you sell matches?' he asked.

"I laid in a supply and put them in the window. Scores come in every day for matches who never before entered my store, and every other one at least becomes a customer, buying his pens, and paper, and blankbooks here."

GENOESE RESTAURANT IN NEW YORK.

ONE of the qualintest of eateries has just been opened in West Third Street not far from Broadway. It presents a little view of Genoa, being set in the heart of a picturesque but growing colony from La Superba, or the Knee City, as the natives of Italy term it.

As one mounts the untidy steps and notes the attempt at an illuminated window garden near the entrance a smile forces itself to the lips. But this passes away, and the queer ornamentation and warmth of coloring in the furnishing holds the visitor so closely he forgets the rest. Tiny colored Madonnas under glass, after Justus d'Allamagna; a church stall in imitation inlaid work; a glass model of the sacro catino, the ship the Saviour and the disciples are supposed to have used; yellow marble figurines of famous Genoese, including Columbus; photographs of the Lighthouse of Lanterna, the tombs of Mazzini and of Garibaldi, (who, the proprietor tells you though born at Nice, was the son of a Genoese)—all these add local color and zest to the place.

"Some artists from what you call it Mid Dugal Street comma here first," said the bottega who waited on the tables, "they like our dinner a prezzo fisso very much. One, he like too much and give me this li fazoletto [elik handkerchief] for a good dish of costeletta alla minuta."

The visitor fingered in his pockets for a souvenir and immediately ordered the dish. It proved an appetizing mixture of veal cut in dice, calves' ears, and something that tasted suspiciously like New England dumplings. The piattini of hot relishes are the chief attractions of the table sought by the Bohemians. These, it is said, are made by a beautiful Genoese girl who expects to be treated to a cup of ciocchio or coffee mixed with chocolate, if she produces an especially good combination of vegetables, oil, vinegar, and the other ingredients. Arrosto and bistecca roast meat and beefsteak can be gotten, but they are foreign to the place.

For breakfast a neat order would be macaroni al pomidoro—macaroni with tomatoes—frittata, omelette and caffe a latte; a luncheon, zuppa alla santé—soup with squares of bread, chopped celery, peppers, potatoes, onions, and other green vegetables—and sfogila, a delicate Italian fish. For dinner, riso con riselli, a concoction of rice with peas; finocchio, fennel root boiled; potaggio di pollo, a tasty fricassee of chicken, and crostata di frutti, the famous Genoa fruit tarts.

The service is excellent. The waiter expects a small tip of 5 cents in remembrance. Every one is polite from the proprietor and waiter to the guests' bootblack and newsboy who drop in. The visitor seems as much a source of amusement to the Genoese frequenters as they are to him. He converses with them he will find the colony a busy one. The men are merchants, marblecutters, fruit dealers, day laborers, and sailors; the women, knitters, lacemakers, and artificial flower sewers. They differ from the other Italians of the city in that they are taller, bonier, and more serious. The Venetians, their old enemies, say they are all for money and commerce. Whether this is so or not, a chance visitor cannot tell, but he notes one thing, and that is that the Genoese has a quick eye for making a penny, and uses strictly business principles in the process. The client is told where he can purchase anything Italian he can think or dream of, and all sorts of inducements are held out for him to part with his money.

The Florentines, who have a colony further south and to the eastern part of the city, call the Genoese the Yankees of Italy. But perhaps this is because they refer to keep restaurants and follow the sea rather than grind organs and sell statuettes and peddle small wares.

The Genoese are to have a [illegible] theatre of their own shortly, it is understood, in connection with their [illegible] and a production of [illegible] opera.

Drop a Nickel in the Slot for Beans and Pie

An Automatic Restaurant for Rapid-Fire New Yorkers.

QUICK lunch for the rapid-fire New Yorker has now reached the point of efficiency where he can drop a nickel in the slot and pull out what he wants.

This is pretty good, but not quite perfection. A needed improvement is a contrivance by which he will be automatically told what he wants, blown full of predigested food tablets, and run out.

The vacillating would like it; so would the dyspeptic. It would also greatly relieve the crowding and jostling which is such a profane feature of down-town quick lunch.

The automatic lunch room is the only one of its kind. It is on Broadway, within the shopping district. It has an attractive front and a handsome interior. The room is about 50 feet long by 25 feet wide. Standing out about three feet from the walls is a high hardwood partition, with a narrow marble counter, and with a plate-glass front trimmed with brass and divided into compartments. Built into the partition, in different parts of the room, are marble fountains. The compartments contain the eatables, the fountains the drinkables. Each compartment and fountain has an inscription or card announcing its contents and the price, and also a section number which corresponds to the number set opposite the dish on the bill of fare. A glance at the bill of fare, therefore, enables the stranger to promptly locate the desired article.

The scheme involves quick service and prompt payment—to enable a man to wait on himself and to hand over the cash without any fuss. And it is very ingeniously worked out.

For example: Some breathless individual comes rushing in and wants the old standby—ham sandwich. There it is, upon a plate behind the glass, "Section 2. Ham sandwiches, 5c." He slips a nickel in the slot, moves the lever, down drops the little window, and there's his ham sandwich wrapped in oiled paper. Time, five seconds.

A Baked Bean Order.

The next man has time enough to eat some hot baked beans. Very well. But this is an order of considerable dignity, which must obviously go down stairs to the kitchen. He steps up to the baked beans slot, shoves in a dime, and out drops a small circular check. He waits a few seconds; then up comes a diminutive dumbwaiter behind the glass; he puts the check into another slot, down drops the window, and he takes out a tray containing a dish of beans, a roll, pat of butter, plate, and knife and fork. Time, half a minute.

He can eat standing up at the counters or shelves in the front part of the room or sit down at the tables in the rear. Napkins, sugar, pepper, salt, &c., are at hand. If he wants water, he goes to the fountain and draws a glassful of the filtered fluid, iced or piping hot. If he wants a cup of coffee he steps over to the coffee fountain, takes from the shelf overhead a cup and saucer containing a small jug of milk, places the cup under the spout, drops a nickel in the slot, moves the lever, and out comes 5 cents worth. No splashing, no waste.

There are two fluffy girl cashiers who supply the necessary small change, and, incidentally, non-automatic smiles. There are also three or four men waiters, who clear up the used dishes and attend those desiring service. The bill of fare is well selected, is varied, and is changed daily. The food is of good quality, is well cooked, and is daintily served.

Prices are 5 or 10 cents. The highest-priced dish is chicken salad, 25 cents. Included in the long list of drinkables are beer, ale, wine, and buffet drinks. Tables are reserved for women, and the establishment is well patronized by shoppers.

The system of slots and levers is the invention of a German, and it is patented. You can't beat the machines. They get your money first. But they always deliver the goods.

Quite Competent.

Bobstein—Too bad Cohen had to get away from New York. Do you think he'll make a living in South Africa?

Globstein—Don't worry. If the steamer goes down in mid-ocean, and Cohen has a raft, he'll make a living. If there is no other man on the raft.

SOME RECENTLY IMPORTED PAINTINGS

THE study of past schools of art on the part of Americans is as keen as their appreciation of modern work; and some amateurs confine their collections to old pictures, being rarely tempted by any canvas painted within the nineteenth century, unless it is by an artist who imbibed the influences of the eighteenth. The love of old masters is so widespread nowadays that art dealers have begun to study the idiosyncrasies of collectors. Among these is the dislike to buy from galleries that are well advertised, widely known, and frequented by the general run of picture buyers and by those who attend auction sales of pictures, not to purchase, but to look on. Not far from the Waldorf-Astoria are some galleries never advertised and known only to the special lovers of old masters. It is [illegible] these galleries that a painting has been taken for illustration on another page, the choice resting on the possibility of reproducing the old paint in black and white rather than on the subject or the school.

A portrait of Henry Raeburn in early manhood taken by himself shows the famous portraitist of Edinburgh as a handsome and intelligent person. He has copied his own face and figure from a mirror, and one sees in his left hand a board on which he has drawn his own full face in red chalk. Raeburn was the historian of his time for Scotland, having painted almost all the notable Scotsmen between 1790 and 1823—Sir Walter Scott, Mimie, Robertson, Ferguson, &c.—and yet was able to give each sitter a sturdy individuality that places him as a maker of Britishers among the great artists. His bold yet temperate brushwork and good color sense recommend him to collectors. Recently his pictures have attained high prices in the London sales, after threescore years of neglect and indifference to their sterling qualities.

Titian's "Entombment of Christ" at Vienna is too well known for comment. A number of replicas of this picture were made in Titian's atelier in Venice, and one of them is in New York. It is a good many years later than the original canvas, and shows a few trifling differences, but Titian retained his magical hand to the very end of his long life, so that it would be difficult to determine whether the later replica or the first picture of the "Entombment" is the better. Schidone of Modena is a master little known outside of Italy. The pensive boy on an oval canvas seems to have been a study for a larger composition in which the same figure occurs.

A characteristic scene from the fish market of a town in the Netherlands by the elder Godfrey Maes contains some excellent still-life in the painting of the fish, but is more curious for the portraits and types—the sober old auctioneer with his cane, the clerk taking down the figures, the golden-haired young woman bidding, the fishermen and market men and crowd of onlookers. It is a canvas for a Board of Trade or the offices of a fine market.

Sir Peter Lely was not always an agreeable painter, being given far too much to mannerism in his portraits, but now and then he made a ten-strike, as in this three-quarter likeness of a great lady, that Countess of Chesterfield whose name figures in the secret diary of Pepys, the volatile. There is more individuality, there is more expression of personal character in this portrait than one often sees in Lely's work, and also a finer brushwork on the complexion, a snappier drawing of the hands, and abler rendering of the hair and draperies.

A rarely rich and interesting small painting is the portrait of his mother by Rembrandt, one of many which he made of that patient and long-suffering old lady. She wears a turban of an indecisive Oriental sort and holds her glasses in her left hand as she looks to her left, facing three-quarters. The pearls and gold hair ornaments add to the rich coloring. This canvas has been badly crackled in the lower part, but the face has escaped. It shows the characteristic light and shade and mysterious brushwork of Rembrandt.

Turner paints the Tower of London as it looked between 1830 and 1840, and places in the foreground a lot of river and ocean craft. The six-oared river barge with a lady at the window of the covered after part, the early form of side-wheel steamer, the hulk of an old man-of-war, and the other boats and ships are records of a period in British shipping long passed away. The canvas has the rich, rich brushwork of Turner's prime, though in him not the astonishing master of glare of his latest pieces.

SOCIETY AT HOME AND ABROAD

PHOTOS. FROM BRADLEY STUDIOS

MRS. G. LOUIS BOISSEVAIN

MRS. STORRS WELLS

MRS. LEWIS ISELIN

SEPTEMBER is rather a nondescript month. During last week there were many fashionable people in town. But most of these were merely passing through; some coming on from Newport, where now many cottages are closed, and others from Bar Harbor, from Europe, and different resorts. The storm and the cold snap had the effect of bringing others from the Adirondacks, although the season there will last well into October. It has been anything but a gay season at the seaside places. There was not as much interest taken in the Horse Show at Newport as in former years, and many did not remain for the Dog Show which followed. The last week, however, was notable for some large entertainments. But Newport is a little New York, and the sets there are more distinctive than ever. The one bright feature at Newport this Summer was the entertaining by various well-known hostesses and hosts of women and men of talent, irrespective of their New York social affiliations. Of very great foreign stars there were none. The visit of Mme. Waddington brought out the kindly hospitalities of her many friends and relatives. Now that the season is over, Mrs. George Vanderbilt is making a short stay at Newport, before she goes to Biltmore for the Autumn and Winter.

There are a few outdoor entertainments and functions and gatherings arranged for the latter part of September and the beginning of October. The Meadow Brook Hunt will commence within a few days its Autumn season. The hunts at Newport were not brilliant successes, but were better attended than last year. Mr. P. F. Collier has been in town this week, with his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Collier. Mr. and Mrs. George Gould were also among the number of birds of passage, and there will be hunts at Lakewood a little later, as well as polo and other diversions. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt are paying their Autumn visit to their camp in the Adirondacks. Mrs. Robert Hoe was obliged to leave the neighborhood of the Upper St. Regis on account of alarming news from Switzerland concerning her daughter, Mrs. Leon Marie. Mrs. Marie died during the week. Her marriage to Leon Marie was most romantic, and for years the young couple lived in a pretty house near Madison Avenue and had around them a very jolly circle of friends. Mrs. Marie had not been in good health for some time, and she and her husband had lived out of town.

***

Just now there is much preparing of trousseaus for the various brides who are to be led to the altar in the Autumn. At Lenox on Oct. 1 Miss Winifred Folsom, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Winthrop Folsom, will marry Edward Delafield, and on the same day at Galilee, in the little Church of St. Peter, Miss Jessie Jacqueline Fanshawe will become Mrs. George Henry Potts. During last week there was the Gurnee-Burgess wedding. Later on there will be at Grace Church the nuptials of Miss Cryder and Mr. William Woodward. Miss Cryder is one of the three triplet sisters, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Cryder. On her father's side she is related to the Wetmores and other old families and her mother was Miss Ogden. At Grace Church in December will be married Miss Gladys Robinson and James Martin, Jr., whose mother was a Miss Brocaw.

It is now the Lenox season, and it has been much brisker there than for some years. The presence of the diplomats always makes a difference to Lenox, and Sir Mortimer Durand takes an active interest in all social events. Miss Roosevelt is going to the Adirondacks, so that the Lenox people may not see her among them this season. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robinson will give a harvest home at their place near Richfield Springs, at which Miss Roosevelt is expected en route. Mrs. Ogden Mills and her daughters are at Staatsburg. Mr. and Mrs. Gerry and the Misses Gerry at Delaware Lake, Col. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor at Ferncliff, and a settlement of Iselins at New Rochelle. Mr. and Mrs. Louis Iselin have been there all Summer, and C. Oliver Iselin returned this week from Europe.

The fortunate New Yorkers who have leased shootings in the Highlands and in Scotland have been entertaining a great deal this Summer. Mr. John Cadwalader, however, is on this side already. J. Henry Smith and the Bradley Martins have had large house parties, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Ogilvie Haig have been paying a round of visits. Mr. Kennard and his wife, the Countess of Strafford, have had guests at their country seat. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt have returned from Germany, and so have the Anthony Drexels, who have had many civilities from Kaiser and Court. Mr. and Mrs. I. Townsend Burden are visiting in the Highlands, and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies has also been a guest at several large gatherings in the land o' cakes and pie.

Tuxedo, with its house parties, its golf and tennis and squash, and its Autumn Horse Show, will be the most attractive, perhaps, of the suburban resorts. Each ship brings cottagers who have been away for the Summer back to the park. J. Henry Smith will be there this Autumn; Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Lorillard, who have been abroad, will keep open house; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Boissevain will return from abroad and will be at Tuxedo a part of the Autumn before settling in New York. Mrs. Boissevain was much missed at Southampton this Summer. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Alexander will be at Tuxedo until very late, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Mitchell Clark are planning some musicales for the season. Robert Gerry has his pack of hounds near Arden, where the Harrimans have their country seat. Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Harriman arrived from Europe about a fortnight ago.

Lilian Duchess of Marlborough is a visitor here for a short period. Both she and William Waldorf Astor will return very shortly to Europe. Among other departures for foreign shores will be Percy Wyndham and Mr. Raikes of the British Embassy at Washington, who go to fill other posts. The English visitors here have been quietly sightseeing. Sir John and Lady Lister Kaye leave this coming week for their English home.

***

Among the travelers returning last week were Mrs. Sallie Hargous Elliott, I. Townsend Burden, Jr., and, a little earlier, the James Stillmans. Mrs. Hargous Elliott has been at Dinard this Summer, and was one of the guests at the famous fancy dress ball given by Mrs. Hughes Hallett at Monplaisir on Aug. 29. Mrs. Elliott wore a Spanish dancer's costume of rich yellow satin with bands of black velvet. The Marquise de Choiseul, whose mother-in-law was Miss Forbes of this city, was Red Riding Hood; Lady Anglesey was in early Victorian costume, the Baron de Reinach Nerth, who was in this country some years ago, was a clown, and among the men James Winslow, James B. Townsend, Lanier Winslow, Reginald Forbes, and Reginald De Koven—who have since arrived in this country—were in Windsor uniform and plain evening dress. There was a little comedy acted—the stabbing of Marat up to date. Major Vaughn, sitting in a hip bath, reading a newspaper and wearing a most elaborate bath peignoir, was stabbed with an ivory paper knife by Mrs. Studley, who was a very pretty Charlotte Corday.

According to late advices Miss Pauline Astor and Capt. Spender-Clay will be married on Oct. 29 at St. Margaret's, Westminster. The Bishop of Ripon will officiate. There will be a wedding breakfast afterward at the residence of the bride's father on Carleton Terrace.

***

Mr. and Mrs W. Storrs Wells and Miss Nathalie Wells remain at Newport a little while longer. Mr. and Mrs. Wysong have gone to the Berkshires to visit Mrs. William Pollock. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spies Kip have also left Newport. Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont are at Saratoga this week.

TOLD WHILE THE SMOKE CURLS

THE Marquis of Ailesbury, who is a visitor this week to New York and to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, is about sixty-two years of age. He is a member of the Carlton and the Army and Navy Clubs. He is a widower, with one son and two daughters. His son and heir, George William James Chandos, is the Earl of Cardigan, who has served in South Africa. He married in 1903 the daughter of the late John Madden, who is related to the Earl of Leitrim. The family name is Brudenell-Bruce, and one of the ancestors, Sir Thomas Brudenell, was a zealous supporter of the royal cause during the civil wars, and suffered long imprisonment in the Tower. The origin of the family was with Charles Bruce, the fourth Earl of Elgin, who died without issue, and with remainder to his nephew, the Hon. Thomas Brudenell. The Earl of Cardigan is, of course, a Brudenell-Bruce, the other names being joined to his Christian appellation. Lady Cardigan is a cousin of the Earl of Leitrim. Her mother, Lady Caroline Clements, married John Madden.

The Harvard Club members this week are the recipients of hospitalities from other clubs while their clubhouse is being arranged and the party wall taken down between the new addenda and the original building.

Work on the other clubs proceeds slowly. As already said, the Brook Club moved some weeks ago into its new quarters, or, rather, its first home. Already it has become one of the clubs of the town, and is a favorite breakfast place as well as a dinner and supper resort. An excellent table d'hote dinner is served every day. The club has the virtue of being thoroughly cosmopolitan, and, although it is said that a 200-limit membership may be established, there is an eager demand to enter. Thomas B. Clarke, the Secretary, is one of the best known clubmen in New York, and the success at the beginning of the Brook is greatly due to his efforts.

Just another word about the Earl of Dartmouth, who has been the subject of a number of paragraphs in this column and elsewhere. He is a wealthy man and the owner of 20,000 acres of land and two charming country seats in Staffordshire and the West Riding of Yorkshire. Woodsome Hall, his sixteenth century residence in the latter county, is, with its long gabled front, mullioned windows, and balustraded terraces, one of the most picturesque old houses in England. Lord Dartmouth, before he succeeded to the Earldom, was a Conservative whip in the House of Commons. Viscount Lewisham, the heir, rejoices in two Episcopal great-uncles, the Bishops of Lichfield and Southwark.

Another visitor of the week is Lord Claude Hamilton. Everybody seems to know Lord and Lady Claude. They are a very popular couple. She was a Miss Chandos-Pole and has many American friends. He is the second son of the first Duke of Abercorn. His mother, the Duchess of Abercorn, was Lady Louisa Russell. He is Chairman of the Great Eastern Railway. He belongs to the Carlton, to the Travellers, and to Pratts.

Dramatic and musical talent runs in families. Some time ago the several members of the Potter family were referred to in this connection. Another is added to the list. Edward Clarkson Potter, Jr.'s, musical work is said to be excellent. He is young. His father is Edward Clarkson Potter and his mother was Miss Emily Havemeyer, the daughter of the late Theodore Havemeyer. The Havemeyers have much talent also and great musical appreciation, so the young man inherits his gifts from both sides.

Henry Forbes McCreey, who is to marry Miss Byron of Orange, is a broker, a member of the firm of Hard & Rand. He belongs to the Union League Club. This will be his second marriage, his first wife having been a Miss Cardigan. The engagement was announced to a few friends last Spring.

In club life Timothy L. Woodruff has always been conspicuous. He was one of the founders of the Montauk Club in Brooklyn, the Chairman of its Finance and Entertainment Committee, a Director of the Riding and Driving Club, a member of the Union League, the Hamilton, the Crescent Athletic, the Manufacturers', the Republican, and the Logan Club of Brooklyn, and the first President of the Dyker Meadows Golf Club. In New York he is a member of the Union League and University Clubs. Mr. Woodruff has also gone in for outdoor sports of all kinds. He drives four-in-hand excellently well and is one of the best tandem whips in this country. When the bicycle craze was on, he was very fond of exercise with the wheel, and he now has a motor and is interested in automobiling. His son, whose engagement has just been announced, was educated, like Mr. Woodruff, at Phillips Exeter Academy. He has just been graduated from Yale, where his father matriculated in 1879. He is named after his grandfather, John Eastman Woodruff.

Alfred Severin Bourne, whose engagement is announced to Miss Hattie Louise Barnes, is one of the sons of Commodore and Mrs. Frederick G. Bourne. He has just completed his majority, and it is said that his father gave him $1,000,000. The younger branches of the Bourne family are interested in outdoor sports of all kinds. Like the Clark boys, they do not take kindly to music, which was one of the passions of Alfred Corning Clark. Frederick Bourne himself is one of the most talented amateur organists in this country.

It has been determined that all the attendants shall wear Highland costume at the wedding of Bradley Martin, Jr., and Miss Phipps at the castle of Lord Lovat. Whether this will also apply to the bridal party is not stated. All the old Highland customs, will be observed, and the happy pair will be preceded by pipers playing on the bagpipes. The dances will all be Scottish, and there will be numerous flings and reels and strathepeys. Americans are taking most kindly to the Highland costumes and with Londoners are among those who wear kilts in Scotland. The King insists on Highland costume when at Balmoral. J. Henry Smith, it has been reported, has been wearing kilts at his Highland shootings this Summer. Mr. Smith is of Scotch descent, so that this national costume comes natural to him.

M. Guardabassi, who sang here in drawing rooms and in recitals, has been this Summer at Dinard, at the Tableaux Vivants, which were given at the New Club there on Sept. 4. The Marchioness of Anglesey made a great sensation in the tableau "Flaming June." She has Titian hair, and is a very beautiful woman. She is divorced from the Marquis of Anglesey, the sale of whose costumes and effects at his Welsh castle has been the sensation of the London season. The Marchioness was the daughter of Sir George Chetwynd. The entertainment at the New Club was preceded, a few evenings, by the great fancy dress ball given by Mrs.

NEW FROCKS, COATS, AND HATS

THERE promises to be this Autumn and Winter a revival of capes or of wide cloaks, half cape, half cloak, with enormous sleeves, for wear with the gowns whose sleeves are large above the elbows and wide about the shoulders; no other wraps are appropriate for such frocks, and when huge sleeves were worn some years ago capes of all sorts were fashionable.

During the last month a number of capes were seen at the French watering places, and large-sleeved cloaks are now being offered in Paris. Many of them have long-pointed hoods. These garments are made up not only in silk and lace and cloth, but in furs. The buttons for these garments when made of cloth are horn, and are newer and therefore considered smarter than those of pearl. Some of the cloaks with hood-capes have hood effects about the sleeves. For example, one such coat has enormously wide and perfectly straight sleeves, and at the outside of the arm one section, cut much longer than the rest, of the sleeves, turns back and has its sides folded in and the point caught with a tassel; this gives the same hood effect to the sleeves that the cape has.

These loose wraps come in length as far, at least, as the knees. The new shoulder effects in coats and wraps is the broad and square, but not too square. Those who are what is termed "high-shouldered" should avoid these effects. The perfect shoulder slopes downward from the neck and can stand the square effect at the shoulder edges, but the shoulders not so sloping are made to look deformed by the squared finish.

+ + +

A smart walking costume just from Paris is a dark blue serge skirt and coat. The skirt has a group of plaits down the front, another at the back, and two on each side that extend from top to bottom, and between these the skirt is cut to flare around the feet. The coat is almost tightfitting, and has long skirts almost to the knees; these are plain. At the waist line there is a row of seven large, blue crochet buttons, one being below the waist line. Six inches from the waist line the coat is cut out to show a guimpe of ecru linon, with its stock edged with embroidery in blues and tans. The edges of the opening in the coat over the guimpe are plain, but underneath the edges, out of sight, are a series of silk covered rings, through which blue silk braid a half inch wide is laced from top to bottom, making five Xs across the guimpe. Where the braid stops at the outside and lower part of the opening the ends are concealed by loops and drops of blue silk passementerie. The sleeves droop in voluminous folds from shoulders to elbows, and are plaited into cuffs eight inches deep at the outside by six inside of the serge. These cuffs have blue crochet buttons at the outside, and blue silk braid is caught to form tiny crosses or Xs at the inside, the ends being fastened at the tops of the cuffs under buttons.

Another smart street costume is strongly suggestive of military modes in its cut and its braid decorations. It is a golden-brown chiffon broadcloth, and starts in a tightfitting coat which extends almost to the knees. The coat is perfectly plain, save that in the front there is a row of braid loops on each side. These side-fronts, which are tight over the hips, open over a waistcoat of cream-colored cloth, with a stock and wide cravat, with scarf ends of yellow-colored lace. There are gold buttons on the waistcoat, which comes a little below the waistline. The coat fronts are fastened securely to the vest and flare out only a trifle. On each side a row of braid ornaments extend from the neck to the bottom of the coat. Each is six inches long—the length running, of course, across the coat. Each is formed of double loops of silk braid an inch wide and somewhat darker than the coat, and these terminate at the edge of the coat fronts under large brown velvet buttons having raised crochet centres. About the neck of the coat, which is only slightly rounded out, is a very narrow turned down collar of dark brown velvet embroidered in gold thread. The sleeves are wide coat sleeves, and end half way from elbows to wrists, and are finished with wide, flaring cuffs of brown velvet, each having a row of the large buttons at the top, and each having a small hollow square outlined on the lower edge and centre with a strip of brown velvet embroidered in gold thread. From these sleeves fall full flounces of heavy yellow lace, matching the cravat. The skirt just clears the ground, and has a double skirt effect. Around the bottom a plain, circular section of the cloth is set on to the silk foundation. This flounce section has a half dozen strips of brown braid a quarter of an inch wide and a quarter of an inch apart around the bottom, and at the left side of the front two of the huge crochet and velvet buttons are set on, one above the other. Just above this the overhanging skirt proper, similarly braided, is slashed up for six inches, and the corners of the slash are rounded. Two large buttons are set on about the slash in a line with the two below. At the top the skirt is skin tight, being gored to fit. A brown tricorne hat in shaded brown straw, trimmed with shaded yellow velvet roses, has been imported to wear with this sartorial creation.

Mrs. George Lawrence Myers was dining with her mother, Mrs. Shaw, in a curious but graceful robe of black chiffon voile, the skirt of which fitted closely and trailed, and was composed of shirred sections. The shirring was very close and full. The shirrings themselves were run in groups of three or four, and quite close together, covering, say, a space of two inches wide; the fine gathers between varied in width. The lowest section of fine folds near the hem was perhaps nine inches wide, and from that these narrowed gradually to the waist line. With this shirred costume, Mrs. Myers, who is very slender, wore a smart French coat of black taffeta, tightfitting as to the part forming the back from waist to neck, and held in place in the back by a tape tied at the front. This coat had wide collar and lapels, and long slashed skirts. Its sleeves were very large and formed flat wide sections from the elbows, with wide cuffs. The coat was plain. Her large, round, low-crowned hat was formed of fine black lace ruffles.

Mrs. Ernest Iselin, (Miss Pauline Whittier.) who returned a few days ago from her bridal tour abroad, has been wearing some pretty frocks. She lunched at Sherry's one day with her father, Gen. Whittier, in a simple dark blue foulard, speckled with small white dots. The dress was gathered at the waist line and rounded out from the shoulder tops to permit the wearing of a tucked white guimpe; the edges of the bodice top were finished by two tiny ruffles of the blue. The sleeves, clinging at the tops and flaring at the elbows, also ended, over white undersleeves, in two tiny ruffles, and the full flowing skirt, which touched all the way around to the back, where it was four or five inches longer, had two six-inch overlapping flounces. Her dark hat, with one side uplifted, showed a pink rose at the rise.

In the evening, dining at the same place with her father and husband, Mrs. Iselin was in a pure white frock, a tucked organdy trimmed with minute ruffles and bands of exquisitely fine hand embroidery. The skirt of this frock also trailed. It had a deep hem, above which were three or four narrow tucks, then came an eight-inch band of the embroidery, each edge outlined by an inch-wide frill of plain organdy. Several inches above this band a cluster of half-inch tucks, seven or eight in all, went around the skirt with the inch-wide ruffles outlining the outer line; three or four inches above this band came still another group similarly outlined. Around the waist the skirt was gathered slightly. The tucked bodice had a bolero entirely of embroidery, and this also had an inch-wide organdy ruffle around its edges and armholes. The sleeves of the bodice were tucked and embroidered and the upper sleeves fell loose at the elbows, the outside being longer than the inner and cut in a round drapery. Almost tight undersleeves extended from elbows to wrists, and these were formed of narrow bands of embroidery edged with the inch-wide ruffles and having groups of tucks between. Her large white hat slanted up a little at the front and was turned far up on the left side, where pale pink roses were caught.

Morning gown of light gray serge trimmed with bands and whorls of shaded grays. Gray hat with scarlet and gray quills.

Walking costumes of tan chiffon voile with dark brown velvet accessories edged with white silk braid.

A quaint hat, similar to the ones usually worn by Edna May, forms a satisfying setting for Miss Elsie Waterbury's demure and girlish face. It is almost flat, slants up a little at the front, and the brim projects each side about five inches and as much in front—it has no back brim at all—the crossing strings that tie under the chin making the sole back finish. This hat is made of black straw and on the outside of the brim over each ear is a huge, loose-petaled white rose; under the brim at the same point are loose-petaled pink roses. Pale pink liberty satin ribbon is twisted around the crown and crosses at the back just below the inch-high crown and is carried two inches each way toward each ear, and after being fastened there turns again to the lower edge of the back, opposite the first crossing, and crosses the second time, the ends being carried around under the ears and tied in a bow at the front with ends a few inches long.

The gown this picturesque little chapeau of Miss Waterbury's tops is an apparently simple but really elaborate gown of embroidered white linen, made with an Irish crochet yoke, and a trailing skirt. The skirt is cut to fit closely about the hips without tucks or gathers and is embroidered at two-inch intervals with tiny eyelet holes in the open-work English embroidery. About the bottom of the skirt an applied flounce is so skillfully joined to the jupe that it seems merely a wide flare, and this flounce is covered with oval medallions, outlined with the very open English embroidery and having a set design in the centre of each; the medallions are perhaps eight inches long by six wide. The bodice has a stock and V-shaped yoke of Irish crochet, and the bodice proper is composed of medallions in the openwork embroidery. A medallion comes under each arm and there are two in the back and three in the front, the centre one at the front being a couple of inches higher than those at the sides. Between these medallions there is solid embroidery. The sleeves each have a medallion on the outside between the armhole and the elbow, and below the elbows there are three of these, another wider section being set on to the upper sleeve. The back or lower seam of this added lower section is left open and from it hang two sections—an outer and under—of Irish crochet, some twelve inches long by six deep. These lace pieces hang absolutely straight and form a rich and unusual finish for a linen gown. There is a girdle of pale pink liberty satin ribbon, matching the hue of the roses under the brim of the black chapeau. This forms a double V in the front, the upper one being the shorter; two ends hang from it toward the left.

Mrs. Gouverneur Kortright, recently returned from Europe, has a black and white shepherd's plaid Eton coat and round-length skirt with a novel arrangement of white braid as a decoration. The coat has a deep collar or inset of white trimmed with black. The skirt is laid in rather wide side plaits, and starting from a point perhaps twenty inches from the waistline at the back and slanting down in front to within eighteen inches of the skirt's edge are a series of motifs in quarter-inch white braid. These motifs are placed at the edges of the wide plaits, apparently to hold them in place, and are formed of four-inch loops radiating from a circular centre formed by curling the braid for the loops. The motifs are shaped like those on gowns worn by the former generation. A few inches above the bottom of the skirt plaits, and perhaps twelve inches apart, is another series of motifs, but these are formed of two strips of braid, the whole design being about six inches long, the centre running straight for three inches and then curved at each end into a three-looped design. These cross loops run across the plaits in a straight line. White motifs similar to those on the skirt are used to hold the plaits of the sleeves in place; these sleeves show their greatest fullness at the elbows, and are shaped into white cuffs braided in black.

Another of Mrs. Kortright's gowns is an exceedingly pretty pale-gray chiffon cloth, and with it she usually wears a purple hat. This hat is high and extremely narrow, the front forming a rounded point. It is purple straw, and the brim, which rolls to the crown, has every two inches a motif of lighter purple straw. At the left, starting from the front and ending just below the short brim at the back, is a single full purple ostrich feather. The gown's skirt touches all the way around and hangs in graceful folds from the waist, where it is gathered slightly clear around. At the bottom there is a hem six inches wide, and fourteen inches above it a tuck four inches deep; ten inches above this is a second tuck three inches wide. The effect is of three deep tucks. The bodice is gathered at the bottom over a tight gray silk lining, and there is an arrangement of the gray material with white lace at the top. The sleeves are rather close from the shoulders to a couple of inches above the elbows, where full flounces are set in, gathered at the top, and having three tucks, each about an inch wide at the bottom; these flounces fall away from the close gray undersleeves with white lace edges, like tiny skirts. In the front of the bodice the chiffon cloth is allowed to blouse a bit over the fitted lining. The girdle is gray chiffon cloth in folds.

Mrs. C. Ledyard Blair, lunching with Mr. Blair at a fashionable Fifth Avenue restaurant, wore a plaid costume, an uncommon plaid, because it was large and broken. The size of each block was fully two inches across, but the blocking, of dark blue and pure white, was so gradually done by alternate fine threads of the chiffon voile material that a soft blending of color was the result. The skirt was a very simple one of round length and had at its lower extreme edge a two-inch band of plain blue. At the top it was laid in wide and very flat plaits. The Eton coat was worn over a plain blouse of sheer white linen and was cut to fit the back, to almost meet in front and to hang closely but loosely across the front, and it stopped some two or three inches above the belt. This belt, by the way, was a bit of perfection in detail. It was wider in the back than in the front, where it closed with a blue tab and blue buttons, and was of the plain material, except the centre of it, which was formed of a strip perhaps six inches long and three wide. Through the centre of this blue cloth was a strap of light and medium blue Bulgarian embroidery an inch shorter and an inch narrower than the plain blue section, each end of which was fastened by a large button of dark blue crochet with a pale blue centre.

The little coat had running up from its plain stitched edges a series of little tabs of plain blue; these were three inches long by one wide and were an inch and a half apart, the upward turned tips ending in points. A three-inch band of the solid dark blue outlined the round neck and extended down each side of the open fronts, and turning back on this band were narrow tabs of the shaded blue embroidery, ending a little within the outer edges of the dark blue border. Each of these shaded tabs was held in place by one of the large crochet buttons in two shades of blue, the dark matching the plain blue cloth used as borders. The sleeves were moderately large and were plain from the armholes to a little above the elbows, where they were shaped into two-inch bands of dark blue, having tabs of blue embroidery meeting in their centre tops and with a fancy button at the end of each tab. Her small oval turban was pale blue, a coarse palm straw braid, one wide and long ostrich tip in deep blue was placed across the crown, the dark quill being thrust through the rolled brim above the right ear, from which point the tip trailed across the crown and over side, where it ended a bit back of the left ear. Mrs. Blair also had with her a three-quarter length coat of blue cloth with turned back cuffs and bands about the shoulders of blue, piped with cream and trimmed with numerous bronze buttons.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was at the Grand Central Station a week ago waiting for a train. She looks much better off the stage than on. Her dark-brown hair is naturally curly, and is beginning to show the marked presence of gray. She wore a pongee skirt and blue organdie blouse, and carried over her arm a pongee Eton coat that matched the skirt. The skirt was a round length, and every six inches there were four inch-wide plaits an inch apart running from the waist to the hem. These plaits were released perhaps eight inches from the hem of the skirt, and the skirt itself fitted very closely and was scant. The pale blue muslin blouse was tucked at intervals of two inches with three or four quarter-inch tucks, their own width apart. In the front fine vines in white embroidery were worked between the rows of tucks. The sleeves, which were quite small, had lengthwise tucks to match the waist, and the cuffs were embroidered, as was also the narrow turned-over collar of blue organdie. The Eton coat had three rows of fine pongee-colored braid around its edges, and an inch inside of this border came a similar row. Down the front tabs of blue piped with pongee, and having their ends caught with a series of tiny buttons, formed the ornament. The large bishop sleeves were gathered into shaped cuffs, piped with turquois to match the blue used in the front. Her small brown toque was trimmed with a mixed brown and white ostrich plume, placed on the right side from front to back, and on the left side near the back a metal buckle, with a fold of brown velvet running through it, was placed.

One of Mrs. James G. Gerard's pretty dinner frocks has leaf designs in silver and black over its surface. The leaves on the bodice are shaped like blackberry leaves, but larger; they are outlined with a fine line of black and threads of silver on a white background. On the skirt the leaves are much smaller and are the single leaves of the beechnut. The bodice yoke, skirt flounce, and sleeves are composed of silver and black on white, and just between the yoke and the rather close sleeve there is an opening three inches long by half that width, showing the flesh. With this frock Mrs. Gerard wore at dinner the other evening a large white chip hat, the top trimmed with folds of pale blue and white tulle and huge pink-tinged roses showing in the flaring front.

Mrs. Algernon Boyesen, who was Miss Adelaide Barclay, and whose elopement with Mr. Boyesen, a son of the novelist, H. H. Boyesen, was an event of a year ago, was lunching with her husband at Sherry's on her recent return from abroad. She wore with a dark blue coat and skirt a very full and pouching white blouse and a quaint little hat of dark blue straw, small but turned up at unusual points and showing dull red roses under the brim against her elaborately waved dark coiffure. Mrs. Boyesen is very girlish in figure and carriage and her gown was also of youthful mode. The Eton coat of the costume hung out loosely from the full white underblouse and the flaring sleeves were exceptionally wide with the sleeves of the underblouse forming huge white puffs above the wrists. Both skirt and blouse coat were plain except for a few lines of braid or strapping.

A lightweight broadcloth costume worn in town one day last week had a round skirt composed of three scant overlapping flounces of the cloth, each flounce having its lower edge embroidered in silk to match the color of the cloth, and above each line of scallops was a fine geometrical pattern in embroidery. The Eton coat was short, with flowing sleeves, and its edges showed the same embroidered designs as the skirt. An underblouse of brown chiffon cloth over silk exactly matching the broadcloth was worn, and showed both above and below the coat. This underblouse was accordion-plaited. A girdle of the cloth clasped with a bronze buckle was worn, and a brown turban in shaded brown feathers topped it.

Mrs. John Henry Towne, in town for several days, wore one day a shirtwaist costume of creamy tan taffeta, with fine crossing lines in brown. The bodice was laid in tiny boxplaits at the top that extended half way to the girdle. These plaits were three-quarters of an inch wide, and that distance from each other. The sleeves of the full bishop model, had narrow boxplaits at the top, sagging puffs below the elbows, and cuffs to match. The skirt had groups of three or four of the three-quarter-inch boxplaits running from the waist to a distance of, say, thirty inches below the waist, and at that point, between these groups, started other groups of plaits, which were released, as were the longer groups, inches below, and gave a full flounce effect. Tiny whorls of fine white braid headed the tops of these flounce plaits, which were sections of the silk plaited and set on the jupe. Similar whorls were used on the sleeves and bodice. Topping this was a small, dark-brown hat trimmed with white wings and draped with a brown chiffon veil. One evening at dinner at Sherry's Mrs. Towne was gowned in a cream-colored taffeta costume showing surplice effects on the bodice, and otherwise it was a modified 1830 frock. The skirt hung in deep plaits from waist to floor, and the full, blouselike bodice had full folds crossing in at the front and showing at the top the guimpe of repoussé lace over chiffon. The sleeves were extremely full and puffy from the shoulder seams to a bit below the elbows, where they ended in narrow and double-ruched ruffles above a succession of three or four narrow six-inch raffles of the repoussé lace on a chiffon and silk foundation. Her large hat was rolled at the side; it was black and was trimmed with a long ostrich plume.

Mrs. H. Carroll Brown is somewhat taller and larger than her sister, Mrs. Gerard; her hair and eyes are brown, and her skin fair and faintly tinged with pink. The pink tones of her skin were brought out admirably by a large round dull pink hat laden with ostrich plumes of the same shade. Unlike Mrs. Gerard's chapeau, Mrs. Brown's was not turned up, nor did it flare at all from her face, being set almost straight on her head. Her frock was a white organdie, having organdie medallions, oval in shape, and containing wreaths of pale pink roses set around the bottom of the skirt and around the lower half of the bodice. These medallions were outlined by white ruchings and several three-inch ruchings went around the skirt. The bodice was rather full, the upper part of plain white organdie and lace, and just above the girdle a row of medallions, each some six or seven inches long, the sides almost touching, went around it. There were several rows of these medallions around the bottom of the skirt, and each medallion was its own width from the next, and those in the top row capped the empty spaces in the lower row.

An odd hat seen the same evening at the same place and topping a brown silk frock made in a voluminous and baggy fashion was a huge, flaring poke bonnet of brown chip trimmed with blue roses of a shade that turned greenish under the gas light. Several of these roses rung on the brim at the back of this chapeau and back of the ears, and were caught against the halo flare in the front. The young woman's wrap was a short Japanese kimono of black satin embroidered in odd blue roses and having a deep blue border.

OF the many women attached to the household of their British Majesties none is more interesting, if as much so, as the Hon. Charlotte Knollys, who for some thirty-four years has been the almost inseparable companion of Queen Alexandra, and from whom she had seldom been parted for even a day. She is the sister of Lord Knollys, who for thirty-four years also has been private secretary and confidential friend of the King. One of the Knollyses, Sir Francis, married Kitty Cary, first cousin to Queen Elizabeth. She was with Anne Boleyn, another aunt, on the morning of the latter's execution. The father of Miss Knollys was made Treasurer and Controller of the present King and Queen's household on their marriage and while they were the Prince and Princess of Wales. Lord Knollys, who was named Francis after his historic ancestor, was private secretary to his father while the latter had charge of the Prince of Wales's household. Lord Knollys was considered the handsomest bachelor in the household, but seventeen years ago he married, and his daughter, who is a godchild of the King and Queen, was named Louvima, the odd name being compounded from the first syllables of the names of the Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud, the Princesses themselves originating it. From the above it would appear that Miss Knollys, from her ancestry and connections, would naturally assume an important place in the royal household.

Miss Knollys was raised to the rank of a baron's daughter soon after King Edward succeeded to the title, so that she might remain in attendance on the Queen. She is not only a lady in waiting, but private secretary to her Majesty, and her duties, unlike those of the maids of honor, mistress of robes, and ladies in waiting, require her continuous attendance. She is the only one of Alexandra's ladies who goes with her on her visits to Denmark. She is not a pretty woman, but has a kindly face, and is noted for her goodness of heart. It is her duty to go through her Majesty's mail and to examine into the merits of petitions and applications for aid. She will go to much trouble personally to ascertain if an applicant is deserving of help, but she always leans to generosity. Alexandra is devoted to her, and the Christmas after she became Queen altered the entire plans of the royal household for the holidays because Miss Knollys was ill; rather than leave her devoted secretary to a lonely holiday season in London the Queen remained with her, though in doing so she disappointed her children and grandchildren who were at Sandringham for the Christmas season. Other reasons were given out for the changes in plan, but it finally leaked out that the real cause was the illness of her Majesty's devoted companion.

John D. Rockefeller and his three daughters, Mrs. Charles Strong, Mrs. E. Parmelee Prentice, and Mrs. Harold McCormick, are all musical and music was one of their few enjoyments, for the Rockefeller girls were brought up in the severest and simplest of ways, dancing, theatres, and many other simple pleasures not being included in their somewhat Puritanic life. John D. Rockefeller plays the violin, and is a fair performer. Before the daughters were married they, with their father, formed a quartet. Bessie (Mrs. Strong) played the second violin; Edith, who married Mr. McCormick, was the 'cellist, and Alta, now Mrs. Prentice, was the pianist. Mrs. Prentice was for a long time prior to her marriage a member of an amateur musical society that met at the houses of the various members.

Lady Ludlow is largely responsible for the bringing to the fore of the peridot as a jewel of fashion. She wore one of these now highly valued gems set in diamonds as a pendant among her jewels at her wedding a year ago. Her emeralds are among the most beautiful in London. She was the widow of the eccentric Lord Howard de Walden, whom she, when Miss Blanche Holden, married, though he was thirty years older. Her son, who is devoted to her and who gave her away last year when she married the second time, owns any amount of property in London, with an income of about a million dollars a year.

Mrs. George Batten, a great beauty of the Spanish type, is termed "the April Grandmother" because of her still youthful appearance and her comparative lack of years. Her daughter, Mrs. Austin Harris, has a child several years old. Mrs. Batten delights in handsome jewelry, and has a hair ornament celebrated on both continents. It is a remarkable Chinese bird brought from Peking; it has a pearl body, green jade wings, and from its beak swings a huge ruby. Another of her ornaments is a necklace of uncut stones—emeralds, rubies, and pearls—from the Far East. She is very musical, and her spirited singing of French chansons is much admired; she also plays the guitar and piano and composes ballads. Her dress is as marked in style as her jewels, and is chiefly her own adaptation of French fancies. Mrs. Batten is thoroughly posted on the Italian and German as well as French and English literature of the day, and is a great favorite in English society.

The Tea Palace of the Japanese exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition is one of the most interesting sights to women visitors. The chief tea table is presided over by Miss Mine Abe, who is the instructress of a school for teaching the "tea ceremony" in Tokio. She wears a kimono and an obi and kneels at the table, where she carefully wipes every utensil with a red fushasma pulled from her obi. She never varies in her gestures, each turn of the hand and movement of utensils having been so carefully studied that they are second nature. Tiny rice cakes are served with the tea, which in this palace is the Shidzuokakn; it has a coloring of the most delicate amber. There are two processes of preparing tea; here we pour boiling water on the leaves, but another way is to place the water, after it has come to the boiling point, into a cooling pot, the leaves being added and the whole allowed to remain there five minutes.

At the other tea house, which is in the Chinese exhibit, Formosa tea is served by trousered little Chinese girls. The tea served here is the favorite Oolong; one side of the leaves is green and the other black. The tea is prepared still differently by the Chinese, who put in each cup the proper amount of leaves and then pour boiling water on it, immediately covering the cup with the saucer until it is steeped, when it is drunk from the cup in which it is made. Boiling water is added to the leaves if a second cup is desired. Neither Japanese nor Chinese add milk or sugar. Scented tea is a novelty, but seldom taken here. To make it, orange or jasmine flowers (fresh, of course) are mixed with the tea and allowed to remain twelve hours, when they are removed. Java and Siam are the principal consumers of scented teas. The Chinese add to certain teas perfumed powders to impart not only a more agreeable flavor, but a pleasant odor.

The East Indian tea house is gorgeous in Benares brass and silver, and superb teakwood tables, while daggers, swords, and scimetars ornament the walls. Pekoe and Souchong teas are served. The Orange Pekoe is the first picking of tea and contains no tannin. The Pekoe, which is the second picking, has a little tannin and is the second quality, while the Souchong is the strongest in tannin and is the third of the pickings. In India the leaves are picked by hand, but are machine cured, rolled and fired.

In the Ceylon Court, Ceylonese teas are served by Singhalese. The Assam and Hybrid teas predominate, and Peking, Souchin, and Congaous teas are also used.

An American company has a building modeled on the plan of a Russian country house for the serving of Russian teas by peasant women. Russian china is displayed on narrow shelves along the walls. The tea tables are set with gold-background china with scroll designs in red and blue. Teacups for the women are painted with Winter scenes, and tea glasses for the men have silver holders. Caravan tea, brought from China, is made in silver or brass samovars, their tops filled with burning charcoal.

The pretty Russian girl from Odessa who presides over the Russian tea house table has the decidedly American name of Fanny Sherman. She is a noted singer in her own country, and when the exposition was opened formed one of the Russian village troupe. She wears a gorgeous native costume while serving tea. The short, full skirt is a light strawberry colored satin brocaded in velvet peonies. The top is a sack-shaped garment of gold and white-hued damask; it is voluminous and is gathered and attached below the bust to a broad silver braid, and above the silver braid is a white muslin guimpe with full sleeves. She wears a necklace of white and blue beads and a long pink coral chain. On her head is a high coronet made of gold tissue worked in gold paillettes and having a fringe drooping low over her forehead.

A COMMODORE'S TIP.

COMMODORE E. C. BENEDICT and his Wall Street friend, L. D. Huntington, were fishing together recently when a casual acquaintance in another boat who thought it a golden opportunity to get a valuable tip manoeuvred his craft so that it floated by quite near them.

"How do you think things are going, Commodore?" he asked, eagerly.

"Well," said Benedict, who is an enthusiastic steam yachtsman, but has a holy horror of naphtha, "sailboats may go down, but naphtha launches are more than likely to go up."

THE BANK STATEMENT.

More New Records for Loans and Deposits—Surplus Fast Fading Away.

The bank statement made new high records for loans and deposits, and the increase in the reserve required, added to the loss of cash to the interior, reduced the surplus by over $9,000,000.

Thirty-two banks contributed to the increase of $10,472,600 in loans, five of them more than $500,000, while only twenty-one banks curtailed loans, two of them a little over $500,000 each.

The loss of cash exceeded the preliminary estimates, in consequence of large transfers through the Sub-Treasury and direct shipments on Friday to the South and Pacific Coast. Cotton is being hurried to foreign and domestic markets, and the demand for currency at the South is increasing.

Increasing loans and parting with cash at the rate of over a million dollars a day for each item, if continued three weeks longer, will leave very little remaining of the surplus, and may create a demand for money at stiff rates on the part of people who would not borrow at the nominal rates of two months ago.

There were seventeen banks with less than 25 per cent. reserve, seven National and ten State. This compares with seventeen banks below the reserve required in the preceding week, twenty-five in the week ended Sept. 19, 1903; thirty-five in the corresponding week of 1902, and twenty-one in 1901. The total deficit of these seventeen banks was $1,739,350, which is equivalent to the reserve required upon deposits of $6,957,400 out of the total of $1,224,206,600.

Money on call loaned on the Stock Exchange last week at 1½@2 per cent., averaging 1¾ per cent. Time money was firmer and in better demand than for some months. Rates are 2½ per cent. for sixty days, 3½ per cent. for ninety days, and 3¾@4 per cent for four to six months. Commercial paper was quoted at 4@4½ per cent. for indorsements, 4½@5 per cent. for prime single names, and 5@5½ per cent. for good names. Demaud sterling ranged from $4.8665@$4.8675 to $4.8695@$4.87, closing steady at the lower rate. There was exported to Argentina $500,000 gold coin.

In the corresponding week of 1903 money on call loaned at 2@2½ per cent., averaging 2¼ per cent. Time money was quoted at 4½ per cent. for sixty days, 5 per cent. for ninety days, and 5½@5¾ per cent. for four to six months. Commercial paper was in light demand at 6 per cent. for indorsements, 6@6½ per cent. for prime single names, and 6½@7 per cent. for good names. Demand sterling ranged from $4.8590@$4.86 to $4.8650@$4.8660, closing strong at the higher rate.

A HARVEST FOR BROKERS.

Cheap Money Adds a Nice Profit to the Commission's Account.

The last two months have been harvest months, not only in the Western grainfields, but also in the pastures of Wall Street. The harvesters have been the brokers, and as a result their entire attitude toward life in general and the Street in particular has been changed. Where three short months ago empty customers' chairs stood yawning, imitating the weary clerks who had nothing to do, while the heads of the firm figured that it was cheaper to go to Europe and close up the office than to stay and pay salaries, everything is now bustle and activity. The chairs are filled with speculating customers, the clerks have hardly time to go out to luncheon, and the brokers are taking lessons in addition instead of subtraction.

While, of course, the commission account has been adding to their deposits at the bank, there has been another source of income even more certain and equally as lucrative, while involving a minimum amount of work. That has been the interest account. One of the chief marvels in the advancing market has been the cheapness of money. Generally when there is great activity in the market and speculative loans call heavily on the banks such loans are negotiated on a basis of 4 and 5 per cent., and even more. Now every one who buys on margins has to pay interest on the difference of the amount of cash deposited by him and the cost of the stocks he bought, this difference being advanced by the broker with the purchased stocks as security. On 100 shares of Pennsylvania, bought at 125 with a 10-point margin, the purchaser has to pay interest on $750 of the broker's money, although if call money goes above that figure he, of course, advances his rates to his customers. It is apparent that if the broker can borrow funds at 1 per cent, even while charging his customers 6 per cent., he makes the difference of 5 per cent., while if he has to pay 4 per cent. his margin of profit is only 2 per cent.

As money has been cheap and business has been big, this interest account has been a good thing for the brokers. If a commission house carried a margin account of $1,000,000 for one month, which is busy times represents only an average amount of business, the resulting profit, due to the difference between the 1 per cent. paid by it and the 6 per cent. charged to customers, would equal $4,000, enough to buy gasoline for a yacht.

COMMUNITY OF INTEREST.

New Lines to the Pacific Coast May Endanger This Idea.

Wall Street has not heard much recently about the community of interest idea; certain direction has been given to railroad building which has tended to make a sudden end to the talk of harmonious relations between the great railroad systems. The latest plan. Aside from the recent purchase of the control of the Chicago and Alton for account of the Rock Island interests, demonstrating the aggressive policy of that system, there have come to light plans for western extensions of several of the railroads which now end at or just beyond the Missouri River, and which have been feeling the effect of this limitation. The railroads referred are the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and the Missouri Pacific. Reports of the St. Paul's plans to build to the Pacific Coast are not exactly new. Some four years ago that line completed preliminary surveys across the Rocky Mountains, the line to go north of the Black Hills and through the Shoshone Mountains, just above the Indian reservation of that name. The facts were printed at the time, but were denied. Since then, however, the St. Paul has been gradually pushing its line through the Dakota prairies in the direction mentioned, and while it is certain that the road does not intend to make a sudden build a continuation of its present lines, which is to land it in or near San Francisco before three years are out. This road, which is to be known as the Western Pacific, is to traverse the Beckwith Pass, and will meet the Denver and Rio Grande near Thistle, at the south end of the Great Salt Lake.

These plans of construction would seem to indicate that the relations between the great systems of the West are by no means quite as harmonious as they were and as it is attempted to make them appear to be. The Gould system is probably beginning to feel the effect of the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific alliance, and from what is known of the Gould characteristics it is unlikely that they feel happy in their present position. That everything is not perfectly lovely was further indicated a few days ago when a prominent banker, commenting on the Alton purchase, remarked: "Well, you know, in war one must expect reverses."

Whether the carrying out of these plans of construction will result in seriously disturbing the railroad situation in the far West, remains to be seen. That the ultimate result will be beneficial to all concerned seems, however, certain. Indeed, it becomes

GREAT BURNERS OF COAL.

United States Leads Consumers—Production and Consumption of the Fuel.

From The London News.

Those who are interested in the production, consumption, and price of coal will find a veritable feast of figures in a Parliamentary paper issued through the Board of Trade yesterday. The return deals, not only with various aspects of coal production in the British Empire, but gives comparisons with the principal foreign countries in each year from 1883 to 1903. The first table gives enormous figures as to the production of coal in the five principal coal-producing countries of the world during the past three years, and it may be of interest to set them out thus:

	1901. Tons.	1902. Tons.	1903. Tons.
United Kingdom	219,047,000	227,005,000	230,334,000
Germany	108,539,000	107,474,000	116,638,000
France	31,634,000	29,365,000	34,818,000
Belgium	22,213,000	22,877,000	23,912,000
United States	261,274,000	269,277,000	320,963,000

The English and American tons contain 2,240 pounds, the German, French, and Belgian ton means a metric ton of 2,204 pounds, and the German, French, and Belgium figures for 1903 are provisional.

There is a great variation in price. For instance, the average value per ton in the five above-mentioned countries in 1902 was: United Kingdom, 8s. 2¾d.; Germany, 8s. 10¼d.; France, 11s. 8¾d.; Belgium, 10s. 6¾d.; United States, 5s. 8¼d.

It is explained that these figures represent a fall of about 1s. 2d. per ton in the United Kingdom, of 6d. per ton in Germany, 11d. per ton in France, and 1s. 8d. per ton in Belgium, but a rise of 2d. per ton in the United States. The provisional figures available for 1903 indicate a further fall of 7d. per ton in the United Kingdom, and 3d. per ton in Germany, while in the United States there has been a further rise of 10d. per ton.

The consumption of coal in some of the chief consuming countries is shown in the following statement, in which the countries are given in the order of importance as coal consumers:

	1902. Tons.	1903. Tons.
United States	265,694,000	316,022,000
United Kingdom	166,608,000	168,632,000
Germany	95,363,000	*103,114,000
France	41,980,000	*40,560,000
Russia	*18,762,000	*18,374,000
Belgium	19,799,000	*21,432,000
Austria-Hungary	17,535,000	Not available

*Provisional figures.

The consumption of coal per head of the population in the United States has now reached the level of that in the United Kingdom, as appears from a statement which gives the following figures for 1903: United Kingdom, 3.93; United States, 3.93; Belgium, 3.07; Germany, 1.75; France, 1.19; Russia, 0.13.

Belgium is the only country in which the per capita consumption of coal at all approximates to that of the United Kingdom and America.

It appears that no fewer than 46,622,700 tons of coal, coke, and patent fuel were exported from the United Kingdom last year.

The 11,390,413 tons of coal consumed for locomotive purposes in the United Kingdom last year were made up as follows: England, 9,231,563 tons; Scotland, 1,790,758; Ireland, 357,092. British India consumed 2,120,000 tons.

The total quantity of coal brought to London last year was 15,087,787 tons, of which 7,000,000 were brought by railway, 15,000 by canal, and nearly 8,000,000 by sea—coastwise.

Last year Japan consumed 103,000 tons of British and 17,000 tons of foreign coal; Russia 1,220,000 tons of British and 1,834,000 of foreign coal.

In 1903 there were 3,000 tons of foreign coal consumed in this country.

BANK FIGURES.

The following table shows the amount of surplus reserve held by the Clearing House banks at the end of each week in 1904 and at the corresponding dates in 1903 and 1902:

	1904.	1903.	1902.

SHEPARD SEEMS TO LEAD; HILL IS AGAINST HIM

Tammany, Friend of Farmers, Holds Out for Palmer.

NOT MUCH CHANCE FOR JEROME

Parker's Attitude a Subject of Speculation—Grout Men Say They Will Make No Deals.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Sept. 18.—With the men who really control the Democratic organization of the State away from here, the discussion which has been going on today about the probable make-up of the State ticket can hardly be said to have resulted in anything sufficiently tangible to warrant prediction.

Among the delegates here who are not shouting for some particular candidate, but who are simply watching the course of events and waiting to hear what the big leaders will say to-morrow, the opinion seems to prevail that Edward M. Shepard now stands the best chance of securing the nomination for Governor. The impression seems to be in the air that if the convention really nominates the man who will have the best chance to win, as Mr. Hill has declared that it will, Mr. Shepard will get the prize.

It seems to be very generally felt that if Mr. Shepard gets the nomination for Governor, the nomination for Lieutenant Governor will be given to George M. Palmer of Schoharie. If the nomination should go up-State then the Lieutenant Governor probably will be selected from the Greater New York. In that contingency the two names which seem to lead for the second place on the ticket are those of Randolph Guggenheimer, former President of the Municipal Council, and Representative Francis Burton Harrison.

Although the Tammany men who are here are declaring that Palmer is their first choice for Governor, there is an impression that Mr. Palmer is merely being used as a stalking horse for Mr. Shepard, and that Tammany's real purpose is to secure the nomination of Shepard and Palmer.

There is little likelihood of a ballot being taken in the convention on the Gubernatorial nomination. It seems to be the general desire that a ticket should be agreed upon beforehand. The explanation of this desire is the apprehension that is felt by all of the leaders that if a slate is not agreed upon beforehand there might be speeches made and scenes enacted in the convention which would be prejudical to the success of the ticket.

It is regarded as a hopeful sign that no matter how radical their difference of opinion may be as to the wisdom of certain nominations, the leaders are all sincerely desirous that nothing be done which would detract from the chances of Democratic success.

SPECULATION ABOUT PARKER.

It is agreed by Democrats of all shades of opinion who have arrived here up to the present that if Judge Parker will indicate a preference for any of the candidates for Governor the man whom he designates will be nominated. It is learned from both Hill and Tammany sources that up to the present Judge Parker has not made any suggestion with regard to the make-up of the State ticket, and the Hill men are confident that his attitude of non-interference will be maintained until the end.

Tammany men are not so certain that Judge Parker will not declare his choice of candidates. They are inclined to think the gold telegram incident at the St. Louis convention will in a sense be duplicated if it should become evident to Judge Parker, after all the delegates are on the ground, that there is a grave likelihood of Stanchfield being nominated.

Stanchfield unquestionably will have more up-State delegates than any other candidate, and the fact that the New York City organizations are divided will be helpful to him.

Tammany is advocating the nomination of an up-State Democrat, and has come out for George M. Palmer of Schoharie, the minority leader in the Assembly, as the strongest man from up-State who could be selected.

The reason that Charles F. Murphy advances, through his representative here, for thinking that the head of the ticket should be an up-State man, is his conviction that if a New York City man were nominated the farmers would be likely to become apprehensive that the State taxes would be re-apportioned in such a way as to relieve the burden of the taxpayers of New York City and increase that of the people living in the country.

Mr. Murphy says he thinks such an impression might carry even more weight this year because of the fact that the State is about to enter upon large expenditures for the improved canal than it would in ordinary years, although he is of the opinion that it is fear on that score which has really been at the bottom of up-State prejudice against New York candidates for years past.

NOT ENOUGH OF PALMER.

"Mr. Hill's only objection to Mr. Palmer," said a man who is close to Mr. Hill tonight, "is that when it comes to spreading him out over the whole State there is not enough of him. Mr. Palmer is not a man who could make speeches which would appeal to the independent voter."

The reply which Senator Dowling and other advocates of Mr. Palmer have to make to that assertion is, in the first place, to deny that Mr. Palmer could not satisfy all classes of voters, and then to declare that Tammany would stand responsible for the showing which he would make in New York City. Senator Dowling said today that if the fact that Mr. Palmer is a poor man and could not contribute liberally to the expenses of the campaign was an objection to his candidacy, then Murphy would give his pledge to Mr. Hill that if Mr. Palmer were nominated Tammany would see to it that all of the money necessary to cover any legitimate outlay which the State Committee would fix upon would be raised by Tammany in New York City.

The argument which is being made here by Tammany men against the candidacy of Mr. Shepard is just the reverse of that which is being made by Hill men against

CARS CRASH INTO HOUSE.

One Falls Through Parlor Into Cellar of Newark Residence.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 18.—Three freight cars got away from a crew of switchmen at the Nesbit Street crossing of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad at 3 o'clock this morning and two crashed into the three-story brick residence of School Commissioner James Snape at 76 Sheffield Street. The first car, which was loaded with oats, demolished the front of the structure. Then it tumbled through the parlor floor into the cellar.

The second car, loaded with hay and grain, was turned sideways against the front of the house. The third, a huge gondola car laden with coal, landed in the centre of Sheffield Street, its trucks buried in the earth.

The train was being shifted from the elevated siding at Nesbit Street to the main tracks, but the switch leading to the freight yard on Sheffield Street was open and the train dashed down the incline at breakneck speed. A brakeman, who was standing on the front car, realized the situation and barely escaped injury by jumping.

There was a bumper directly opposite the Snape house but so swift did the cars descend the hill that this was demolished, while a six-foot fence surrounding the freight yard was crushed like paper. Across the street the cars dashed, and the front of the Snape residence was crumbled like an eggshell.

Mr. and Mrs. Snape, their two little daughters, and a six-year-old son, were asleep on the second floor. Mr. Snape occupied the front room over the parlor and was thrown twenty feet by the force of the crash, while his wife and daughters, who were in an adjoining room, were thrown out of bed. The boy was in a crib and was not even awakened.

Mr. Snape was badly bruised, but his wife and daughters escaped with only a bad fright.

LONG ISLAND TRAINS CRASH.

Two Firemen Are Killed and Passengers Are Shaken Up.

In the outer yards of the Long Island Railroad in Long Island City yesterday morning two men were killed and many lives endangered by the collision of an incoming and an outgoing train. The accident was apparently due to a switch that failed to work properly. The firemen, sitting on the left of the two engines, were instantly killed, but the engineers escaped injury. The firemen were Benjamin Roach of Locust Valley and Arnold Cordts of Morris Park, L. I.

The east-bound train was piloted by Engineer Charles Thorpe. The west-bound train had at the throttle David Service of 94 West Avenue, Long Island City. Both men were arrested and afterward released on bail furnished by the Long Island Railroad Company.

That none of those in the crowded cars was seriously hurt is ascribed to the fact that the passengers had risen from their seats in the smoking car to leave the train, and, finding the front door locked, had turned to the rear door. The left side of the front part of this car was wrecked, and any one in the first four seats could not have escaped death or serious injury. As it happened, no one in the cars got anything worse than a shaking up.

Coroner Leonard Ruoff is investigating the accident, the second within a short time at the same point. The first occurred a few days ago under almost similar circumstances, but with the trains going more slowly.

It was said yesterday that there is trouble in the switchyard; that, owing to the improvements in the station, the switch tower is not in complete operation; that much of the switching is done by the old hand switches, and that this caused the trouble yesterday. This was denied by the employes. They said that one of the tenders had jumped the track because of a faulty wheel.

David Service, in charge of the engine drawing the incoming train, says he got the signal to go ahead, and was just getting under way when he reached the point of collision. To his surprise the open engine was shunted obliquely across the track, and it was too late to avoid a collision.

SWIMMER SAVED BLIND HORSE.

Hungry Cab Animal Went Overboard—Steam Lighter Helped.

Arthur Powers's blind cab horse walked into the river at the foot of Broad Street yesterday afternoon while his master was at dinner in a near-by restaurant, and it took half a hundred boatmen a full hour to rescue the animal.

Powers thinks that the horse became hungry himself and started out to hunt for something to eat on his own hook. Unfortunately, he was pointed toward the river. Closer and closer to the water's edge he moved. Finally the cab hit a post and the animal walked clear of the shafts and over the bulkhead, hitting the water with a mighty splash, which brought a crowd of longshoremen and boys to see what the trouble was.

The horse swam blindly about, fetching up every now and then against the bulkhead or the steam lighter Defiance, into which he made vain efforts to climb. Attempts made to lassoo him failed. Powers appeared on the scene, and in answer to his appeals for help Arthur Greer, a boatman and a fine swimmer, plunged into the water and undertook the task of putting a rope about the animal's body. For a time he was unable to achieve the task, so wild with fright was the horse.

At last he dived under the horse with his rope, leaving a length trailing behind him, and when he came up on the other side, managed to accomplish his end.

The rope was then attached to the derrick on the lighter and the horse pulled aboard, dripping and utterly exhausted. Powers gave the animal a big drink of whisky, while the crowd was cheering Greer, and it was not long before the steed was strong enough to be led home.

AGED MINISTER STRUCK BY CAR.

The Rev. Abram Mattice of Newark Probably Fatally Hurt.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 18.—The Rev. Abram Mattice, seventy years old, associate pastor of the Clinton Avenue Reformed Church, was probably fatally injured by being struck by a Clinton Avenue car to-day.

A rib and his nose were broken, and it is feared that, owing to his extreme age, his injuries may prove fatal.

Lake Placid has become the centre of the Adirondack Mountains. Sleeping cars leave there by New York Central for New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Buffalo, and Pittsburg.—Adv.

NAVY'S BIG FIGHTERS HERE AFTER HARD WORK

Thousands Go Down Bay to See Admiral Barker's Ships.

ALL IN EXCELLENT TRIM

Race In and Thunderously Salute Tiny French Cruiser—Bring Yarn About a Royal Boxer.

Swinging at anchor off Tompkinsville are five of the finest fighting ships in the United States Navy—the battleships Kearsarge, Missouri, Maine, and Alabama and the fleet cruiser Minneapolis. In a day or two these will be joined by the battleships Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts, and Texas, and the cruisers Columbia and Prairie, making one of the strongest aggregations of naval vessels that ever visited this port.

The vanguard of the fleet which is being assembled to do honors on behalf of the American Navy at the launching of the battleship Connecticut at the navy yard next week, came into port unexpectedly yesterday morning. The vessels, all of which with the exception of the Minneapolis, are of the battleship squadron of the North Atlantic fleet, came direct from three weeks of target practice off Martha's Vineyard. The Minneapolis is attached to the Atlantic Training Squadron, and is the flagship of Rear Admiral Wise.

Thousands journeyed down to Staten Island yesterday afternoon to have a look at the big fighting machines. The squadron, under the command of Rear Admiral Barker, whose flag was flying from the battleship Kearsarge, has been on an extended cruise in European waters this Summer. The ships of his command, however, showed little trace of their long voyage, and their fine appearance was generally commented upon by the crowds that made the trip to see them. The Staten Island ferry boats ran crowded all day with sightseers.

Shortly before 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon the passengers on the ferries witnessed a piece of striking naval ceremony as the vessels paid their respects to the French cruiser Troude from Cape Breton, which passed up the harbor on her way to anchorage in the North River. The little Frenchman, a lone piggy among many giants, saucily filed past the mammoth battleships firing an Admiral's salute of fifteen guns as she went. The next moment, amid the cheers of thousands that thronged the shores and the ferry boats, the tricolor fluttered to the foremast head of the mighty Kearsarge amid the deeper thunder of her heavier guns.

On their way from the target ground to this port the four battleships under Admiral Barker engaged in a spirited four-hour race, in which the Missouri came out winner by some nine hundred yards. The occasion was the semi-annual full power trial prescribed by naval regulations. Though the ships have not been docked for upwards of a year and their bottoms are foul they fell little short of the best speed on their trial trip, or seventeen knots. The speed they attained during the test was about sixteen and one-half knots.

Admiral Barker, in speaking about the trial, said that this was only an other evidence of the preparedness for an emergency at any time of the American Navy. Though the engines of the battleships had not been overhauled for many months they worked without a hitch, though the presure was so high that the paint scaled off the smokestacks of the vessels as a result of the heat during the four-hour test.

As a result of the successful night attacks which have been such a feature of Japanese tactics at Port Arthur in the present war, night shooting was practiced more than ever during the target drill at Marthas Vineyard. The best results ever achieved were obtained on board some of Admiral Barker's ships. On board the Kearsarge two pointers at night practice scored eight hits with as many shots, using the aft starboard 8-inch gun. One pointer on board the Iowa scored seven hits in eight shots, which is quite a remarkable record.

Some novel experiments were made in tracing shells by means of a coat of luminant.

The vessels of Admiral Barker's fleet had a hard time in the storm of Wednesday night and Thursday morning. The Missouri lost a man overboard. Something happened to the anchor of the Missouri, which began to drag, and Lieut. W. P. Scott, with a detachment of bluejackets, went to the forecastle head to heave in the anchor and get the vessel under way and started for shelter. Thirty men were on the forecastle when a mountain sea rolled over it. The men were scattered in all directions. It was found soon after that C. Young, an ordinary seaman, had been washed overboard.

The boy was dressed in oilskins and heavy rubber boots, and was rapidly sinking when Louvri Halling and Alexander Peters, both of them boatswain's mates of the first class, threw themselves overboard and swam to his assistance. Before either of them could reach his side he had disappeared under the waves, and in the heavy sea it was only with the utmost difficulty that the two petty officers were saved.

Many stories of the cruise in European waters were told on the Kearsarge yesterday. On the trip typhoid broke out on the Kearsarge. Lieut. James W. Clement and a seaman named Pendleton died from the disease. Five of the officers and several seamen were stricken but recovered.

The best story brought home by the Kearsarge was one of international portent which was told by a boatswain's mate, who said that his name did not matter. The scene of his deep-sea yarn is laid at the Royal Gun Club in Lisbon. One evening, so the story went, the band of the Kearsarge gave a concert at the club, which has as members the leading naval and military officers of Portugal. The King was there. Several officers of the fleet had been invited to the reception at the club, and a number of petty officers and bluejackets were ordered there to give an exhibition, and some of the tars took their boxing gloves with them.

The King, so the story went, after having witnessed a couple of sparring bouts, grew so enthusiastic that he put on the gloves himself with one of the petty officers, (name withheld.)

"Say, if you write anything about this," the salt continued, "put it down good and strong that the King of Portugal is a dead game sport. The fellow from our ship handed him a few hard ones, and he took his medicine without turning a hair, and said he was going to give the fellow who did the stunt a medal. No, he hasn't sent it yet, but it may come with the next mail."

BREAKS HER RUDDER CHAIN.

The Asbury Park Steered Finally with Tiller Rigged from Saloon Deck.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS, N. J., Sept. 18.—The Central Railroad of New Jersey's steamboat Asbury Park broke her rudder chain on her way to New York this evening. She left here a few minutes after 6 o'clock with about seven hundred passengers on board. She halted part way up the bay, and there was much speculation as to the cause, while the tide swung her about.

There was no panic, as those who investigated found Capt. John L. Braisted sitting coolly in the pilothouse, and the boat was under way before any one knew what the trouble was. The chain had been spliced with a rope. New York was reached twenty minutes late.

While at the dock the chain was spliced again, and the boat left ten minutes late to make her 8 o'clock trip down. Midway across the bay the splicing parted, and an attempt was made to steer with the engines, but this was found uncertain with so little sea room, and off the Southwest Spit the boat was halted and a tiller rigged from the saloon deck. This was manned with eight men to a side, with a quartermaster at the point to repeat the orders of Capt. Braisted. Atlantic Highlands was reached half an hour late.

MINSTREL'S WIFE A SUICIDE.

Mrs. George Thatcher Dead from Gas on Eve of Trip to Join Husband.

Mrs. Mary T. Thatcher, forty-five years old, of the Navahoe Apartments, West One Hundred and Sixth Street, wife of George W. Thatcher, the minstrel, committed suicide last night in the bedroom of their only child, a daughter, in the flat.

Mrs. Thatcher stopped all the cracks and holes with paper and clothing and turned on the gas. Her daughter said a nervous trouble and having to leave the hotel because of renovations being made there, caused her act.

Thatcher is traveling with a road company playing the "County Chairman" and will be in Kansas City to-day. He had written his wife to join him and Mrs. Thatcher was to have started this morning for the West.

Yesterday Miss Thatcher went to Bensonhurst with Joseph K. Parker of Summerville, N. J., to spend the day. Miss Thatcher remembered last night that her mother had been particular about her instructions that they should return by 8:30 o'clock at the latest. When they reached the apartment Miss Thatcher opened the door and was almost overcome by the odor of gas. She screamed, and Parker ran for a physician. Mrs. Thatcher was found dead on the bed in the daughter's bedroom. Miss Thatcher recalled several days ago her mother had said to her:

"If anything happens to me, May, you'll find the key to the safe deposit vault in that bureau."

The vault contains $50,000 left to Mrs. Thatcher only a few months ago by an uncle of Philadelphia.

DALTON HELD UP IN AUTO.

Police Let Him Go on His Way to Bail Out a Chauffeur.

Bicycle Policeman Ennis of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station saw a powerful automobile whirling past the station last night at a rate which he estimated at twenty-five miles an hour. Mounting his motor cycle Ennis started in pursuit. At Claremont Avenue the auto turned down townand the chase continued until Ennis overhauled the machine at One Hundred and Fourteenth Street. He says that his machine will make forty-two miles an hour and that he had to press it to capture the speeders.

The chauffeur said at the station house that he was Emil Rosot, twenty-six years of age, of 203 West Thirty-fourth Street, and that the machine was owned by Ernest Porot, a French tourist staying at the Waldorf-Astoria. Two women and another man, who were in the machine with him, refused to divulge their identity. Rosot was locked up, as he said that he did not care to appeal to his employer to furnish bail for him. The three others went off in the machine to look up a bondsman.

The man who was with Rosot in the automobile immediately drove the machine to the Hotel York, at 487 Fourth Avenue, where he found William Dalton, Commissioner of Water, Gas and Electricity, who was taken aboard. The vehicle then proceeded up the avenue toward the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station at a rapid rate of speed.

At Eighty-sixth Street the speed of the machine attracted the attention of a bicycle policeman, who signaled the driver to stop. He did so, and the policeman said he would have to place him under arrest for violating the speed law.

Commissioner Dalton protested, telling the bluecoat who he was and explaining that he was then on his way to the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station to bail out a friend who was in trouble. The policeman doubted Mr. Dalton's statement that he was a Commissioner, but was finally convinced of his identity when the Commissioner produced his credentials, and permitted the automobile to go on.

TRIED TO WHITTLE DYNAMITE.

Boy Was Thrown Thirty Feet and Maimed—Also Lost an Eye.

By whittling a stick of dynamite Saturday afternoon fifteen-year-old Nundo Arino of 3,491 Arthur Avenue, exploded it among a crowd of Italian boys, blowing out his right eye, injuring his other eye, blowing off three of his fingers, cutting his face and chest, and injuring four other boys. He was taken to the Fordham Hospital. The explosion blew a hole in the ground two feet deep at Hoffman and One Hundred and Eighty-seventh Streets, where the boys were standing.

Arino found the stick, which was several inches long and wrapped in brownish-pink paper. He began to whittle it with a pocketknife and it burst. The boy was blown thirty feet away. Four other boys were knocked down and bruised but not seriously hurt.

It was thought at first by the police that some one had tried to kill the lad, and an investigation was begun by Capt. Deevey's men of the Bronx Park Station. They did not hear of the explosion until yesterday and had no details until they learned that Coroner Berry had been summoned to take the injured boy's ante-mortem statement. They believe a stick of dynamite was carelessly left near the excavations for sewers which are going on at the corner where the accident happened.

NEGRO SLAIN AND ROBBED.

Newly Married Foreman Murdered on 'Coon Hunt for $50.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Sept. 18.—James Sisco, a negro, 53 years old, and a contractor's foreman, was found dead in a ditch near the railroad tracks at Oradell this morning, and Coroner Curry, who has been investigating the case, declares that the man was murdered and robbed. Sisco, who was married only two weeks ago, received a salary of twenty-five dollars a week, and on Saturday night is said to have had two weeks' pay and some other money. He left home with his dog to hunt for raccoons. Early yesterday morning his dog returned alone. Sisco is supposed to have had a companion or two, but who they are is not known.

RESERVES CALLED OUT IN ROME BY CABINET

Two Classes Summoned to Reinforce the Authorities.

PREMIER DEFERS JOURNEY

Situation Throughout the Country Most Serious—Trains Stopped by Crowds.

PARIS, Sept. 19.—The Journal's Genoa correspondent reports that he had traveled to Nice in order to file the following uncensored dispatch:

"The situation throughout Italy is most serious. At Rome the Council of Ministers has called out two classes of reserves in order to reinforce the authorities.

"Premier Giolitti has postponed a journey to Racconigni, which he had intended to make for the purpose of extending his personal congratulations on the birth of the Crown Prince.

"At Porto Novo crowds of people stopped the railway trains, many children lying down before the engines. The troops were powerless.

"One person was killed and several were badly hurt in a collision with soldiers at Genoa, where the strikers prevented the departure of trains.

"Railway tracks were also torn up near Rivarolo.

ROME, Sept. 18.—The Mayor of Turin has telegraphed to Signor Giolitti, President of the Council and Minister of the Interior, in the name of the Socialist Aldermen of Turin, expressing the desire of the workingmen that intervention of troops in peaceful conflicts between capital and labor be avoided.

Signor Giolitti immediately replied by telegraph that for three years, as Minister of the Interior, he had constantly supported the principle of absolute liberty of workingmen to strike and that it was not the duty of the Government to intervene, adding that he intended to follow the same principles while he remains in power. The Minister continued:

"The painful facts are to be regretted by all that in one case soldiers used their arms in self-defense after being attacked and wounded, and in another instance acted without orders from their superiors. Therefore these soldiers have been put at the disposal of the judicial authorities while an inquiry is going on to ascertain the responsibility for the occurrences."

Signor Giolitti's dispatch ended as follows:

"[In administering my office I shall remain always within the law, but shall perform my duty and make the law respected by all. I therefore hope the Socialists will recommend calm behavior and avoid deplorable violence, compromising the cause of liberty."

[In time of peace the Italian Army is composed of twelve corps each, composed of two divisions, with the exception of the Ninth Corps, whose headquarters are at Rome, and which is made up of three divisions. It is the reserves of this, the strongest, corps that apparently have been called out.

Each division of a corps comprises two brigades of infantry of two regiments each, and in general one regiment of cavalry and one regiment of artillery, plus the skeletons of two mobile militia regiments of infantry and one section of artillery. The regular troops of the Ninth Corps number about 20,000.

Liability to service, which is universal, commences at the completion of the twentieth year and continues up to the completion of the thirty-ninth year. The men are enrolled by lot in three classes.

Those of the first class, if drafted to the carabineers, serve five years with the colors and four with "unlimited leave"; if to the cavalry, four years and five years, respectively, and all ten years in the Territorial Militia, with "unlimited leave." If drafted to other corps the service is two or three years with the colors and six with "unlimited leave," four or five years in the mobile militia, and seven years in the territorial militia.

The men of the second class are enrolled for eight years in the standing army with "unlimited leave" and four and seven years in the militias.

Those of the third class serve their nineteen years wholly in the Territorial Militia.]

POLICE SCARE AUTO RACERS.

None Dares to Chug-Chug Faster Than a Steam Roller in Brooklyn.

The automobilists who have been blithely fracturing and splintering the speed law on the Brooklyn boulevards of late and making merry at the futile efforts of bicycle and mounted policemen to overhaul them found the laugh neatly turned on them yesterday when they started out to blister the macadam on Ocean and Eastern Parkways. They found the police prepared to cope with them on equal terms, and there was none among them who dared chug-chug along at a gait much faster than that of a steam roller.

On Saturday Deputy Police Commissioner Farrell hired a racing automobile which he was assured could hold its own with the speediest thing it might meet on the road. It was manned by John Carlson, an expert operator, and two bicycle policemen, selected because of their experience in judging the speed of automobiles. With the operator and the two policemen aboard the "scorcher" catching machine left the Prospect Park Police Station at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon and proceeded down the Ocean Parkway, where it picked up Deputy Commissioner Farrell. The Commissioner took a turn or two up and down the speedway in the machine, keeping a sharp lookout for speed law violators. The motorists who have been having a great time "burning up" the road, however, had heeded the warning they had received and jogged along very meekly and gently.

The policemen, who were in "plain clothes," tried several times to get up a brush with racy looking cars, but to no purpose. The automobiles took the policemen's dust or mud and gritted their teeth, but took no chances. The police have hired the "devil wagon" for a week. They will be out to-day looking for sports who streak it down the road to the race track in "Pink Phantoms," "Red Rockets," and the like. Commissioner Farrell declared last night that his automobile patrol had been a pronounced success.

ARCTIC RELIEF TRIP FAILS.

The Frithjof Unable to Reach the Explorers on the America.

TROMSOE, Norway, Sept. 12.—W. S. Champ, Secretary to William Ziegler, and who was in charge of the relief expedition sent to search for the arctic exploration steamer America, arrived here this afternoon on board the steamer Frithjof. The Frithjof reached latitude 79 degrees 10 seconds north.

Mr. Champ, in a statement given out here, says:

"I regret to report my failure to reach Franz Josef Land. The ice conditions were insurmountable, and the approaching Winter and the heavy frost compelled us to abandon further effort to get north."

FALL RIVER LINER AGROUND.

The Pilgrim Held Fast on Conanicut Point for Seven Hours.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 12.—While coming up the bay this morning in a dense fog the Fall River Line steamer Pilgrim, from New York, grounded on a soft sand bottom at Conanicut Point and remained fast from 5 o'clock until noon, when she floated without assistance and apparently undamaged.

Of the 300 passengers on board, 140 bound for Boston came up to the city on a tug, arriving about one hour after the usual time.

SEAL POACHER'S SHIP SUNK.

Her British Skipper Captured by Russians Off Pribiloff Islands.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 18.—It is announced from Vladivostok that an English seal poacher named Thomson, who took advantage of the war to make the Pribiloff Islands his hunting ground, has been captured and his schooner sunk.

Thomson has been imprisoned at Nikolaievsk.

VOTE MACHINE TELLS TALES.

Would Betray Any Ticket Splitters, Newark Politicians Say.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, Sept. 18.—The voting machine to be used at the coming election gives a tell-tale noise which, according to the politicians, will prevent a secret ballot.

They say that when a straight ticket is voted there is one click in the mechanism that can be heard outside of the curtained inclosure. With a "scratch" there is an additional click, and for another scratch there is a third click, and so on.

In this way, it is said, those in charge of the polls may inform themselves, if they choose, whether the average voter is casting a straight ballot or scratching, and would indicate pretty clearly if any "knifing" of a ticket was taking place.

YARMOUTH TO JOIN HIS WIFE.

Stork's Visit Also Expected—Why the Countess Came to America.

Special to The New York Times.

CRESSON, Penn., Sept. 18.—The Countess of Yarmouth, who has been here since last Aug. 27, is to be joined by the Earl of Yarmouth, within two weeks. The stork's visit is expected early in October. Mrs. Thaw will close her mountain home about the middle of October, and the Countess will come with her to Pittsburg.

The Thaws were anxious to have the child born in the United States, hence the visit of the Countess to this country, which led to the report of her separation from her husband. The Earl and Countess expect to remain in the United States until December, visiting George Lauder Carnegie's Florida home during the Fall.

ASKS $20,000 FOR ASSAULT.

Broker J. W. Hanley of Pittsburg Brings Suit Against William Arrott.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Sept. 18.—J. W. Hanley, a broker, has brought suit against William Arrott, one of the sons of the late James M. Arrott, asking for $20,000 damages for assault. A criminal suit has also been entered before Alderman Frazier on the charge of assault and battery. Arrott furnished bail for court.

These suits are the outcome of the assault committed by Arrott on Hanley on the night of Aug. 22 last, when it was alleged Hanley had insulted a woman on Sixth Street. Both men were arrested and Hanley spent the night behind the bars. Next morning Magistrate Victchestain complimented Arrott.

NEGRO LYNCHED IN GEORGIA.

Taken from Sheriff and Hanged—Had Wounded a White Man.

Special to The New York Times.

ROYSTON, Ga., Sept. 18.—John Ware, a negro, who shot and seriously wounded C. Y. Daniel, son of George Daniel, near Danielsville after a quarrel over a trivial matter, was taken from officers by a mob today between here and Carnesville and lynched.

The negro fled after the shooting, but was captured and was at first taken to Danielsville. Hearing a mob was forming, the Sheriff started with Ware for Carnesville. The mob passed through this place about half an hour behind the Sheriff and his prisoner, and caught up with them a few miles further on.

The negro was placed on a horse and swung up to a tree, and the horse was driven from under him, after which his body was riddled with bullets.

WHITE MURDERER LYNCHED.

Trainhand Kills Conductor and Is Hanged by a Mob.

Special to The New York Times.

ALEXANDRIA, La., Sept. 18.—Conductor Warren Baldwin of the Iron Mountain Railroad was killed early this morning at McGeehe's Station by John Allison, foreman of an extra gang. Allison was caught and lynched by the crew of the train of which Baldwin was the conductor.

A strong effort was made to save the murderer, who pleaded for his life, but the leaders of the mob overpowered the guards and soon strung Allison to a tree.

Baldwin and Allison had a dispute about a ticket on Baldwin's train near South McGeehe's Station. Allison informed Baldwin that he would kill him on sight at McGeehe's Station, but the conductor paid no attention to the threat. While the passengers were alighting from the train Allison shot and almost instantly killed Baldwin.

Allison attempted to escape, and threatened to shoot his pursuers, who finally overpowered him. A mob formed quickly, and before Baldwin had died a rope was placed around the murderer's neck and he was lynched.

PRINCE RADZIWILL TELLS HORRORS OF PORT ARTHUR SIEGE

Bearing Dispatches, Russian Nobleman Eludes the Blockading Fleet.

WHITE FLAG NOW SPURNED

STOESSEL EXPECTS MASSACRE

Three Hundred Women Nurses, However, Decline to Leave.

GARRISON STILL HAS SUPPLIES

Prince Says There Is Plenty of Ammunition and Canned Food—Another Severe Attack Expected.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 18, (Midnight.)—According to Lieut. Prince Radziwill of the Russian Army, who arrived here last night from Port Arthur bearing dispatches from Lieut. Gen. Stoessel to Gen. Kuropatkin, the temper of the belligerents at Port Arthur has reached an absolutely merciless stage.

Prince Radziwell, another Russian officer, two civilians, and one woman, the wife of a Russian staff officer, left Port Arthur the night of Sept. 16 on a junk and arrived here last night.

Prince Radziwill got into Port Arthur a fortnight ago carrying dispatches from Gen. Kuropatkin to Gen. Stoessel. When he landed in this port he did not make himself known under his real name, but the correspondent of The Associated Press accidentally discovered his identity.

The Prince and the officer accompanying him brought out dispatches and mail matter from Port Arthur, weighing in all eighty pounds. They were successful in escaping the vigilance of the Japanese.

The Prince served with the British in the Boer war, and he says that until he became aware of the state of affairs at Port Arthur he had no idea that war could be so horrible.

It was set forth in these dispatches some weeks ago that serious suspicions were entertained by each belligerent that the other was misusing the Red Cross flag. These suspicions have been increased by the commission of various acts by the soldiers of both armies, until now even flags of truce or surrender are not respected by either side.

Stoessel Expects Massacre.

Prince Radziwill declares that the men of both armies are absolutely venomous in their antagonism. Gen. Stoessel has addressed his garrison, saying that the present mood of the Japanese indicates clearly the necessity of resisting them to the last drop of Russian blood, because if the Japanese soldiers enter the fortress it will undoubtedly be impossible for their officers to control them and prevent a massacre.

For this reason Gen. Stoessel is making no objection to civilians leaving Port Arthur. When, however, the 300 women who are in Port Arthur engaged in hospital work were advised to leave, they replied that they would rather face the possibility of massacre than desert their posts.

Japanese Dead Unburied.

In consequence of the fact that flags of truce are ignored, numbers of Japanese dead who have been lying on the slopes of the hills of the northeast defenses for weeks past are still unburied, and the stench in Port Arthur from decomposing bodies, when the wind is in the right direction, is almost unendurable. The Russian soldiers, who in some cases are posted only fifty paces from heaps of decaying dead, have constantly to wear over their noses handkerchiefs soaked in camphor, as otherwise they would be unable to remain at their posts.

In the course of the assaults which occurred the four last days of August, two companies of Japanese soldiers, according to Prince Radziwill, found themselves at the mercy of the Russians and hoisted a white flag. To this, however, the Russians paid no attention, and continued to volley rapidly into the helpless ranks of the enemy.

In the meantime Japanese troops in the rear of the companies that had raised the white flag saw what their comrades had done, and expressed their disapproval of the surrender by firing into their rear.

As a result of this fire from friend and foe 600 men were annihilated. The dead fell among the decomposing bodies of those killed in previous assaults.

For days afterward the wounded men in this area raised fluttering handkerchiefs in their hands as pleas for help, but the Russians were afraid to venture out to give succor. Within a week the last arm had made its last unregarded prayer for help, and the shambles were a quiet but ghastly field of horror.

Among the heaps of dead the Prince saw two soldiers, one a Russian and the other a Japanese, lying locked in a death embrace. The teeth of the Japanese were sunk in the Russian's throat, while the Russian had forced two of his fingers into the eye sockets of his antagonist.

The Prince cited this as merely an incident denoting the ferocity of the conflict at Port Arthur.

Prince Radziwill said it was reported that Gen. Nogi had been killed. Persistent Chinese rumors have been received here lately to the effect that a successor to Gen. Nogi has arrived at Dalny, but this is denied by local Japanese.

Denies Shortage of Ammunition.

Continuing, the Prince said:

"The stories in circulation concerning the shortage of ammunition and provisions at Port Arthur are not true. There is an abundance of ammunition for both large and small arms, and plenty of preserved food. The use of Chinese shells was merely a saving measure.

"I left Gen. Stoessel in the best of spirits. He is encouraged by the heroic example set by the wounded men, of whom five thousand out of the original eight thousand in the hospitals have returned to the front.

"There has been no fighting since Sept. 1 with the exception of artillery and outpost exchanges.

"The Japanese shells have done great damage to the hospital and other buildings in Port Arthur, but the loss of life from these bombardments has been very slight.

"Mme. Stoessel, wife of the General, is at the head of the Red Cross work in Port Arthur. She is in constant attendance at the hospitals, and cares tenderly for wounded men. In addition to this exhausting work she finds time to give succor to orphans and widows and to superintend the making of bandages. The soldiers consider her their guardian angel.

Garrison Trusts Stoessel.

"The garrison is maintaining a strong and devoted martial spirit and has great confidence in Gen. Stoessel, who is cheered by the men when he rides along the lines.

"The newspaper Novy Krai has been suppressed for one month for having published matter considered to be detrimental to Russian interests.

"Individual acts of heroism during the fighting have been numerous, and the tragic death of Lieut. Petroff was for long an absorbing topic of conversation. Petroff became surrounded by some Japanese soldiers, whom he fought successfully till his sword broke. He then used his fists upon the Japanese, but their bayonets quickly put an end to his resistance. Before his sword broke Petroff succeeded in incapacitating eight of his antagonists, but he was wounded all over his body.

Troops Ordered to Die.

"One company of Russian troops were occupying a perilous outpost, and when they found their position to be untenable they sent the following message to Gen. Stoessel:

"'We are unable to hold this position.'

"'But you can die,' he said in reply, and so they did.

"The fact that the Japanese have on several occasions used explosive bullets has been verified by Gen. Stoessel. He gives an instance which occurred at Taku-Shan, when two men of the Sixteenth Regiment were killed by such bullets, their bodies being blown to pieces.

"On Sept. 14 the bodies of 2,600 Japanese soldiers were discovered between Fort No. 2 and Fort No. 3. The stench from the decomposed bodies attracted investigation. The Russian authorities admit that they are not able to explain what engagement resulted in this slaughter."

Another Great Attack Expected.

Local students of the military situation at Port Arthur, basing their deductions upon recent developments there, are of the opinion that another grand attack is either occurring at the present time or is imminent.

This opinion is based on the very heavy bombardment of the Russian stronghold on Sept. 16, such a bombardment forming the usual prelude to an attack; on the arrival here of important messengers from Port Arthur at a time when the running of the blockade is extremely perilous; on a recent authoritative statement that the Japanese siege works are completed, and on reports from Japanese sources that at Dalny an attack on Port Arthur was expected in a few days. These reports were received last week.

In addition there is the common knowledge that the Japanese realize that continued inactivity on their part increases the resisting power of the Russian garrison, and their consequent desire to make such a period of inactivity as brief as possible.

Blockading Vessels Alert.

Chinese, Russians, and Japanese here all agree that the Japanese vessels blockading Port Arthur are paying particular attention to junks, which for months past have been trying to smuggle supplies into the fortress. When they are caught the crews are roughly treated. The junks generally are sunk and the men on board taken to Dalny. By mistake the Japanese sank a junk which was carrying delicacies to Gen. Nogi, the Japanese commander, from an admirer, but a part of the cargo was recovered.

The Japanese are employing severe measures in this respect with the idea of intimidating blockade runners.

Russian civilians who have arrived here from Port Arthur say that canned corn beef is plentiful there and that the fresh meat supply consists of twelve horses slaughtered daily.

Port Arthur Band Still Plays.

Life in the town when no bombardment is going on proceeds much as it did in time of peace. Church services are held as usual in the dismantled church, and the band follows the former custom of playing in public twice a week.

All the Russians agree that the Japanese do not occupy any fort on the inner line of defenses. The forts which were damaged have been repaired so that they are almost as good as new, during the comparative quiet of the last eighteen days. The Russians do not believe that the Japanese will succeed in taking the fortress.

REPORTED ATTACK ON MUKDEN.

Japanese Said to be Shelling City Preparatory to General Advance.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 18.—An official dispatch, dated yesterday, shows that the Japanese van was half way between Liao-Yang and Mukden, while a screen of Russian cavalry was posted five miles further north, on a line ten miles long, west of the railway.

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Monday, Sept. 19.—It is asserted in a dispatch from Tokio to The Daily Express that the Japanese are vigorously shelling the Russian positions at Mukden, preparatory to a general advance, and are endeavoring, by a wide turning movement, to cut off Gen. Kuropatkin's retreat.

The Japanese armies, the dispatch adds, are disposed in the same relative positions as in the fighting before Liao-Yang.

MUKDEN, Sept. 18.—The armies having recovered from the effects of the recent fighting before Liao-Yang, an early development of the situation may be expected.

A mysterious movement eastward is on foot on the part of bands of young Chinese suitable for military service.

All the leading Chinese who have aided the Russians are leaving Mukden.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, Sept. 19, (2 A. M.)—Gen. Sakharoff reports to the General Staff, under date of Sept. 17:

"The Manchurian Army was nowhere engaged on Sept. 16 or 17.

"The arrival of considerable reinforcements is noticeable at the advance posts along the whole of the enemy's front, and especially near the village of Bianiupuza and east of the railway toward the Yen-Tai mines."

The reports that Gen. Kuroki is pushing on northeast of Mukden are not borne out by official telegrams received here. A decisive advance in the direction of Mukden is not expected for some days.

Meanwhile the indications increase that the Japanese will meet with resistance. The Russian forces at Mukden undoubtedly are very large, and every day's delay enables the Commander in Chief to improve his defenses. A private telegram from Mukden reports the arrival there of an immense train filled with convalescents returning to duty. This may be regarded as good evidence of a large concentration of troops at Mukden.

The same correspondent, describing scenes at Tie Pass, notes extraordinary animation there. The great concourse of visitors there and the fact that theatrical performances and open air concerts are of daily occurrence hardly indicate that the town is expecting an immediate attack.

It is announced from Mukden that both the Russian and the Japanese Generals have promised to respect the tombs and palace there.

CROSSED AMID HAIL OF LEAD.

Details of the Flanking Operation by Kuroki's Army.

LONDON, Sept. 19.—The Times's correspondent with Gen. Kuroki, in a dispatch dated Liao-Yang, Sept. 7, and at the conclusion of a long account of the battle there, says:

"Gen. Kuroki's flank movement failed owing to the tactics of Gen. Kuropatkin, who trusted that half of his army would suffice to hold the Japanese south of the Tai-Tse River. His forces were so strongly posted and he possessed such a secure line of retreat that the soundness of the course adopted must appeal to tacticians. In any case it upset the calculations of the Japanese, who counted upon comparatively feeble resistance to their flanking movement.

"After the Russian retirement to the east bank of the river their position presented a scene of carnage unparalleled in European warfare."

An earlier dispatch, describing the passage of the Tan River on Aug. 28, says:

"At 1 o'clock the attacking forces set in motion four columns, which crossed the bed of the river, entering the water in a storm of long-range rifle fire. The men, in extended order, dashed into the water and soon were immersed to their waists and afterward to their shoulders, holding their rifles aloft.

"Some were swept off their feet by the rapid current. Few were wounded, as fortunately the Russian guns did not command the crossing. In ten minutes three of the columns were across, but the fourth, attempting to cross at an unfordable point, had to return and seek a better place.

"During their half-hour exposure I saw no casualties, though the water and sand around the Japanese were churned by the rain of bullets.

"It is impossible to refrain from remarking on the pusillanimous flight of the Russians from the advanced trenches. I heard a foreign attaché say it made him ashamed for white men."

JAPAN GOT MUCH BOOTY.

Marquis Oyama Sends a List of Stores Captured at Liao-Yang.

TOKIO, Sept. 18.—Field Marshal Oyama, Commander in Chief of the Japanese forces in the field, telegraphed this morning that Gen. Oku had reported having captured thirteen prisoners at the battle of Liao-Yang. He also gave a detailed list of the Russian stores which Gen. Oku captured, as follows:

Thirty horses, 2,228 rifles, 127 ammunition wagons, 5,802 rounds of artillery, 659,930 small-arm cartridges, great quantities of timber, flour, rice, forage, engineering implements, clothing, and accoutrements.

Later Marquis Oyama reported that the armies under Gens. Kuroki and Nodzu made no prisoners in the fighting before Liao-Yang. Gen. Kuroki captured forty horses, 800 rifles, 300 rounds of artillery ammunition, 600,000 rounds of rifle ammunition, telegraph apparatus, and various miscellaneous implements.

Gen. Nodzu captured 490 rifles, 1,164 rounds of artillery ammunition, 37,880 rounds of rifle ammunition, three heliographs, telephones, tools, and large quantities of foodstuffs and timber.

Gen. Oku captured sufficient timber to construct railroad depots.

WAR IS A BUSINESS WITH JAPAN'S ARMY

Battles Calmly Managed by Telegraph and Telephone.

QUIET WORK OF MACHINERY

Between Fights Kuroki's Army Fishes —Tea, Fans, Cigarettes, and Tubs Its Indulgences.

TIEN-SHI-TIEN, Manchuria, Aug. 1.—Different theories of generalship followed by the Russian and Japanese account for the great number of casualties among the Russian officers, particularly their Generals, while no Japanese General has been hit.

The Generals of the Japanese are Directors, while the Russians cling to the old Skobeloff tradition of a commander at the head of his men leading the fighting.

From the Japanese lines we can see the white-coated Russian officers riding conspicuously before their troops, while from the Russian side it must be hard to discover the Japanese officers because their uniforms are so like the ones of the ranks, and because Gen. Kuroki and the lesser Generals usually are somewhere behind the fighting line managing their battles by telegraph and telephone.

Electricity has never played so important a part in warfare before as it does with the Japanese. Every General of brigade in the field is, like a modern Ambassador, "at the end of a wire," which his divisional commander controls, and the Generals of divisions are in touch by telegraph or telephone with the corps commanders.

The engineers run wires of the columns with marvelous rapidity. Firing is heard somewhere at the front. A detachment of engineers emerges from headquarters, pack ponies carrying bundles of light bamboo poles, while coolies and carts follow them with coils of slender copper wire. The poles, which have pointed ends, are quickly planted, the wire spreads out as fast as men can uncoil it, and a field telephone is at work.

No evidences have been seen as the army advanced into the enemy's country that the Russians employ the telegraph extensively. There are no traces of wire or poles except the old Chinese line from An-Tung to Peking.

Generals Hide Their Glory.

Russian generalship is more spectacular and perhaps inspires the soldiers with greater courage but the Japanese is more businesslike.

The Generals do not play to the galleries at all. The censorship which they enforce tends to deprive them of their just dues in reputation. Often correspondents are forbidden to mention the names of the leaders in daring and important fights because the names might give the enemy a clue to the identity and therefore to the strength and the characteristics of the organizations opposing them.

General Okzawa gathered his troops in the fog of early morning on July 4 and prevented the Russians from seizing the Motien-Ling, he turned Kellar's almost successful attack of July 17 into a disaster and his soldiers from the rocks about the Yu-Shu Ling shot down a thousand Russians without any compensating damage to themselves.

He is a strategist and a fighter. In England or America he would be a popular hero, but the newspapers which come to the camp fail to mention him. How unpopular a censorship that includes exploitation of Generals would be with certain other armies is appreciated by correspondents who have accompanied those armies.

Quiet Kuroki and His Quiet Army.

General Kuroki is a quiet and unassuming gentleman, rather of the Moltke type than the theatrical General who rides about exhorting and cursing his men. His type is apparently the prevailing one in the Japanese service. Sometimes it appears that he has worked out his plans of battle so perfectly before the event that he can sit down confident of its fulfillment, and takes little further interest in the proceedings.

During the critical hours of July 31, when his infantry was advancing across the valley to charge the Russian trenchments on the heights, he sat in the courtyard of a Chinese temple chatting casually with members of his staff. A Court painter could have made no battle picture there.

Gen. Kuroki's force partakes of his character. It might be described as the silent army. The Russians have their regimental bands, which play at sunset hours and on the march, and during battle their soldiers advance to the sound of the drum. They chant their evening hymn and the soup kettles, and sometimes the roar of a patriotic chorus rolls through the hills from the Russian campfire to the ears of Japanese pickets.

But in this campaign, although the infantry carry bugles by whose notes they march in peace times, I have never heard the sound of a trumpet near the front. No war songs are sung. The band of the Imperial Guard has been with headquarters occasionally, and the magnificent service in memory of the dead at Feng-Wang-Cheng was concluded with a ringing benediction of trumpets.

But music has no part in the soldiers' daily life. Their enthusiasm is displayed to the ear only in moments of victory by that weird and stirring cheer "Banzai" with which they charge.

Cigarettes, Fans, Tea, and Tubs.

Nor is this a convivial army. The few camp followers whose presence near the front is sanctioned sell cigarettes, fans, handkerchiefs, soap, tooth brushes, writing paper, and envelopes. The nearest shop where a bottle of saki or beer can be bought is at Feng-Wang-Cheng, fifty miles to the rear, and that means that the officers get very little and the soldiers none.

Tea, cigarettes, and fans are the soldiers' luxuries; fishing, writing letters, and reading newspapers their amusements. The field post carries an enormous amount of mail every day between Antung and the front. Riding about the camps one always sees hundreds of soldiers sitting cross-legged under the trees painting artistic epistles to relatives with brushes on rolls of thin paper.

The greatest indulgence of the officers is the big iron kettles, carried in netting, two on a pony, which are used for heating water for hot baths as well as to cook the company mess of rice. A few squares of straw matting to construct a bathhouse, a fire, and an immense stone jar for a tub spell comfort.

Fans for soldiers seem an anomaly, particularly for soldiers so far removed from suspicion of effeminacy as the Japanese. Yesterday a battalion of infantry toiled past, perspiring through the sandy cornfields under an almost tropical sun, and every man was plying a paper disk.

The fans and tea kettles dangling from saddles and from soldiers' packs have surprised some of the conservative European attachés. But they are the concessions Japan's Europeanized army makes to old Japan, and since they contribute to the content of the soldiers out of all proportion to their weight, there seems no valid argument against them.

All Go Fishing Between Battles.

Another souvenir of home life which the soldiers have brought into Manchuria is a fishing line in every knapsack. From the commanding General, Kuroki, down to the humblest coolie, who trots after his master's horse, they are disciples of the rod.

Seeing the mild-eyed boys sitting for long hours by the banks of mountain streams waiting for a three-inch minnow to bite at an angle worm, it is hard to realize them as the same fighting men who storm rocky embankments under showers of shrapnel and bring back the huge Cossacks of awesome reputation as docile captives.

No description of the Japanese soldier would be just that failed to mention his courtesy and his honesty. Living in the midst of the army, displaying many luxuries which must be tempting to soldiers kept on a most economical basis, the correspondents leave their effects about the camp without fear for the safety of them. Nothing is stolen, not even tobacco or food. The same thing could hardly be said of other soldiers.

Complete Japanese Preparation.

The lessons of the campaign are constantly before the eyes of the military observers with this army. They have made no revolutionary discoveries thus far. Indeed, the chief lesson has been the overshadowing importance of that complete preparation which has made every cog of every wheel of the great machine slide quietly in its groove at the appointed minute, and the attention to details, for lack of which the servants of the Czar are wasting so much brave food for powder.

The work of the Russian artillery early on July 31 commanded the highest praise from every one. It was in strong contrast to the showing made at the Yalu, and was in every respect a credit to that arm of the Russian service.

Their gun positions were selected by engineers who appreciated the possibilities of the country as they had failed to do at the Yalu. The contour of the hills which push forward into the valley on both sides of Taowan afforded a line of defense, which, roughly speaking, extended nearly in a semi-circle.

Most of the Russian guns looked down into the valley and also commanded the lower ranges of the hills beyond it, where the seven Japanese batteries must find cover, while they presented to the enemy only skyline targets difficult to gauge. Consequently they gave the Japanese artillery a hard day of it, and compelled the batteries with the Japanese left division attempting to flank the Russian right to shift their ground repeatedly to avoid the fierce and accurate fire poured upon them wherever they opened.

Moreover, the bravery of the Russian gunners was beyond all praise. On riding over the battleground afterward it was seen that, although the Japanese shells had hardly been able to reach those Russian guns on the high peak behind Taowan, the other batteries had endured a perfect hailstorm of shrapnel which were under foot everywhere, while common shell had torn gaps over every few feet of ground about the guns.

Many statements have appeared in European newspapers about the superiority of Japanese guns, but their work so far has illustrated the Western aphorism that "success is not in holding a good hand, but in playing a poor hand well." It is conceded by the experts who have seen their work in the field that the Russian guns are better than the Japanese, and that the ratio to insure equality should be about six Japanese guns against four Russian.

But the showing made by the Russian infantry leaves much to be explained. If their trenches had been held by marksmen like the Boers there would have been no question of the Japanese reaching them without heavy loss of life, if at all. They were dug in splendid positions on the sides and the summits of hills, and the approaches across the valley and up the hillsides had little cover except patches of corn. Yet the Russian defense was either remarkably weak or only a demonstration, because the Japanese of the central division hit by their fire numbered only a score or two.

Moreover, there were the same blunders in management that marked the Yalu. The infantry in front of the Japanese left fought well and manœuvred skillfully, but late on the night of the battle two Russian battalions appeared north of Taowan in front of the Japanese right flank and then retired without opening fire, and the purpose of their movement remains a mystery.

At Henling, where a thousand were cut to pieces, and where, as at Hamatan, they had a brass band that left its instruments in the field, they gave one of the finest exhibitions of futile bravery witnessed during the war. They were marching in close column of fours under a destructive fire, and although men were cut down by squads they never broke ranks nor retreated.

The uselessness of the sacrifice was as eloquent as its courage, and the credit for the former belonged to the officers.

ALIENS' RIGHTS IN JAPAN.

Strong Political Movement in Favor of Removing Restrictions.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 18.—There is evidence of a strong political movement in Japan in favor of the abolition of all restrictions on the tenure of real estate by aliens and of remodeling the law of mortgage for the purpose of removing obstacles to the introduction of foreign capital.

Leading Japanese journals condemn the official attitude of extreme reserve toward foreign war correspondents as showing an unwise indifference to factors which largely influence public opinion.

At the same time they express the confident hope that no errors in the Japanese manner of handling this difficult problem will suffice to alienate Anglo-Saxon sympathy for Japan in her great struggle against the spread of military despotism in the Far East.

The papers are confident that the correspondents themselves, while freely ventilating legitimate grievances, will preserve the tone of impartiality which has hitherto distinguished their writings and will not allow personal disappointment to warp their professional judgment.

ASTOR PLACE AND FOURTH AVENUE

MRS. D. A. DODGE'S FLIGHT.

Wife Well Guarded Till She Reached Her Mother's Baltimore Home.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 18.—Guarded by New York police from the time she gave her husband, Don A. Dodge, stockbroker, the slip in a Fourteenth Street department store yesterday, until she was given into the care of a sleeping car company detective at Jersey City, who stood outside her stateroom throughout the journey over the Baltimore and Ohio to this city, and then escorted to her mother's home by two city detectives, Mrs. Dodge lies ill in bed at 114 North Poppleton Street.

Late last evening Chief of Detectives Humphrey received the following dispatch, dated Jersey City:

Have man meet Train 523, due 10:55, Mount Royal Station. I fear trouble.

MISS FUETSCH.

Detectives Bradley and Armstrong were detailed to meet the woman. They found her in a stateroom in a sleeping car and before the door a company officer.

Detective Bradley immediately recognized "Miss Fuetsch" as Mrs. Don A. Dodge. They made a hurried trip through the station and were driven to her mother's house in a closed carriage. Here Mrs. Dodge told the following story:

"Two days ago I declared I would leave my husband and return to my home. I found no opportunity to escape until yesterday, because of the watch he kept over my movements every moment.

"Yesterday I induced him to go shopping with me. In a Fourteenth Street store he left me for a moment, and I darted out a side door.

"I went to a police station, just which one I cannot say, and asked for protection. Two officers escorted me to Jersey City, where I took the train.

"The officers placed me in charge of a detective, and fearing that Mr. Dodge might in some way reach Baltimore ahead of me, I wired the police here."

Don A. Dodge married Miss Marie McCoy, stepdaughter of Lieut. Richard G. Kettlewell.

The Dodges went to New York. About a year ago Mrs. Dodge caused her husband's arrest on the charge of abandonment as he came down the gangplank of the French liner Savoie. At Police Headquarters in New York the couple were induced to have a private room talk over the affair, and a reconciliation followed.

DOWIE IN A NEW ROLE.

He Wears Robes and Mitre and Calls Himself First Apostle.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 18.—Wearing a rich robe and a mitre modeled after those of an ancient high priest, John Alexander Dowie today proclaimed himself First Apostle of the Christian Catholic Church. He ceremoniously entered the Tabernacle in Zion City, where 7,000 people had assembled, and in his sermon, after quoting Scripture in support of his claim to the title of First Apostle, he said:

"I did not create the office. It was created by the Lord. I didn't create it any more than I designed these robes. They are made after the pattern given by God to Moses when the high priesthood was established.

"The office of First Apostle is perpetual. It should have been continued. My assumption of the First Apostleship is the final step in the organization of the Church as planned by Jesus Christ."

Dowie then asked:

"Members of the Restoration Host, do you accept me, John Alexander, as the First Apostle of our Lord Jesus Christ and the Christian Catholic Church?"

"Yes," came the answer from the assembled multitude.

DISROBED INFANTS IN STREET.

Mother Said They Were Going to Heaven—She Went to Bellevue.

Mrs. Helena Lehman left her home, 894 East One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street, last night, leading her three-year-old boy Emil, and carrying her baby boy Anthony in her arms. At the corner of Alexander Avenue she stopped, and, pulling a whisk broom from her pocket, dusted off the sidewalk for a space of several square feet. She then proceeded, with the utmost deliberation, to disrobe the children.

When the mother had completed this task she laid the little ones side by side within the space on the sidewalk which had been swept by her whisk broom and, turning to the crowd which had gathered, announced that the children were going to heaven.

Policeman Ryan, attracted by the gathering, soon discovered that the woman was out of her senses, and attempted to arrest her. She attacked him with the whisk broom, and was getting all the best of the argument when Policeman Thompson came to his assistance. Together they subdued her, and took her and her children to the Alexander Avenue Station.

Mr. Lehman was notified, and took the children home. His wife, who, he said, was suffering from religious mania, was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

JOKER PUT UNDER ARREST.

Wrote Such a Funny Letter—Wound Up in Cell.

Louis Gordon of 126 Monroe Street, who keeps a soda water stand in the W. H. Seward Park, rushed to the Madison Street police last night with a letter he had received "threatening his life" if he did not leave $500 "in a chink in an oak tree in W. H. Seward Park." The letter was from David Oppenheim, seventeen years old, of 69 Market Street. Gordon said he knew Oppenheim, but did not think the man an enemy. The police at once sent out Detective Sergeant Sugden and Detective Johnson, and Oppenheim was arrested.

"Yes, I sent the letter," he admitted.

"What! You threatened that man's life if he didn't give you $500?" said the Sergeant.

"Yes. In an oak tree in the park. There's no oak tree there. Don't you see? It's a joke. Ha! ha! ha!"

"By ginger, I don't see anything to laugh at," said Gordon.

"Lock him up," said the Sergeant, and the astonished Oppenheim was put in a cell on a charge of sending a threatening letter.

Henry Kaufman, a tailor of 322 Rivington Street, who was with Oppenheim when he was arrested, was also taken to the station house, the police thinking he might have had something to do with the letter. He was in a stew until Oppenheim confessed, when the police released Kaufman.

PASSED WRECKED SCHOONER.

Black Prince Goes Near the Abandoned Nathan Lawrence.

The steamship Black Prince, from Mobile, which arrived yesterday, reported another schooner worsted by the cyclone of last Thursday. She was the Nathan Lawrence, bound from Georgetown, S. C., for New York. The steamship passed her on Sept. 15 off Charleston.

The Lawrence's mizzenmast was gone, and her maintopmast had been carried away. The fore end and starboard side of her after house and the fore end of her forward deckhouse were smashed in. She was down by the head and seas were breaking over her continually. The Black Prince steamed in close, but saw no sign of life aboard.

The schooner Emily F. Northam, which was reported before abandoned and burning at sea, was again reported yesterday by the Apache, in from Jacksonville. The Northam when last seen was still smoldering, a black derelict, drifting in the path of coastwise ships and a danger to navigation.

BEE STING'S SERIOUS EFFECTS.

Man Who Bit a Peach with the Insect in It May Die.

Special to The New York Times.

YORK, Penn., Sept. 18.—Herman H. Flick, Jr., of Hampstead, Adams County, went into an orchard near his home yesterday, plucked a peach from a tree, and proceeded to take a liberal bite of it. He did not observe that there was a small hole in the peach, and that there was a bee hidden in this hole.

The bee soon made its presence felt by stinging Flick on the inside of the mouth near the root of the tongue. The tongue and mouth are so badly swollen as to threaten the life of the young man by suffocation.

Fifteen minutes after being stung he lapsed into a stupor and his entire body became swollen and lumps appeared resembling water blisters. His throat has become so affected that he cannot talk, and the jaws have become rigid. There is grave doubt as to his recovery.

POLICE AT HARRISON TOMB.

Motive for the Desecration Has Not Been Established.

NEW ROCHELLE, Sept. 18.—The police to-day made a careful examination of the Harrison tomb, on Harrison Island, which was found broken open and despoiled on Saturday. It was found that the compartment containing the body of David Harrison, Jr., had not been opened, despite reports that it had, but that containing the remains of his father had been entered. Entrance to the tomb itself was easy, according to those who had visited the island within a year. The marble slab which closed the entrance had been cracked for a long time, and some time ago one section of it slipped out of place.

The thieves are supported to have searched for jewelry or the silver coffin trimmings. Whether there was anything of value for them to take no one here professes to know. The police are guarding the tomb.

Danger Signal, but No Vessel.

ATLANTIC CITY, Sept. 18.—What appeared to be distress signals were seen far out at sea this evening, and the life savers from the Little Egg Harbor station put off. The signals ceased and the life savers could find no vessel in distress. They think the trouble on the vessel was remedied and that she proceeded.

DOG GUARDS MASTER'S BODY.

James S. Nesbet Perishes from Hunger and Exposure in Idaho.

Special to The New York Times.

AVON, Idaho, Sept. 18.—Guarded by his faithful dog, the body of James S. Nesbet, veteran of the civil war, and formerly a well-known Virginia politician, was found in the mountains east of here this morning after a week's search by relatives and scores of friends.

The aged man, in a fit of dementia, had wandered from his home accompanied by the dog, and had perished from hunger and exposure. The dog had stayed constantly with the body and protected it from harm, even fighting the flies away as best it could.

Mr. Nesbet was seventy-two years old. He crossed the plains during the California gold excitement, and was the only one of his party who escaped death from the hands of hostile Indians. When the civil war broke out he returned to Pennsylvania and served during the war, attaining the rank of Captain. After the war he went to Virginia, and became prominent as a public man. He was defeated for United States Senator by a narrow majority.

BRIDEGROOM-TO-BE HURT.

Distributed Wedding Invitations—Then Lost Foot Under Car.

Frank Graneta, thirty years old, of 341 West Forty-ninth Street, left home yesterday morning to distribute invitations for his wedding, which was set for next Sunday. The task finished, he boarded an open car on Second Avenue, at One Hundred and Seventh Street.

The car stopped and he climbed out under the guard rail. He failed to land safely and fell under a car bound in the opposite direction. Both his feet were badly crushed. He was taken to the J. Hood Wright Hospital, where his left foot was amputated.

BIG ELECTRIC AND GAS PLANT.

To Supply Newark, Jersey City, and Several Neighboring Towns.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 18.—For more than a year three hundred men have been engaged in the construction of what will be one of the largest gas and electric plants in the United States on the Hackensack meadows. It will furnish light, heat, and power to Newark, Jersey City, and many other near-by towns.

No public mention has been made of the work which, as a whole, will constitute one of the biggest and most costly improvements ever made in this State. The probable cost has not been made known, but it will reach $1,000,000 at least.

Auto Fells Aged Woman in Bowery.

While crossing the Bowery, near Rivington Street, last night, Mrs. Annie Goldman, who is eighty-five years old, and lives at 307 Spring Street, was knocked down and seriously injured by a large automobile, guided by Charles Petersen of 753 Seventh Avenue, and in which three other persons were riding. She received a severe scalp wound and a fracture of the right arm and was removed to St. Vincent's Hospital. Petersen was arrested and bailed out later. He said the woman got confused and turned after she had crossed in front of the machine.

Representative Government And American Trade

The great inspiration to the growth of American retailing is the spirit of democracy that pervades it. Civilization is expansion. Liberty is breadth—growth. All the power of knowledge and beauty are developed under the influence of free institutions. If they are not, republican government is a failure.

Retail trade is the finest flower of American commerce, and within it appear the same elements of expansion, intelligence, liberty and beauty that mark our national social progress.

It therefore follows that retail trade is both a product and a pillar of American institutions.

The historic place of WANAMAKER retailing in American commercial progress is too thoroughly admitted to require argument.

This fact contains not the least of our claims upon public attention. The old Stewart block holds a business that is both a popular attraction and a scientific study. But the store exists for Everybody with its universal capacities of interest.

Philosophers and folks alike find it a joy.

Making Clothes To Order For Particular Men

The man who goes to a custom tailor is right in being particular—we expect him to be. The whole custom tailoring business exists simply to cater to the man of special wishes, and the man who cannot be fitted in ready-made.

We never try to give a man something he does not want; we study to get his own ideas incorporated into the clothing that we make for him, and we keep on working until we get it exactly as he wants it.

We have a remarkably broad collection of the choicest fabrics brought out for the Winter season. We have expert tailors to handle every part of the work from shoulders to buttonholes. The clothing we make suits men right down to the ground.

We are high-class in everything but the price; and the fair price at which very particular work is done, is the reason why the man who is particular about his apparel comes to WANAMAKER'S to have his clothes made.

You can get clothes made just as well elsewhere, of course, but you will have to pay very much more for them to any tailor who does equal work.

Business Sack Suits, of tweeds, cheviots and cassimeres, made to order, at $20, $25 and $30.

English Walking Suits, of neat brown and gray cheviots and worsteds, made to order, at $27.50, $32.50 and $37.50.

A special line of Full-weight Overcoats, of covert cloth, Oxford mixtures and cheviots, silk-lined and faced to edge, or self-faced, made to order, at $30.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

"Regulation" SAILOR SUITS for Boys

"Regulation" means a lot to a boy who has a little sentiment about him; he likes to feel that he is wearing the same kind of clothes as Uncle Sam's sailors. Then the boy's parents appreciate the swing and character that the "Regulation" style lends to his appearance.

This particular lot of suits is made from the same material as the custom tailored suits—a splendid quality of hard-twisted blue serge, that is absolutely fast in color, and can scarcely be worn out in the hardest service.

They are in sizes for five to twelve years. Each suit is finished with lanyard and whistle; trimmed with chevron on sleeve.

The price is $7.50 a suit.

Blue Serge Reefers, to go with the "Regulation" Suits, in sizes from four to twelve years, with chevron on sleeve, at $6.50.

Second floor, Ninth street.

A Very Beautiful Model In Lillian Corsets

This gracefully shaped Lillian model is made by the leading corsetier of France. It is made for medium or long-waisted figures, and when properly fitted is a delight to the wearer, as well as to her dressmaker.

The model is made of plain white and colored materials: of superb construction; conforms beautifully to the figure; not too long over the hips, but giving the full length to the straight front; with supporters attached.

This is a model that we have great satisfaction in fitting—and women in wearing.

The price is $5.50.

Second floor, Tenth street.

Imported Union Suits For Women

Switzerland is the birthplace of ribbed underwear, and the garments that the Swiss manufacturers have sent us have improved with each year, and we have worked with them in getting the style and fit to perfectly suit American women.
